FREE PRESS, FREE SCREEN

WITH what Lord Chief Justice Hewart of Great Britain has described of our times as "The New Despotism," skirmishing about the Fourth Estate in Washington, it is of special interest to the motion picture industry to discover that the newspaper industry is finding for itself problems, both external and internal, paralleling if not identical with those of the screen.

A deal of this came to light last week in the meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in New York, where speakers saw menace in the recent moves of the Federal Communications Commission, and menace in some conduct of some publishers.

FOR the moment at least the Federal Communications Commission has been driven back into the bushes. But we are not to forget that even now stands before the Administration a proposal for a Motion Picture Commission, with all of the implications that a background of Blue Eagles can give it.

In view of the enthusiasm with which some publishers, and some of the organs of their trade, discuss and advocate varying forms of federal control of the screen, the whole subject assumes a special significance.

It is to be noted that the publishers in convention heard much of the importance of what the New York Times headlined as "Press Fight Urged to Keep Radio Free from Censorship," but apparently nothing at all was said about the rights, political and social, of that other famous medium, the motion picture. To be sure, we are to remember that a great many radio stations are owned by newspaper publishers, whereas the screen theatres are merely advertisers.

OF more direct importance, however, were the evidences at this publishers' meeting that there was an awareness of a new importance of the functions of self-discipline, an importance made manifest obviously, even if not stated, by reason of concentrations of authority and power.

It was Sir Wilmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times, who said:

> "Both in England and the United States the danger which confronts what we call the freedom of the press is not chiefly from without, for that we can meet, but from within. It is, as I see it, a danger which grows with the growth and with the increasing integration of the newspaper system—the danger that the freedom which makes us great and useful may make some among us too great, that individuals may acquire a power which (if the freedom they demand is to be ours) they can not prevent from harnessing in the service of personal ambition rather than of the community from which their strength flows. . . ."

It will require no special penetration to see stated here in quite familiar terms some of the sources of difficulty in adjustment to social and public relations that have been reflected in forces and conditions leading up to the condition which made it necessary to re-empower the motion picture's Production Code—which it seems now and then these days might well get a stimulus of new vigor.

IT is apparent enough that Sir Wilmott discovers a new newspaper responsibility because of concentrations of authority. This may well have a special meaning to the relatively small number of executives who control the motion picture. The old saw about "in union there is strength" might well be amplified by a clause pointing out that with the increased strength there is also a concentration of responsibility.

Most important at the moment to both the newspaper and the motion picture is the fact wrapped in that phrase from Sir Wilmott "the community from which their strength flows."

The newspaper abuses upon which the speaker did not seemingly venture to get specific are well enough known to come most immediately and exactly from those in pursuit of mass circulations by any and all devices—a policy more familiarly known in the amusement world as "giving the public what it wants." One of the entertaining but alarming aspects of this policy is that its fruits ever and always indicate that the purveyers think "they" want it dirtier and dumber.

THAT is where the trouble begins, because, for the newspapers, it takes them down to where the buying power fades out, and, for the motion picture, down into regions where there is and can be no social, or political, support.

It is well enough that the newspapers should now, in convention, discover that they have rights to defend and that the defensibility of those rights depends not a little on decency of purpose and conduct—which is a universal principle.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Fighting Back

Declaring war on the "closed shop" campaign of the Screen Writers' Guild, major studios in Hollywood this week promised that they would "use every resource at their command to defeat it."

Headed by Louis B. Mayer, production executives charged that "a few radical-minded and power-seeking individuals" were trying "to disrupt the industry."

Hearst newspapers, too, opened fire on the Guild's move, terming it "a device of Communist radicals." For particulars, see page 13.

Backing Stage

Hollywood is to remain the chief backer of Broadway legitimate production, it appears, as a result of a conference between Edward P. Farnsworth, federal theatre administrative officer, and a group of producing managers who seek $1,000,000 from Uncle Sam to help "strike off the shackles of Hollywood."

The Congressional grant of WPA funds does not permit private subsidies, Mr. Farnsworth said. The committee is prepared to ask modification of the policy or new enactments.

Motion picture theatre circuits are planning to employ WPA vaudeville acts, Mr. Farnsworth revealed. See page 76.

GTE Sale Set

Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott signed an order in the chancery court at Wilmington, Del., authorizing United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., to sell all assets of the receivership estate at a sale in the Public Building in Wilmington on May 18 at noon. The aggregate upset price of the assets is placed at $3,667,938.40 subject to market fluctuations.

The sale was authorized on the petition of a committee of debenture holders, which has resolved itself into a reorganization committee. The sale of assets is part of the reorganization plan dated August 31, 1935. The petition was presented by Aaron Finger of the Wilmington law firm of Richards, Layton and Finger, solicitors for the reorganization committee. No objections were entered when a copy of the sale was presented to the court.

The court stated that it would be to the interest of the creditors and stockholders and holders of voting trust certificates by a prompt sale of the assets and property of the company. There will be 26 parcels of assets offered. The receiver is to report on the sale to the chancellor on May 20 at which time objections to sale may be entered. The court on that date will also hear objections to the proposed plan of reorganization of the company.

Regulation

Legislation which is expected to pass the House of Commons at Ottawa is steering the Canadian Performing Rights Society to a breakup on the shoals of drastic restriction, according to New York music interests.

The Government measure is intended to benefit exhibitors and other music users, but individual music publishers say that they can escape regulation by setting up their own licensing agencies. If they follow that course, the performing rights society will fall apart.

Under the Government bill a three-man commission would have the power to regulate fees charged exhibitors.

Meanwhile at Washington the House patents committee is still wrestling with the subject of copyright, and no solution is in sight. See page 68.

Half Week's Pay

It will cost Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer a half week's salary for the high-priced cast of "Pride and Prejudice," MGM-financed Broadway stage success now current at the Plymouth theatre, as a result of making a film transcription of the play at a private performance late last week.

Without knowing of an Actors' Equity Association ruling that when a visual or audible recording of a stage production is made, the actors are to be paid a week's salary for each eight-hour day or fraction thereof, the cast agreed to work for less. Upon protest of Max Gordon, the producer, the Equity council agreed to cut the fee to half.

The entire show was filmed as a guide for the screen version, which MGM will make with Norma Shearer probably featured, to give the studio an idea of the sound effects, actors' appearance and costumes, tone of voice, gestures and so on. The idea has been used two or three times before.

8 Billion Market

While broadcasting economists are predicting a $8,000,000,000 equipment market in television for manufacturers, the United States Government, through its Federal Communications Commission, is proceeding with plans to establish a long-range policy governing the future of the medium, and to study the possible competitive relationship of television with radio, the press and motion pictures.

RCA will appear before the public with television on June 29th, followed by Britain's public television appearance on July 1st.

These and other developments in the new field are reported on page 71.

Bankroll, But—

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner, Paramount and Columbia informed Broadway this week that their bankrolls will not be available to any manager who acquires plays for production under the terms of the Dramatists' Guild agreement. That bankroll, it was said, provides for a backing of more than $2,000,000 next season.

This gave impetus to a move underway to conciliate the differences between the Guild and the League of New York Theatres, and Broadway believed a settlement was near.

Climaxing the fight, the producing managers made public the terms of their own agreement, to which 75 managers are pledged. See page 33.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Pay Increases

At an estimated total cost of upwards of $1,000,000 annually, Hollywood studios granted three major crafts wage increases in negotiations concluded late last week in New York.

The producer-labor committee refused admittance to the basic agreement to actors and utility workers. But that the actors are preparing to reinforce their demands is indicated in the Screen Actors Guild's affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

Details of the agreement and other labor developments are in the story on page 18.

Getting Ready

Twentieth Century-Fox film corporation opened its European sales convention at the Hotel George V in Paris on Tuesday with S. R. Kent, president, and Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, as principal speakers. Screenings of product and conferences of various kinds were scheduled for the company's offices on the Champs Elysees.

Seventy-five delegates were present at the convention, representing twenty-four countries, with W. J. Hutchinson, foreign manager, and Benjamin Miggins, European manager, presiding over the sessions.

In addition to sales policies and plans, studio problems and Movietone News were to be discussed at the meeting. As a special entertainment feature the delegates attended the opening of a new musical revue at the Casino de Paris on Thursday evening. The convention was to close with a banquet at the hotel on Saturday night.

Another convention is scheduled for the British sales forces at the Savoy Hotel in London May 4-9.

Proclamation

Governor Elmer Holt of Montana will mark Will Rogers Memorial Hospital Week, May 22-28, with a special proclamation, according to a letter received by Captain Eddie V. Rickenbacker, director of the Will Rogers Memorial Commission.

The letter was in answer to one from Captain Rickenbacker, asking cooperation of all the governors in the memorial week in all motion picture theatres throughout the country, funds for which will go to the maintenance of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y.

The governor wrote:

"I greatly admired Will Rogers and had full appreciation of what he did to make the world happier. You may be sure that I shall be delighted to assist in this final gesture for the aid of the Rogers Memorial and shall do all in my power to make the plan a success in this state and propose to issue a proclamation to our people inviting all to participate."

The celebration, May 22-28, sponsored by the entire industry in memory of the screen philosopher coincides with the dedication of the memorial hospital, a million dollar gift from the industry to the memorial commission.

Tribute

More than 1,000 friends of Carl Laemmle crowded the Ambassador Hotel Florentine Room last week at the Carl Laemmle testimonial dinner sponsored by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to applaud the rise of the little gray-haired man who transformed $50 into one of the largest film organizations in the world.

Toastmaster Irving Thalberg, one time secretary of the "Little Giant"; Herbert Rawlinson and George Eastman, of the Hollywood and Los Angeles Chambers of Commerce; Frank Lloyd, Will H. Hays and Rupert Hughes echoed the tribute of Mr. Laemmle's friends in brief speeches.

Mr. Hays presented a scroll of honor to Mr. Laemmle as a permanent record of the industry's tribute to one of its pioneers. Telegrams from friends throughout the world were read.

Mr. Laemmle, in a strong, husky voice denying his many years, expressed his appreciation.

The event closed with screening of highlights from Laemmle productions, from the two-reeler, "Hiawatha," to "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "King of Jazz."

Settlement

Final details of the out-of-court settlement of the suit of L. C. Page and Company, Boston publishers, against Twentieth Century-Fox over the screen rights to "Captain January" were carried out in the federal court in New York this week. Stipulations covering the settlement were filed by attorneys.

At the same time an order was handed down by the circuit court of appeals reversing the order of the district court which had denied a preliminary injunction to the plaintiffs and directing that the plaintiffs be granted an injunction against exhibition of the picture.

New Circuit

Marking their return, after many years, to theatre operation outside Chicago's Loop, Jones, Linick and Schaeffer this week leased the Tower, Southside de luxe theatre, for 10 years, starting May 1.

The circuit at one time operated 50 houses in Chicago. The Tower, which seats 3,000, has been operated by Balaban and Katz.

Jones, Linick and Schaeffer are after more theatres in Chicago, and the move starts what may be a battle with B and K for theatre supremacy. They now operate the State Lake, Woods and LaSalle.

Propaganda

The fate of foreign films in Detroit is considered to hinge on a forthcoming decision of the Michigan supreme court. If the court lifts a ban on a Russian picture, the forces fighting foreign propaganda films are expected to press for stricter censor laws. Briefs in the case of the Detroit Cinema Guild against local officials, involving the issue, were filed last week, and what they contend is recounted in the story on page 32.

Product Trial

Trial of the Skouras Circuit action to set aside a product deal made by Twentieth Century-Fox with the RKO 81st St. Theatre in New York, which was scheduled for this week, has been postponed to May 18 at the request of the Nathan Burkan office, attorneys for Skouras.

The action was filed early last fall alleging that sale of Fox product to the theatre, day and date with competing Skouras operated houses in the neighborhood, was a violation of the Fox franchise held by Skouras and would result in an injury to the plaintiff. An injunction halting delivery of the pictures to the RKO house has been obtained by Skouras and is now in effect.

Under Protest

Studio officials in Hollywood last week estimated that stars, writers, directors and executives will contribute several million dollars to the State of California in the form of taxes, the last day of return arriving this week. Across the bottom of every return form, however, and placed there by the suggestion of studio heads, were the words "Paid under protest."

PRODUCERS DECLARE WAR ON WRITERS' 'CLOSED SHOP'

Charge That "A Few Radical-Minded and Power-Seeking Individuals" Are Seeking to "Disrupt the Industry" in U. S.

Hearst Attacks Movement As Inspired by "Communistic Agitators"; Says Workers Would Suffer by Restriction

Presaging a bitter, protracted battle, the Screen Writers' Guild campaign to effect a closed shop in Hollywood studios within two years brought from the Motion Picture Producers' Association this week the retort that "the producers will use every resource at their command to defeat it."

In a statement signed by production chiefs at all major studios, the industry made its position forcefully clear on the eve of the scheduled ratification by the Guild on Saturday of the channels by which it hopes to achieve closed shop: (1) amalgamation with writers in all other organized fields, and (2) forbidding writers to contract for services or material beyond May 2, 1938.

Heretofore the producers have been treating with aloof indifference the Hollywood guilds and their determination "to smash the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences." At a meeting Monday night the Screen Writers' Guild claimed that definite recognition by the producers had been reached as a result of the blast.

Coincidental with the producers' charge that the movement is inspired by "a few agitators," newspapers published by William Randolph Hearst, himself a film producer through control of Cosmopolitan Productions, releasing through Warner, charged on Monday that "the Screen Writers' Guild is a device of Communist radicals."

The producers' statement was signed by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and president of the producers' association; Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president, Twentieth Century-Fox; B. B. Kahane, president, RKO Studios, Inc.; Harry Cohn, president, Columbia; Henry Herzbrun, vice-president, Paramount; Jack L. Warner, vice-president, Warner Bros.; Charles R. Rogers, executive vice-president, Universal; Jesse L. Lasky, Pickford-Lasky Productions; David O. Selznick, president, Selznick International Pictures; Merian C. Cooper, vice-president, Pioneer Pictures, and Walter Wanger, Paramount producer.

Cite Pascal's Forecast

The producers called attention to a signed article by Ernest Pascal, president of the Screen Writers' Guild, in the Screen Guild's Magazine in which he said that the twofold purpose of amalgamating with the Dramatists' Guild and the Authors' League of America is to subordinate all dramatists, authors and writers to the command of a supreme "council" of 36 and to establish absolute control of manpower and material in the writing field. Mr. Pascal, it was cited, urged the screen writers to "picture then the strength and power that will be ours in the next two years," adding that "we will be in the invulnerable position of controlling both material and manpower."

WRITERS ANSWER PRODUCERS' CHARGE

A threatened bolt by conservative members of the Screen Writers' Guild sent the council of the Authors' League into hurriedly called sessions in New York and Hollywood on Wednesday for consideration of amendments to the setup attacked by the producers.

The Guild in Hollywood on Tuesday denied the purposes attributed to Guild leaders in the producers' statement and said their aim was to end "long standing abuses" against studio writers.

"We do not want control of the film business or any bar to new writers," the Guild declared. "We do want protection of our earning power. We have not forgotten the attempts to lower it during the past few years. During 1933 a 50 per cent cut was taken by unorganized talent which was not taken by organized labor."

Terming the assertions of the Guild president and his associates as "erroneous and misleading," and outlining plans to combat the drive for "Guild shop," the executives declared:

"For years the producers have ignored the many false, malicious, defamatory and inflammatory articles and stories circulated by a few malcontents and disturbers.

"We know that the general group of screen writers are constructive in their attitude toward the industry and we have every admiration and respect for the sound and brilliant contribution which writers have made to the success of motion pictures.

"We do not purpose, however, to permit a few radical-minded and power-seeking individuals to disrupt the industry. We earnestly hope that the writers in general will refuse to follow false leaders, whose motives may or may not be sincere, but whose actions and utterances are exceedingly unwise and hurtful to the industry.

"At the outset, and in the interests of all of the thousands of men and women employed in producing motion pictures, it should be understood by every person involved or interested that the industry will not accept a closed shop for writers on any basis whatsoever."

The executives pointed out that they do not seek a fight and do not want to fight, but if a fight is forced on them they will carry it to a finish.

"If it becomes necessary to seriously fight such a movement the producers will use every resource at their command to defeat it," the statement continued.

"The producers have no quarrel with the general body of screen writers. We seek no quarrel and hope to avoid it. It is for the writers themselves to repudiate dangerous leaders and reject foolish counsel."

Cite Union Cooperation

It was made clear that the producers have no quarrel with labor unions and for years have cooperated with the unions and have assisted them in attaining their legitimate objectives. However, it was pointed out, there is a wide distinction between labor unions properly organized as such and organizations of creative employees.

"Not by the widest stretch of the imagination," said the producers, "can a writer, whose ability and value cannot be even remotely standardized, place his interests and problems on a plane with a man who joins a union not only to protect his job, but to establish standard wages, working conditions and hours of labor."

The Guild board's ultimatum was described as the inspiration of unwise radical leadership, and a "striking at the very foundation of stability and harmony in the motion picture industry," and being chiefly dangerous in its restrictions and limitations upon the welfare and work of the writers themselves.

Hearst Attacks "Radicals"

Meanwhile the Hearst press in an unsigned editorial described the Guild's move as "a radical, destructive scheme for 'powers' and 'control,'" and said that "the producers are justly marshaling their forces to defeat the proposal, which is not a necessary movement nor a worthy one."

Declaring that the screen writers are amply and liberally paid and that "there are no injustices to be corrected," the Hearst editorial continued:

"The object of the Guild is either to secure higher wages or salaries for the writers who are already tremendously well paid, or else to prevent other writers from sharing in the benefits of these handsome salaries.

Sees Output Constricted

"The result of this Guild movement, if successful in forming a closed shop, would be to limit the amount of writing, and, consequently, the amount of production and the number of productions.

"There are now something like 350 moving pictures a year made in Hollywood.

"This could be cut down to 200 pictures a year under constrictive movements such

PARAMOUNT, KENNEDY STILL ARE TALKING

Former Chairman of Securities Commission Confers with Hertz, Odlum and Weisl

The possibility that Joseph Patrick Kennedy will join Paramount Pictures Corporation in an advisory capacity, created for the occasion, rested on Wednesday, on the eve of a meeting of the board of directors Thursday afternoon. The meeting will go a long way toward determining whether Mr. Kennedy will be appointed, with final action one way or the other to be taken within a few days thereafter.

Mr. Kennedy, who told the press that he would not accept the post if his appointment met with opposition, held conversations variously through the week with representatives of Paramount board members of the banking interests that are sponsoring him—principally John D. Hertz, of Lehman Brothers, Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas Corportion, and Edwin L. Weisl, Mr. Odlum's personal attorney.

Report Present Personnel to Stay

The conversations looking toward the affiliation were subsequently discussed freely in the press. That the post was proferred was freely admitted, but definiteness of an acceptance was not. Too, there was open speculation as to its permanency. Regardless, both Broadway and Wall Street heard that if and when an arrangement is effected, it would not be in the nature of a replacement of Paramount's existing executive personnel.

The New York Evening Journal "exclusively revealed" that Mr. Kennedy was approached by Paramount interests a year ago, when the company was seeking a president on its emergence from bankruptcy.

This week's development climaxed a long series of rumors published over a period about Mr. Kennedy reputedly joining first one motion picture corporation, then another. He frequently has been mentioned as a possible member of President Roosevelt's cabinet, establishing strong Capitol Hill connections both as a large contributor to and worker for Mr. Roosevelt in his 1932 campaign.

Retired as Securities Board Chairman

Mr. Kennedy was appointed, in 1933, the first chairman of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission, retiring last year. He recently devised the plan of recapitalization of the Radio Corporation of America, approved last month by the stockholders, and for which he received a fee of $150,000.

With a New England banking background behind him, Mr. Kennedy arrived on the scene of the motion picture at the helm of the old Film Booking Offices. He sold that company to RCA and with it Radio Corporation created the present Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. Mr. Kennedy was also active at the same time in the management of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the assets of which he likewise disposed of to RCA, which merged its acquisition with RKO. While at Pathe Mr. Kennedy also produced Gloria Swanson's pictures and released them through United Artists. He retired from motion pictures in 1933.

Meanwhile John Edward Otterson, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, returned to Broadway last weekend from lengthy conferences with studio chiefs at Hollywood regarding 1936-37 product plans. An announcement from the home office at Times Square followed his arrival there, as follows: "Mr. Otterson expressed satisfaction with the progress being made at the studio and emphasized the permanency of William LeBaron's appointment as production chief in complete charge of pictures, with all producers, directors and executives reporting to him."

Charles Rogers Wins Point in "U" Suit

By terms of an order obtained by Charles R. Rogers from Federal Judge John C. Knox, Gustavus A. Rogers, a cousin, was to show cause on Thursday why other plaintiffs should not be joined with him in his suit against Charles R. Rogers for an accounting. The order was based on the wording of Gustavus A. Rogers' complaint, which alleged that the defendant agreed on a plan to obtain with him "and associates" a controlling interest in Universal and that Charles R. Rogers subsequently secured an option in his own name and that of Standard Capital company making it impossible for the plaintiff to carry out the terms of the agreement.

Review Denied for Laboratory Patent

Review of a decision of the ninth circuit court of appeals, holding that Columbia Pictures and William Horsley Film Laboratories had not infringed a patent held by Cinema Patents Company, Inc., on a method of developing films was refused Monday in Washington by the United States supreme court.

The case was appealed by Cinema Patents on the ground that there was a sharp conflict of decision between two of the circuit courts on the same patent, and because the decision of the ninth circuit court was in conflict with the supreme court as to what is a patentable invention.

$2,432,527 Collected In Back Tax Drive

More than $10,000,000 will be obtained by the United States Treasury Department through its drive on theatres, manufacturing jewelers and others subject to special taxes, the Treasury announced Wednesday. The campaign has involved the inspection of the books of thousands of taxpayers, including exhibitors.

So far $2,436,527 has been collected out of $10,351,614 found due, with the campaign to run four months more.

Producers Answer Closed 'Shop' Talk

as the Guild proposes; it might even be cut to a hundred pictures a year.

"There are those who will imagine that this would not be an unmixed evil.

"But certainly the working people who depend on the quantity of production for their wages, the manufacturers who depend on the quantity of production for their sales, the workers in the factories of the manufacturers, and all the people who depend directly or indirectly on motion picture production, would suffer seriously by a limitation of production.

"So the Screen Writers' Guild movement is selfish and unjust.

Calls Proposal "Stupid"

"Furthermore, it is a stupid proposition, because, obviously, in order that producers shall pay good money they must be allowed to make good money.

"And they cannot be hampered and restricted in their production, tied hand and foot with rules, regulations, restrictions and extortions, and then be told to go out and make this money to pay the fabulous moving picture salaries.

"The Screen Writers' Guild move is a device of Communist radicals who apparently do not mind cutting their own throats if they can only manage at the same time to cut the throats of the producers and the workers generally.

"The Screen Writers' Guild has done one good thing. It has brought the producers together.

"Things had reached such a pass in the moving picture business that some of the companies were in bankruptcy and others hovering on the edge, and further hampering and hamstringing of the producers is not possible if the companies are to be allowed to exist.

"Greedy and Selfish Cliques"

"Necessity, therefore, brought some unity among moving picture producers, and the workers and all those dependent on moving picture production can be thankful that this unity has been accomplished; because it means the continuation of the industry on a fair basis, and the continuation of the liberal and even extravagant compensation to all employees which has accompanied the development of the industry.

"It means better service to the public and a setback to destructive Communistic activities.

"The producers should not, and will not, permit a few radical and power-seeking individuals to disrupt the industry.

"And the beneficiaries of the industry generally should not allow greedy and selfish cliques to kill the prolific geese which have laid such marvelous golden eggs for all.

"There are no such other willing geese, and no such other golden eggs to be found in the world."

QUIGLEY ANNUAL AWARDS PRESENTED IN HOLLYWOOD

J. Edgar Hoover Presents Plaque To Matt Saunders in Washington

To Matt Saunders, manager of the Poli theatre at Bridgeport, Conn., J. Edgar Hoover, chief executive of the Department of Justice, presented the Quigley Bronze plaque at a luncheon in Washington Monday afternoon. Invited guests included 150 newsboys.

Among those attending the presentation were Carter Barron, Loew's district manager in Washington, and Erle Wright, publicist for the Poli Theatres in the New England district.

Mr. Saunders won the Award for his outstanding campaign on "Rose Marie", played at the Poli in February. [Picture of the presentation and further details in the Managers' Round Table department in a forthcoming issue.]

Dr. Giannini Officiates at Ceremonies in Tribute to Exploitation Achievements of Harry Goldberg and Lester Pollock

Motion picture production and exhibition came together in Hollywood Wednesday to witness the presentation of the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards by Dr. A. H. Giannini to Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia theatres publicist, and Lester Pollock, manager of Loew's Rochester theatre, Rochester, N. Y. The ceremonies were held at a special luncheon given by QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS in the Hotel Roosevelt, attended by studio and theatre executives.

Martin Quigley's contributions to the motion picture by pioneering important influences for the industry's welfare keynoted the brief addresses of Dr. Giannini, Jesse L. Lasky, Fred S. Meyer, Messrs. Goldberg and Pollock and others.

Mr. Goldberg was a winner with his campaign on Warner Brothers' "A Midsummer Night's Dream" that was voted the Bronze Award, and Mr. Pollock by his outstanding record in the competitions earned the Quigley Medal of Merit.

Jesse Lasky introduced Dr. Giannini as "a man who has given more courage to the motion picture industry, particularly to production heads."

Dr. Giannini, in presenting the plaques, said:

"Today you have fresh evidence of the pleasant, efficient way in which Martin Quigley and his associates function for the motion picture industry. Martin Quigley has not only met and faithfully discharged his duties as a trade journalist; he has done splendid work. Quigley is a doer, a creator. You have the negative type of man who never habitually originates anything. You have the creative man who is the doer, performer, and Martin Quigley, Colvin Brown, Terry Ramsaye, Red Kann belong to that type of doers, performers.

"It is wholesome to see these men engaged in this work of encouraging the exhibitor.

"May I hope that these plaques occupy a conspicuous place in your home or your theatre, and I hope the memory of this occasion will occupy a conspicuous place in you hearts."

Introduced were Jane Withers, Henry Hathaway, Charles Collins, Betty Grable, Francis Lederer, Walter Abel, Gabe Yorke, Harry Rapf and Fred Meyer.

Mr. Meyer recalled the early efforts of Martin Quigley in publicizing exhibitorial expression. "Showmanship and exploitation of pictures first came into being about 1913 when a young man named Martin Quigley published a magazine, EXHIBITORS HERALD, in Chicago, long before the News, Motography and the HERALD become one, and he had a section known as 'What the Picture Did For Me,' and I became a faithful subscriber and correspondent to this department. Out of this 'What the Picture Did For Me' came the Quigley Awards, and in eulogy to Mr. Quigley I would say I hate to think what showmanship would be today if it weren't for Martin Quigley and his Awards."

To the winners he said, "It is my desire that the circuits you represent will reward you, that your promotion will be steady. Let your theatres be operated by showmen and then tell them to go and exploit the pictures to the limit as you gentlemen have done. If you do that, showmanship is not a lost art, and when you have accomplished that, every exhibitor will go back into show-business."

New Patronage Drawn.

Harry Goldberg detailed the successful application in the Philadelphia district of different advertising methods on such pictures as "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Life of Louis Pasteur," in bringing to the theatre a class of patronage never before reached by conventional theatre publicity and exploitation. He advocated that all the studios make more pictures of this type.

Mr. Pollock concurred with the opinions of the previous speakers.

Before Dr. Giannini gave the plaques to the theatre men A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, reviewed the history of the Quigley Awards, citing their success in stimulating box office grosses and promotions among the showmen who had won the Quigley monthly plaques.

"Essentially to accomplish their purposes the Quigley Awards must first be an important means of increasing receipts," he said. "That this has been done in so many instances indicates the advantages of furnishing to the theatre manager as many box office angles as possible."

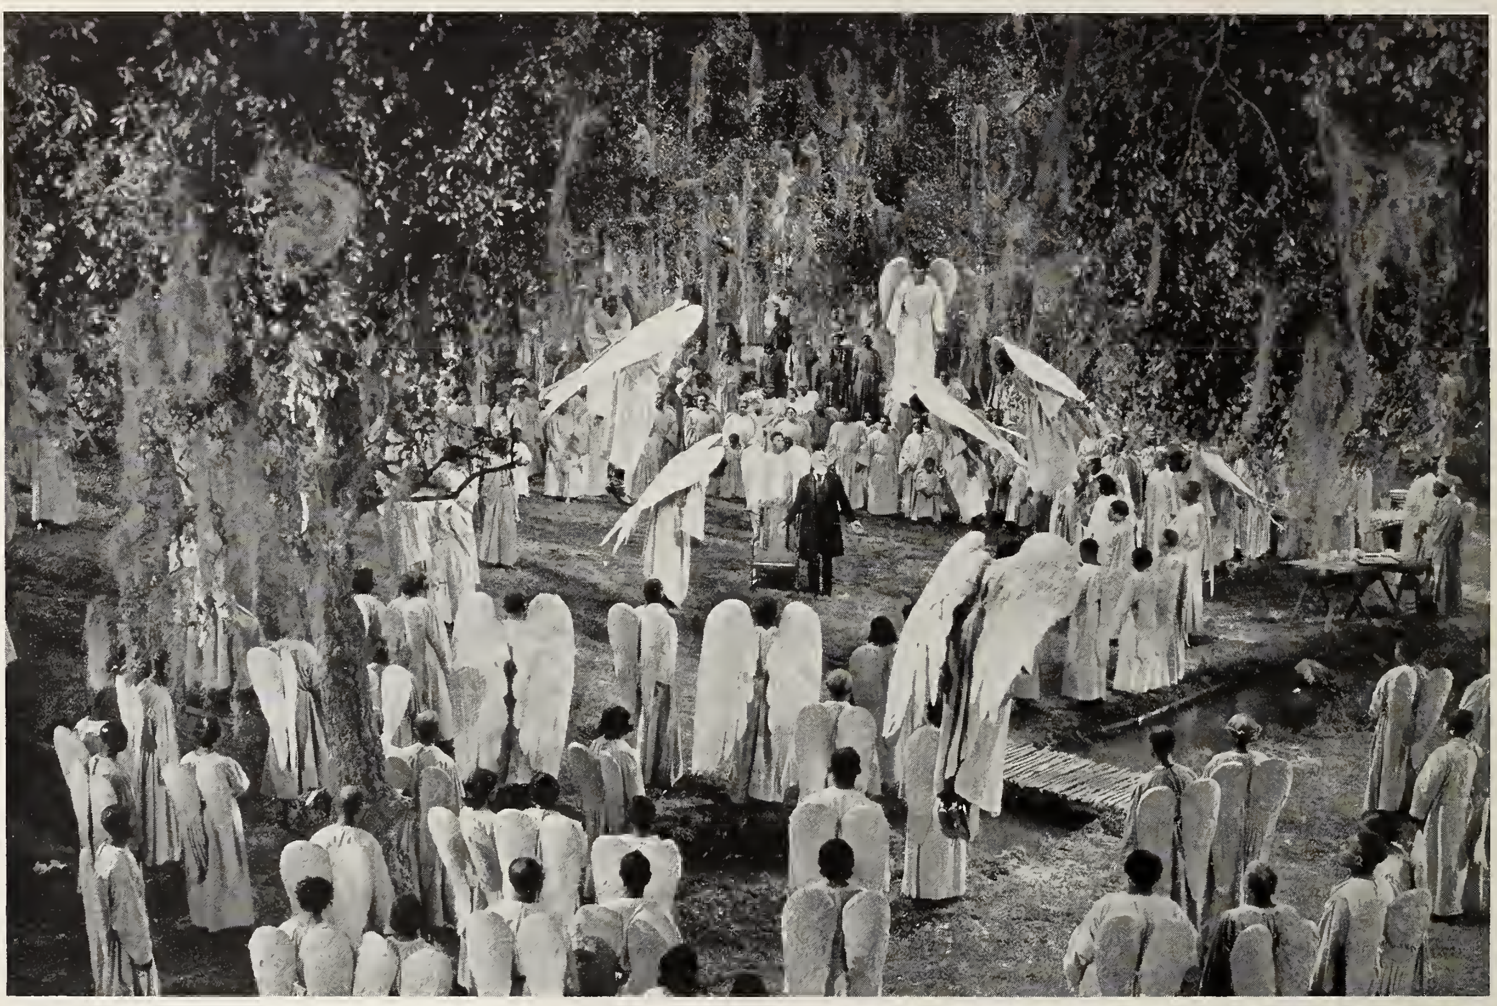
Entertainment for the winning showmen included luncheons at the various studios, stops at different lots to watch scenes being shot and journeys to nearby units on location. Full accounts of these activities, written by Messrs. Goldberg and Pollock, will be published in the Managers' Round Table department in a forthcoming issue.

The presentation of the Grand Award plaques in Hollywood and a week at the studio capital was offered by MOTION PICTURE HERALD to the winners of the 1935 Awards. Arrangements were made to bring to Hollywood John Armstrong, voted the Silver Grand Award for his campaign at the Carlton theatre, London, on Paramount's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Mr. Armstrong carried out his winning campaign while serving as publicity director of Paramount London theatres. After his entry was chosen by the judges for the Grand Award he was promoted to the post of advertising and publicity director of Radio Pictures, Ltd., the duties attendant upon his new position making it impossible for him to take time for the Hollywood trip. Mr. Armstrong's plaque will be presented to him in London.

Guests at Ceremony

Among those who attended the luncheon were Sam Briskin, executive vice-president of RKO-Radio studios; Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Pickford-Lasky; Reeves Espy, executive assistant to Samuel Goldwyn; Harry Rapf, executive producer at MGM; Henry Ginsberg, general manager of Selznick International; Joseph I. Breen of the MPPDA; Al Hanson, of Fox West Coast theatres; George Bagnall, Paramount studios; Henry Hathaway, Paramount director; Francis Lederer; Jane Withers; Betty Grable; Mark Sandrich; Walter Abel; Edwin Schallert of the Los Angeles Times; Gabe York, Paramount publicity department; Ed Selzer, Warner publicist; Mark Larkin and Lincoln Quarberg of the Pickford-Lasky publicity force; Fred Turner, Roach publicist; Lou Lustig, executive assistant to Sam Briskin; Fred Whitbeck, Ralph Wheelwright and Don McElwaine of MGM; Perry Lieber, RKO-Radio; Paul Snell, Pioneer; Jimmy Johnston, Universal publicity department; Fred S. Meyer, Universal studio executive; Sid Grauman, Charles Collins, Francis Perrett, Jesse Goldburg, Lou Heifetz, Joe Shea, Phil Gersdorf, Lindsley Parsons, Dean Haskell, Jock Lawrence, Nate Dyches, Ken Whitmore, Jack Dailey, Jack Todd and Frank Seltzer.

"THE GREEN PASTURES"



by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

WHEN one considers the history of "The Green Pastures" no doubts remain as to why Warner bought the property for picture purposes. It won the 1930 Pulitzer Prize as a stage play. During its five years run, first in New York and then in 207 other cities it was presented 1,779 times.

Discounting producing organization patriotism it is easy to foresee why "The Green Pastures" promises to rank as one of the most important features in a year that seems destined to be crowded with great pictures. In one way the picturization of the Marc Connelly story and play is a radical screen departure. The cast is almost 100% Negro. Few of the players have what we call a screen name. It was necessary that the picture be played by Negroes. The producers would have been indiscreet to have attempted anything else.

"The Green Pastures" is a simple story. It is that kind of simplicity that proved its potency to hit right into the heart. It is a story of simple primitive Negroes; their ideas of the creation of the world, of heaven, of the Bible—its characters and episodes. It is being brought to the screen without a single alteration from the original appealing and impressive story. The simple beauty is retained, yet with all the scope of modern picture making.

> ¶ Warner's production staff, in bringing to the screen "The Green Pastures", subject of this HERALD Pictorial Preview, has borne in mind the simple beauty of the Pulitzer Prize play while enlarging its scope as made possible by the screen technique of today.

In its transition to the screen, Marc Connelly had the collaboration of Sheridan Gibney, who recently completed "Anthony Adverse," in preparing the screen play. As cooperating director he had the services of William Keighley.

The Heaven the picture presents is not a golden domed place where angels strut in glittering robes. Rather it is a simple but beautiful oak glade in the Louisiana bayou country where a few hundred primitive Negroes, robed in simple nightgown-like affairs made of terry cloth, listen to the words of Moses, "De Lawd" and a black Angel Gabriel. It's a picnicking place where the black angels holding a fish fry hear Gabriel command: "Gangway for de Lawd God Jehovah"—and De Lawd comes to them.

Death of the venerable Richard Berry Harrison, who played "De Lawd" during the long stage run, caused a change of casting plans a year ago. But in the person of Rex Ingram, a splended actor, was found the one to assume the character. As but few of the original company could be obtained and brought west, the hundred or more players needed for speaking parts were recruited from the Los Angeles Negro theatrical colony. Their names are inconsequential. They will be remembered as Adam, the ancient warrior Hezdrel, Moses, Noah, Aaron, Pharaoh; as the rulers of Babylon and Sheba; as the Stout Angel, Slim Angel, Mrs. Moses and Mrs. Noah.

Many unusual scenic effects supplementing the impressive set production values are incorporated in the picture. Among these are the creation, a shapeless mass of whirling water slowly resolving into a globe with well defined oceans and continents. The Flood is reproduced from its start until the Ark comes to rest on Mount Ararat. In Heaven, black angels fly through clouds angling for catfish, and catching them. Throughout the whole picture run the voices of Hall Johnson's famous negro chorus, 53 men and women singers of 25 spirituals.

AS A FILM

"De Lawd" hears the cries of His people. When death took Richard Berry Harrison a year ago, a substitute for the star of the long stage run was required. The experienced Rex Ingram was selected.

Gabriel "bresses" the chosen, and he's a black Gabriel who (in the picture on the opposite page) has addressed the black angels, holding a fish fry, with the words: "Gangway for de Lawd God Jehovah".

COAST STUDIOS GIVE 3,000 WORKERS $1,000,000 ANNUAL WAGE INCREASES

Unions Withdraw Demand for 30-Hour Week; 10 Per Cent Raise Given Crafts Under IATSE and IBEW Agreements

Hollywood studios granted employees wage increases estimated at more than $1,000,000 annually, affecting 3,000 employees at the peak of production, in negotiations concluded late last week in New York with the five major craft unions under the basic minimum agreement. Demands for a five-day, 30-hour week were withdrawn by the unions, and the 36-hour week remains.

At the same time, moves by the Screen Actors' Guild and the utility workers for admittance to the basic agreement, which would have given them hoped-for recognition, were rebuffed with the explanation that they first must obtain the approval of the heads of the international unions signatory to the pact.

As a result, the Actors' Guild and Actors' Equity Association are favorable to plans for a campaign to amalgamate actors in the legitimate, radio and motion picture fields, with a view to a centralized organization such as recently effected in the writing fields through the Authors' League of America, by which the Hollywood guild hopes to become powerful enough to force a showdown on recognition.

A 10 per cent increase was given the crafts under the jurisdiction of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators and the crafts under the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Teamsters and chauffeurs, who had requested a 25 per cent increase, accepted 15 per cent. The American Federation of Musicians made no demands. The wage scale for carpenters and joiners also remains unchanged.

Pat Casey, labor contact for the producers, who announced the adjustments, said that the wage increases requested ranged up to 50 per cent, though not all crafts made such demands. As is the custom, for bargaining purposes the unions asked for both wage and hour revisions, and these requests were the starting point for a week of conferences which ended last Thursday. The revisions amend the five-year basic minimum agreement and are for one year. Theatres are not involved.

Jurisdiction Settled

Mr. Casey also made formal announcement of settlement of a long-standing jurisdictional dispute which now gives operation of sound equipment to the IATSE, while construction, maintenance and repairs come under the jurisdiction of the IBEW.

"Regarding the application of other crafts to come under the basic agreement, it was unanimously decided that no new crafts would be taken under the agreement at this time," the statement said. Furthermore, possible future action on inclusion of the actors, utility workers and painters and decorators was not indicated. It was regarded as doubtful whether any new crafts will be admitted before the expiration of the basic agreement in 1938.

Chauffeurs, drivers and teamsters have been getting 83⅓ cents an hour for a six-hour day with a cumulative 36-hour week. Electrical workers have been paid $1.16⅔ per hour for a six-hour day. IATSE crafts receiving a 10 per cent increase include soundmen, some of whom have a 54-hour cumulative week and others a 36-hour week, with scales according to classification; cameramen, also paid according to classification, with the working conditions fluctuating but as high as 60 hours weekly, and lamp operators, who have been paid $1 an hour for a six-hour day.

The increase practically returns salaries of certain classifications of cameramen to the 1932 level before they accepted a 10 per cent cut, Mr. Casey said.

U. S. RULE FOR FILMS DRAWS PRESS FIRE

According to the Department of Commerce in Washington, "only a federal commission would seem versatile enough to cope with the picture industry's complex problems."

In reply to this, the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, in a recent issue, said: "Possibly this is true. The picture industry has many problems, such as extravagance, wasteful production, duplication of energy, exorbitant salaries, inner jealousies and rivalries, a network where efficiency becomes lost.

"Going over the list, one is likely to conclude that perhaps the New Deal government is the one best agency to understand, sympathize and cope with the problems of the motion picture industry. Their problems, in fact, are so strikingly similar that one might almost say they are the same problems.

"Left to itself a bit more the motion picture industry might find some new ideas to develop. A motion picture epic of the New Deal, for example."

Provisions for overtime pay remain the same for all crafts covered by the agreement, some receiving time and a half, and others straight time.

Kenneth Thomson, secretary of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood, arrived in New York almost two weeks before the conferences started to make formal application for recognition. However, because of the rule that such applications cannot be considered unless they have the endorsement of the international union presidents, Mr. Thomson and Joseph Moreschi, president of the Studio Utility Employees' Union, which has a membership of approximately 1,100, cooled their heels in an anteroom without a hearing.

The American Federation of Labor showed interest in the proceedings when William Collins, New York representative, called at the scene of the negotiations, at Mr. Casey's office on Broadway. Mr. Collins said the visit was purely informal.

Local 644, Studio Painters and Decorators, of Los Angeles, which includes scenic designers, also has been seeking recognition, but filed no application at the conferences.

Actors' Guild and Utility Workers Denied Admittance to Agreement; Sound Equipment Jurisdiction Under the IATSE

While heads of the international unions could not be reached for comment, the IATSE and others in the basic agreement were represented as feeling that they have nothing in common with highly paid actors, and that because of contractual obligations the actors could not be depended upon for support in event of a studio strike. The same feeling was apparent with respect to the writers.

Mr. Casey was chairman of the producers' committee and served as chairman of the conferences. Others on the committee representing major producers and studios were: Sidney R. Kent, Twentieth Century-Fox; Nicholas M. Schenck, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Leo Spitz and M. H. Aylesworth, RKO; E. W. Hammons, Educational; Harry• Buckley, United Artists; Albert Warner, Warners; R. H. Cochrane, Universal; Austin Keough, Paramount; Nate Spingold, Columbia. From Hollywood were Victor Clarke, studio labor contact; Fred Pelton, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; H. K. Bachelder, Twentieth Century-Fox; Keith Glennon, Paramount, and others.

Labor was represented by Mr. Browne; Steve Newman, vice-president, IATSE; Daniel Tobin, president, International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Chauffeurs; Daniel Tracy, president, IBEW; Joseph N. Weber, president, American Federation of Musicians.

Meanwhile, negotiations are scheduled to get underway in New York on a revised wage scale for newsreel cameramen affiliated with the IATSE, which, is understood, will ask an increase.

Minor questions of jurisdiction among IATSE crafts are to be ironed out prior to the biennial convention in Kansas City June 8 to 15, which 2,000 delegates from 700 locals in the United States and Canada are to attend. Felix D. Snow, IATSE district representative, was in charge of a show given in Kansas City last Friday to raise funds for entertainment.

Empire State President Ousted

Another New York development was the ousting of Casper Ricca as president of Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union, Inc., following a hearing on impeachment charges announced by the union as "unwilling to cooperate with the other officers." Abraham I. Kindler was elected to succeed Mr. Ricca, who held the office two months. Two other officers recently were exonerated of charges which resulted from a factional fight.

A bill requiring the employment of an operator for each motion picture projector has been revived in the St. Louis board of aldermen. A similar measure, sponsored by the local union, recently died in committee.

The Rhode Island supreme court is to get an appeal by E. M. Loew Theatres, Inc., from a decision of Judge Mortimer A. Sullivan upholding the right of Local 309, IATSE, to picket the Colonial theatre, Newport.

Joseph N. Weber is slated to be reelected president of the American Federation of Musicians for the 36th term, at the annual convention the week of June 8 in Detroit. Mr. Weber has held the office since 1900.

Paramount takes the guesswork out of SHORTS with the PARAMOUNT BOX-OFFICE TEST

Knowing the importance to you exhibitors of shorts that are absolutely surefire box-office, Paramount uses a statistical test for Paramount Short Subjects that guarantees them 100% box-office.

THE TEST Every one of the 43 Paramount Exchanges in the United States and Canada selects from the theatres in its territory a representative group of theatres playing Paramount Short Subjects. These theatres include all types — from the key city house to the little theatre in the country town. These theatres are asked to rate each Paramount Short as to box-office power, in the following order: Excellent, Good, Fair and Poor, and to give their opinions in detail on each short. Thus Paramount is able to get a first-hand, statistical report on the pulling power not only of each short, but on the characters or elements in each short. From these statistics, which represent a cross-section of theatres all over this continent, the Paramount Short Subjects Division is able to determine exactly the kind of short subject that will do the most business for you.

In July, 1933, Paramount first placed Popeye in a Betty Boop cartoon. A statistical checkup, or test, showed he rated top billing in a picture of his own. He was starred in September, 1933. We don't need to tell you the results. In 1934 Popeye led the cartoon comedy field.

The 1935-1936 box-office test figures by Exchanges, representing the Short Subject market from coast to coast in the United States and Canada, are shown below. They tell the story.

Extra-Curricular

Extra curricular activities had Hollywood running around in circles the last few days. First came the farewell dinner to Carl Laemmle, Sr., at Ambassador hotel, sponsored by the Los Angeles and Hollywood Chambers of Commerce and the Academy. With Irving Thalberg acting as toastmaster many speakers lauded "Uncle Carl's" contribution to the upbuilding of the industry and the great influences he exerted in the progress of Los Angeles and Hollywood. Will Hays, Frank Lloyd, Herbert Rawlinson, Howard Estabrook and Rupert Hughes voiced the community's affection for the veteran producer.

As the bells were tolling Mr. Laemmle's departure from Universal another set of chimes was heralding the advent of the Mary Pickford-Jesse Lasky producing organization, in the Hollywood Roosevelt. There were no formal speeches here, but the enthusiasm welcoming Mary and Jesse was just as sincere as the regret expressed that Uncle Carl was relinquishing the post he held for so many years. On such occasions as the Pickford-Lasky reception the working press learns just how many scribblers are in town. The official list is approximately 250, but someone must be mistaken, as about a thousand appeared.

Followed the Warner Club dinner dance at the swanky Biltmore Bowl. This was a private affair limited to club membership and a few especially invited guests. Hundreds, all dressed up in their best clothes, attended. Al Jolson was master of ceremonies for the entertainment and all was good. The topper of the evening came when the acrobatic Maxellos called for volunteers to enjoy a little spinning around. Pat O'Brien got a whirling that convinced him that any pushing around he may have experienced in pictures was just child's play. Eddie Robinson proved a little too heavy for the dextrous Maxellos. But they surely had a grand time flouncing amazed Marie Wilson around. Proving a good sport, Jack Warner was the next victim. Then a break down reel illustrated what is said and done when actors forget their lines or someone tries to steal the action.

Sandwiched among the three main events was a conglomeration of cocktail parties that made one wish that Harry Goldberg and Les Pollock, Quigley Award winners, had convinced A-Mike Vogel that they should have been here a week earlier.

Speeding up the drive to clear production schedules, 12 pictures were finished in the week. Only six started. Both groups include important features. Three of the finished productions, "Romeo and Juliet," "Mary of Scotland" and "Angel of Mercy," have been made on that scale. Of those started, "The Garden of Allah" is the most important.

With four transferred to the cutting rooms, Warner Bros. leads all studios in number of pictures completed. Outstanding in the quartet is "Angel of Mercy." A drama of Florence Nightingale, first war nurse, it features Kay Frances in the leading role. The supporting cast includes Ian Hunter, Donald Woods, C. Montague Shaw, Nigel Bruce, Nelson McDowell, Herbert Evans, Eily Malyon, Tempe Pigott, Halliwell Hobbes, Phoebe Foster, Ferdinand Munier, Henry O'Neil, Donald Crisp, Lionel Belmore, Charles Irwin, Harry Cording, Clyde Cook, E. E. Clive, Alma Lloyd, Montagu Love and Charles Coleman. William Dieterle directed. Edward G. Robinson is starred in "Bullets and Ballots." A drama of political graft and crime, it will present additionally Joan Blondel, Humphrey Bogart, Barton MacLane, George E. Stone, Craig Reynolds, Addison Richards, Joseph King, Dick Purcell, Frank McHugh, Henry Kolker, Louise Beavers, Pauline Garon, Ralph Remley, Gilbert Emery and Herbert Rawlinson. William Keighley directed. The cast for "Public Enemy's Wife" lists Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay, Robert Armstrong, Cesar Romero, Dick Foran, Sam Flint, Hal Dawson, Selmer Jackson, Joseph King, Kenneth Harlan and William Pawley. It was directed by Nick Grinde. "Hot Money" will present Ross Alexander, Beverly Roberts, Paul Graetz, Cy Kendall, Joseph Cawthorne, Andrew Tombes, Harry Burns, Mary Treen, Addison Richards and Milt Kibbee. William McGann directed.

Radio Completes Two

Radio also completed two pictures, one of which is the already widely publicized "Mary of Scotland." Katharine Hepburn and Fredric March are teamed in the leading roles. The supporting cast lists a large number of well-known screen names such as Florence Eldridge, Ian Keith, Douglas Walton, John Carradine, Alan Mowbray, Ralph Forbes, Frieda Inescourt, Donald Crisp, Morni Olsen, William Stack, Doris Lloyd, Brandon Hurst, Fred Malatesta, Monte Blue, Laurence Grant, Ivan Simpson, Nigel De Brulier, Lionel Belmore, Walter Byron. Direction was by John Ford. The second feature, "The Last Outlaw," formerly "Last of the Bad Men," presents a galaxy of western players in Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson and Tom Tyler, with Margaret Callahan, Harry Jans, Ray Mayer, Frank M. Thomas.

Two pictures likewise were completed at Republic. "The Lonely Trail" will present John Wayne, Ann Rutherford, Cy Kendall, Yakima Canutt, Denny Meadows, Robert Kortman, Lloyd Ingram, Bud Pope, Tracy Layne, Etta McDaniel and Snowflake. Joseph Kane directed. In "Navy Born," directed by Nate Watt, are William Gargan, Claire Dodd, Claudia Coleman, Douglas Fowley, William Newell.

Columbia completed "Queer Money," a story of the counterfeiting racket. The cast lists Chester Morris, Margaret Grahame, Marian Marsh, Lloyd Nolan, Claude Gillingwater.

MGM's contribution to the completed roster is "Romeo and Juliet." It presents Norma Shearer, Leslie Howard, John Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, Maurice Murphy, C. Aubrey Smith, Reginald Denny, Basil Rathbone.

At Paramount "Early to Bed" was finished. Mary Boland and Charlie Ruggles are again teamed.

Universal's "Parole," completed, features Ann Preston, Henry Hunter, Alan Baxter, Noah Beery, Jr., Alan Dinehart, Alan Hale, Christian Rub, Grant Mitchell, Berton Churchill, Charles Richman and Zeffie Tilbury. Louis Freidlander directed.

On Location for "Allah"

Undoubtedly the most important of the starting pictures is Selznick International's "Garden of Allah," with work under way on location. The cast thus far includes Marlene Dietrich, Charles Boyer, Tilly Losch, Basil Rathbone, Joseph Shildkraut, Henry Kleinback and John Carradine. Being produced on a lavish scale, it will be in color. Richard Boleslawski is directing.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "To Mary with Love," adapted from a recent popular novel, went into work. It features Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Ian Hunter, Jean Dixon and Claire Trevor. John Cromwell is the director.

Two pictures were started at Warner. "On Secret Service," which Noel Smith directs, has Dick Foran, Paula Stone, Joseph King, Addison Richards, Eddie Shubert, Henry Otho and Tom Wilson. "The Bengal Killer" will present Barton MacLane, Warren Hull, Craig Reynolds, June Travis, Paul Graetz, Joseph Crehan and Marie Prevost. Louis King is directing.

Paramount also started two pictures. The cast for "Arizona Raiders" includes Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt, Johnny Downs, Raymond Hatton, Jane Rhodes and Grant Withers. James Hogan is directing. In the second picture, "Spendthrift," a Wanger production being directed by Raoul Walsh, are Mary Brian, Henry Fonda, Pat Patterson, George Barbier, June Brewster, Richard Carle, Spencer Charters and Edward Brophy.

FILM PROPAGANDA ISSUE IN DETROIT

Michigan Supreme Court's Decision Awaited on Status of Imported Russian Production

On the decision of the Michigan supreme court, expected early in June, on whether a Russian picture contains subversive propaganda, and whether such propaganda is immoral, rests the fate of probably all foreign films in Detroit.

In briefs filed last week, Detroit city officials contended that under the law the city censor can ban any film at his discretion under the broad interpretation of the words "indecent and immoral" and to preserve law and order. The Cinema Guild of Detroit, which appealed the ban, argued that the censor had no discretion to reject a Russian film merely because it was made in the Soviet Union, even though it may be considered propaganda.

The appeal raises a number of points which, in their clarification by the supreme court, will be of importance to the motion picture industry. While the industry has adopted a "hands off" policy in the fight, the film companies are interested in the outcome because of the chief issue involved, namely, how wide a discretion the local censor may exercise in banning a picture.

Up to Police Commissioner

The censor ordinance, which was passed in 1926 at the instance of local exhibitors to avoid playing certain films, gives the police commissioner the power to bar any picture if in his judgment it is indecent or immoral.

Raymond J. Kelly, corporation counsel, and Nathaniel H. Goldstick, assistant corporation counsel, in their brief contended that the police commissioner may declare any picture indecent or immoral if it is "contrary to the public welfare," a definition of "immorality" they cited from the Standard Dictionary.

They maintained before the supreme court, and brought legal authority to show, that the commissioner's judgment is final and cannot be reviewed, and that the Cinema Guild failed to prove a case of flagrant abuse of the official's discretion to justify interference by the courts.

In opposition, the cinema group, which was prevented from opening its season last fall when "Youth of Maxim" was banned, set forth these contentions:

1. The local censor may not invoke grounds not specified in the ordinance.
2. Under the censor law police officials have no right to pronounce a picture immoral because of political, economic "or other considerations wholly unconnected with indecency."
3. The lower court erred in ruling that a police officer is authorized to suppress a film because he believes such action would preserve public peace and order.

Police Commissioner Heinrich A. Pickert, who is defendant in the case, in his answer to the petition for an injunction sought by the Guild, said: " 'The Youth of Maxim' is immoral for the reason that same is pure Soviet propaganda and is likely to instill class hatred and hatred of the existing government and social order of the United States."

During the trial in the Wayne County circuit court, witnesses expressed different opinions, though the preponderance of the testimony was that the picture contains or might impress an audience with revolutionary ideas.

Commissioner Pickert relied on a ruling of the Minnesota supreme court which upheld the mayor of Minneapolis, who had banned "The Birth of a Nation" for fear of inciting racial feeling. Without passing on the advisability of the exhibition, the court held that as a public official the mayor exercised proper discretion under the law.

Guild Raises Freedom Issue

The Cinema Guild's brief raised the issue of freedom of speech, and declared: "The true objection, as stated by each of the witnesses for respondent, and also in the respondent's answer, was in fact that the picture was made in Russia.

"If under the guise of a censorship based on indecency we may go so far as to object to a picture merely because it shows life under a different system of government, where is the censorship to end? Pictures made in Russia, Germany or Italy would be barred, because in each of these we find a form of government which is objectionable to a large part of the people in this country. Pictures made in England are objectionable because that country has a king. Pictures made in or showing life in Spain would be barred, for that country is in the course of a revolution.

Say Answer Is Obvious

"The censor in Detroit might well bar the showing of films made in Louisiana, or even the showing of films explaining the doctrine of Michigan's own Father Coughlin. And since the Townsend Plan traces its source to southern California, the home of the moving picture industry, why should we not prevent the showing of all these films?

"The answer to this question is obvious. It was never the intention of the city council to leave such unbridled discretion in the hands of any one man."

Doubt U. S. Supreme Court Appeal

If the supreme court does not reverse the decision of the lower court, it is doubtful if the fight will be carried further. The only review beyond the state supreme court is in the United States supreme court, which may be appealed to only when a question of federal law is involved. Fred G. Dewey, counsel for the Guild, said this week he did not believe there was a question of federal law in the case and he doubted if he could obtain leave to appeal to the highest court.

If the decision is reversed, it is very probable that the American Legion and other organizations responsible for the fight to keep Soviet propaganda out of this country will bring pressure to bear on the Detroit city council to amend the ordinance so as to make possible the banning of foreign films which are or are alleged to be subversive of American institutions or otherwise considered objectionable.

Attorneys for the industry in New York pointed out that the United States supreme court has determined that local officials have the authority to exercise police powers in such matters.

PUBLIC PRESSURE HELD FILM STANDARD GAUGE

Censorship of motion pictures fails to sift the desirable from the undesirable, Professor E. R. Bartlett of DePauw University, declared at the annual convention of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays in Indianapolis. He said that public pressure for improved technique leads directly to better films.

Virtually all officers were reelected. They are Mrs. R. Earl Peters of Fort Wayne, president; Mrs. W. D. Keenan of Indianapolis, first vice-president; Mrs. J. M. Thistlewaite of Sheridan, second vice-president; Mrs. Lee Waddell of Indianapolis, third vice-president; Mrs. Howard Rudeaux of Indianapolis, fourth vice-president; Mrs. B. J. Roberts of Fort Wayne, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Ferd Lucas of Greencastle, recording secretary; Mrs. David Ross of Indianapolis, chairman of the board. Mrs. J. R. Blayney of Fort Wayne was elected treasurer, succeeding Mrs. A. J. Hueber of Indianapolis.

Spear's Quintuplet Suit Is Dismissed

Ivan Spear's $1,000,000 suit for breach of contract naming Pathe News, Woolworth's and Kresge's in connection with the Dionne quintuplets was dismissed by Federal Judge Barnes in Chicago this week with leave to file an amended complaint within 20 days. Plaintiff claimed to hold an exclusive contract with parents of the children which he alleged was breached.

Rules No Reopening Of FWC Bankruptcy

Federal Judge James Alger Fee in Los Angeles this week held that the Fox West Coast bankruptcy cannot be reopened. The ruling automatically dismisses the damage suit brought by T. L. Tally and the Corbar Corporation.

Goldstein Brothers Testimonial

A testimonial dinner for Nathan and Sam Goldstein, circuit operators, is set for the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston on May 5. The brothers, veteran theatremen in New England, recently took back 14 western Massachusetts houses which were being operated by the M. and F.-Publix group. Western Massachusetts Theatres, Inc., was organized to handle the theatres.

PLAYWRIGHT FIGHT BRINGS WORD OF $2,000,000 FILM BACKING FOR PLAYS

But Contributions Will Be Refused to Any Manager Signing Agreement Adopted by Dramatists' Guild

Sam Harris Sees Settlement Within Week of Dispute Over Sale of Picture Rights to Stage Plays

ACTORS' GUILD JOINS FEDERATION OF LABOR

Hollywood studio actors, whose earnings reputedly run as high as $10,000 a week, have placed themselves alongside hod carriers, "props" and laborers as members of the American Federation of Labor.

The Screen Actors Guild has been admitted as an affiliate of the Associated Actors and Artists of America, which takes in all branches of acting, including the legitimate stage, chorus, vaudeville, circus and burlesque. Through its affiliation with Actors' Equity Association it becomes a member of the AFL.

As the annual meeting of the "Four A'S" in New York, May 8, will be the first at which the screen actors will be seated, it is regarded as likely that "one big union" of acting talent and studio closed shop will be on the agenda.

Settlement of the playwright-manager dispute over the sale of motion picture rights to stage productions was considered near this week as a small but important group of Broadway managers attempted to conciliate the differences which have arisen as a result of Hollywood financing of Broadway.

This turn followed several developments bringing the fight to a climax, chief of which was the issuance of a minimum basic agreement by the League of New York Theatres, with 75 managers pledged to abide by it and not to use the agreement adopted by the Dramatists' Guild.

Film companies informed the managers that upwards of $2,000,000 would be available for play backing next season but contributions would be refused any manager signing the Guild agreement.

Despite another blast from Sidney Howard, Guild president, who is leading the fight for the authors, an amicable solution of the dispute was foreseen by Sam H. Harris "within a week." Others active in the conciliation move are Arthur Hopkins, George Abbott, Philip Dunning and Laurence Schwab, who are authors as well as producing-managers.

Combination Contract

In releasing its printed contract late last week, the League of New York Managers noted that its release had been planned 10 days earlier, but a promise of negotiation at that time caused postponement.

"The managers by the issuance of this contract do not preclude the possibility of negotiating their differences with the authors," said a League statement.

The League contract covering the acquirement of plays for production is a combination of the basic agreement which expired February 29 and which divided film royalties equally between playwright and manager, the new basic agreement issued by the Guild which most producers have refused to sign, and features suggested by recent changes in the producing field.

"The most vital change," said the League, "has to do with the rules governing the sale of motion picture rights and the disposition of proceeds from these sales. The wholesale backing of play production by motion picture companies during the past few years brought about a new condition of affairs in that frequently the producer's interest became so merged with that of the picture company that an open market for the sale of picture rights was destroyed and prices were curtailed."

Plays Classified

In an effort to correct this, the managers' contract divides plays into two classifications—those independently financed and those financed in whole or in part by motion picture companies. Rules governing the sale of picture rights in the former classification are the same as those in the last contract, that is, through an arbiter in a free market. Whenever a motion picture company is directly or indirectly financially interested in producing a play, the manager must notify the author. Failure to do so causes the manager to forfeit his share of the picture rights proceeds. It is assumed that even if the manager were derelict in his duty the picture company, having an interest at stake, would attend to the notification.

"Three options of sale so elastic that they present six methods are offered the author in the event of motion picture backing. The first option embraces three methods as follows:

"1. An outright agreement for sale and purchase at a stipulated price in advance of production.

"2. The same, except that in addition to the price there may be an additional payment based on the number of weeks of the run.

"3. For a sum to be measured by the number of weeks of the run.

"The second option confers upon the author the right to stipulate the sum he may receive for the rights. This would give the author a preference over the producer in the event that his share of the stipulated price should prove to be more than that of the sale price. The producer, in this instance, would have to be prepared to sacrifice a part of his share in order to make the production with picture finances.

"Under the third option the price would in effect be an arbitrated price fixed by the author, the manager and the arbiter. The company financing the production would have first chance at the picture rights at this price. If it failed to exercise the option the rights would be placed in the open market. If there is still no sale the author, producer and arbiter again agree on a price and the operation is repeated.

"The managers have made no attempt in their contract to deprive the author of the ownership of his rights. As a matter of fact the dramatists established this five years ago and under the last contract the producer merely participated in the proceeds from the sale of those rights. In the new Guild contract, however, the manager is given no right to receive his share of the motion picture money. The only provision therefore is languaged to the effect that the author shall direct the negotiator to pay to the manager a percentage, if any. The manager is prohibited from taking any part in making a sale of rights and the slightest participation on his part might place him in bad standing, in which event the author would not have to pay him anything. This has been remedied in the managers' contract.

"The authors' share of the proceeds from all rights, a disputed point in the controversy, is left open to individual negotiation with the proviso that in no case shall the producers' share exceed 50 per cent. Under this arrangement an author could retain for himself 100 per cent of the picture rights."

The League pointed out that no mention of the Dramatists' Guild is made in the agreement since it has refused to recognize any agreement but its own, and adds "in the event of successful negotiations between the two groups the contract would then be drawn between them."

The Dramatists' Guild immediately charged that the League's agreement was a sell-out to the motion picture industry, and on Broadway that suspicion was strengthened by the fact that with the League's announcement the film companies began announcing that they would back no plays under the Guild's terms.

Richard Aldrich, in charge of Columbia's stage production activities, told a meeting of the League that picture companies' appropriations of more than $2,000,000 for stage financing will not be available to Guild agreement signatories, and that Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, had authorized him to invest $250,000 in play production next season, excluding managers subscribing to the Guild's agreement.

Brock Pemberton, chairman of the League's contract committee, said he had received similar declarations from other companies. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announced through its vice-president and counsel, J. Robert Rubin, withdrawal of backing from managers signing the dramatists' agreement, the chief objection, he said, being to the clause which retains all voice in the disposition of film rights to the author. He said the manager is not "fairly treated" by the terms of the Guild's agreement. Russell Holman, eastern story editor for Paramount, and Jacob Wilk, manager of Warner's story department, issued statements taking the same position, as did Twentieth Century-Fox. Samuel Goldwyn is the only film producer announcing that he sides with the dramatists.

Cites Fox Plan of 10 Years Ago

The film companies' stand, said Mr. Howard, "is not surprising in view of the fact that the motion picture clause of the Theatre League's contract is in substance a reproduction of the original scheme proposed 10 years ago by the old Fox company to deprive the author of his picture market." On the other hand, the Guild president said, "talks between leading motion picture producers and the group of managers who have been cooperating with us in our efforts to settle the present situation assure us that our own plans for selling the screen rights to our plays are satisfactory to Hollywood and will stimulate rather than retard motion picture investment in the theatre."

Butterfield Rites Held in Michigan

Representatives from every branch of the industry in Michigan and from other states last Thursday afternoon paid final tribute to Colonel W. S. Butterfield, head of the circuit of theatres bearing his name, when they thronged to Battle Creek to attend services for the veteran exhibitor who died in Boston last week Monday.

The Masonic Temple, in which a simple Christian Science service was read, was filled with more than 1,000 of his associates, film leaders, exhibitors and others. Managers of all Butterfield theatres, which remained closed until 7 p.m., were present to pay their respects, as were many from the Detroit headquarters. Hundreds of floral pieces were in the temple.

The pallbearers were George S. Berger and J. O. Brooks of the Detroit office; Lawrence Gordon, attorney; Glenn A. Cross, Kalamazoo exhibitor; and S. J. Rathbun, Dr. Hugh Conklin, Sommers Ceeshman, Wendell L. Smith and Donald P. Ordway. Burial was in Woodlawn Cemetery, near Battle Creek.

Modern Library Ends Show Series

The Museum of Modern Art Film Library will have the New York showing of its fifth program of motion pictures in a series entitled "A Short Survey of the Film in America," on May 5-6, at 8:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the Dalton School. Admission will be by card only, issued to members of the Museum of Modern Art.

The fifth program, under the general title of "The Talkies," will consist of early sound films including scenes from "The Jazz Singer," "Steamboat Willie," an interview with George Bernard Shaw, the first Mickey Mouse and the nine-reel version of "All Quiet on the Western Front."

This program will close the library's first series, and plans are being drawn up now for the second season scheduled to begin in October. John E. Abbott, director of the Film Library, and Miss Iris Bary, its curator, sail May 16 for Europe to obtain foreign pictures for the collection.

Aubrey Schenck Joins National

Aubrey Schenck, nephew of Joseph M. and Nicholas Schenck, and until recently with O'Brien, Driscoll and Raftery, has joined the legal staff of National Theatres under William T. Powers. New offices are being constructed for National Theatre executives at the Twentieth Century-Fox home office in Manhattan.

Warner Relinquishes State

Warner has relinquished its $40,000-a-year lease on the State theatre at Hartford, Conn., damaged by the recent floods, and the house has been taken over by Harris Brothers, Passaic, N. J., owners, who will continue renting it four days a week to the WPA repertory project.

ACTORS ASK SHARE IN PLAY PROCEEDS

The proposal of Actors' Equity Association that actors should share in the proceeds of play sales to motion picture companies was "temporarily tabled" by the council on Tuesday.

Equity explained that the suggestion had been made by Alexandra Carlisle, a member of the council, who died late last week. The proposal may be taken up later if someone thinks of it.

The proposal caused considerable amusement on Broadway, and Brock Pemberton suggested that the idea could be carried out further in permitting stage hands, scenic designers and even the audience to share in the proceeds, as all contribute to the success of a play.

AMPA Elects 1936 Officers

Meeting in annual session on Thursday afternoon, at New York's Hotel Astor, members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers swept into office an executive slate headed by Gordon White, their president, to govern the organization in 1936-37. Attempts previously made to effect independent nominations were unsuccessful.

Nominated by the general committee for election were: Charles Leonard, vice-president; Ralph Lund, secretary; Herbert Spencer Berg, treasurer, and William R. Ferguson, trustee. Mr. Berg and Mr. Ferguson are reelected.

The new board of directors is composed of Tom Waller, George Gerhard, Milton Silver, S. Barret McCormick, Monroe Greenthal and the officers.

Joseph Bill to Governor

The Joseph bill allowing cities in New York state to pass local laws permitting children unaccompanied by parent or guardian to attend motion picture theatres was passed by the Assembly and sent to the Governor on Tuesday. The measure provides that children so admitted must be segregated and a matron placed in charge. It does not prevent children from attending theatres when accompanied by parent or guardian as at present, but sets up new provisions governing attendance of children unaccompanied.

Hollywood Film Files

Filing of a registration statement by Hollywood Film Industries, Inc., of Wilmington, Del., covering an offer to brokers and security dealers of 80,000 shares of Class A stock of $1 par value and 20,000 shares of Class B, same par value, in units of four shares of Class A and one of Class B at $5 per unit, was made known this week in Washington by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Republic Meeting Set for Chicago

Republic Pictures Corporation will hold its national convention in Chicago June 5-6 and will increase its production and advertising budgets by 35 per cent for the coming season.

Announcement to this effect was made this week in Kansas City by W. Ray Johnston, president, after a two-day conference with Nat Levine, head of production; M. J. Seigel, treasurer of the producing unit, and Edward Schnitzer, Sam Horowitz, J. J. Milstein and Herman Gluckman.

Fifty-two features are scheduled for the coming season. They will include eight specials, 24 "Box-Office" attractions, four outdoor films in color, two Gene Autry specials, six Autry musical westerns, eight westerns with a new star not yet chosen, and four serials.

Republic will try to discover and develop new acting and writing talent, it was stated, searching for it in Works Progress Administration theatres, stock companies and magazines.

National Decency Legion Classifies 14 New Pictures

Of 14 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its list for the current week, five are approved for general patronage, eight for adult patronage and one is cited as objectionable in part.

The new pictures and their classifications follow: Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage—"The Country Beyond," "Desert Justice," "O'Malley of the Mounted," "Special Investigator," "Three on the Trail." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults—"Amateur Gentleman," "Das Erbe in Pretoria," "I Married a Doctor," "The Last Journey," "L'Homme des Folies Bergeres," "Lorenzino de Medici," "Times Square Playboy," "Under Two Flags." Class B, Objectionable in Part—"Peg of Old Drury."

Larsen to Speak

Roy E. Larsen, producer of The March of Time on the screen, was to address the members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies in their annual meeting at White Sulphur Springs, Va., on Thursday, discussing The March of Time on the air, with which he has been closely associated since its inception five years ago.

Effective with the next issue, to be released May 15, "March of Time" will be issued 13 times a year, instead of the present 12. Under the new schedule there will be a release every four weeks, eliminating the five-week periods which come three times a year, and which are said to have caused confusion.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The story of King Solomon carving a baby in half and of the magician sawing a lady in two have their modern counterpart in Tampa, Fla., where the subject of the halving process is an automobile that was won at a motion picture theatre.

The Broadway theatre at Tampa offered a $1,000 automobile as a prize in a raffle. During the coupon-giving-out period several of the said coupons were collected by a trio, consisting of a man, his wife and sister.

And it came to pass, as the King Solomonites would say, that on the eve of the drawing said husband and said wife came to the parting of the ways, the wife filing suit for a divorce. However, when the date of the award arrived, the wife and husband were there—not together—and, lo and behold, one of the three tickets held by the wife for herself, her husband and sister, won the prize. The wife proceeded to collect the car, but the husband liked it too—and took it on the spot, figuring that possession is nine-tenths of the law. Friend wife did not enthuse over this, and immediately filed another suit against him, this time for possession of the bus.

The case came up the other day before Circuit Judge Parks, who, after hearing all about the several tickets, and the fact that no one knew whose ticket was whose, decided that the car would have to be cut into equal parts and so divided.

Even the camels in Hollywood have a sense of the dramatic. The other day a Columbia camel named Camille, of the Arabian species camelus dromedarius, threw consternation and surprise into the ranks of the "Lost Horizon" company, when she walked off the set and did a little producing of her own. While cameras stopped grinding, actors stopped acting and Harry Cohn's assistants tore their hair frantically in despair, Camille placidly and proudly gave birth to a Camilia, a bouncing, ungainly and unsteady camelus dromedarius cherub of some 20 pounds. On hand to greet the young lady on her arrival were Ronald Colman, Isabel Jewel and Edward Everett Horton. Frank Capra directed.

Producer Bobby North in Hollywood tells of the late David Belasco's favorite method for whipping actors into the spirit he wanted. He would proudly exhibit what he claimed was a watch just presented to him—an expensive affair, with a diamond-studded case. Then he would continue with the rehearsal. Suddenly he would halt the proceedings, tear his hair frantically, wave his arms wildly, and shriek, "What are you—mechanical dolls? Give me something—give me something from your heart—I can't bear this." And then, at the height of his frenzy, he would take the watch and smash it against the wall. It always worked. Only a few ever knew that the smashed watch was not the expensive gift, but a dollar ticker which he carried in another pocket for just such a situation.

So It Wasn't the NRA After All

Paul Schechter, chicken plucker and chicken dealer, in Brooklyn, charged last year that the NRA was putting him out of business. So he pitted his chickens against Hugh Johnson's Blue Eagle, in the arena of the United States Supreme Court, and put the NRA out of business. Now the chicken feathers are flying the way the Blue Eagle's feathers flew, for Schechter is out of business, too, voluntarily filing a petition in bankruptcy, on liabilities of $18,066 and assets of $225.

If we can locate Hugh Johnson and Sol Rosenblatt we will tell them about it. And Frances Robinson, too.

It is well known that Shirley Temple, age seven on last Thursday afternoon, is known on Fox's Movietone lot as "One Take" Temple. She never misses. Her keen sense for rhythm, dialogue and performance makes her first shot the right shot.

What isn't so well known is that little Miss Temple is pretty good on the business end, too—thanks to Whitney Bolton for the information. Shirley makes from $40 to $400 extra on each picture betting adult members of the cast on "blowups." Thurston said that after he died he was going to smash the case and throw the idol at Dunninger. In that way Dunninger would know Thurston's ghost was thereabouts.

Love Begins at 20

(Warner)

Comedy Romance

In this production, which is an adaptation of a Martin Flavin stage play situation comedy, is the basis for amusing entertainment. Though it has a romantic contrast, it actually is the story of a wormlike, henpecked husband who, under the lash of his wife's vitriolic tongue and aided and abetted by a few drinks, turns into a raging lion who takes great pleasure in beating up a tough gangster. As comedy is its principal ingredient, it features two comedians, Hugh Herbert, now in "One Rainy Afternoon," and Hobart Cavanaugh. Youthful romantic love interest is taken care of by Warren Hull and Patricia Ellis, who were featured together in "Freshman Love." Other players are Dorothy Vaughn, Mary Treen, Clarence Wilson and Robert Gleckler.

The story tells what happened to henpecked Herbert when bandit Gleckler robs him of some bonds that are the property of his hardboiled boss, Clarence Wilson. As Herbert has a kindly feeling for Hull, who is in love with elder daughter Patricia Ellis, he doesn't mind enjoying a convivial drink with him while his wife and daughter are away. Then action moves into a uniformed lodge meeting where, with gangster, boss and pals present, things happen at rapid-fire pace. Herbert is arrested for carrying the bonds which Gleckler has slipped back into his pocket. As both land in jail, Horatio, exuberant despite all that has happened to him, gives Gleckler a thorough thrashing to force a confession, makes himself the town's hero and wins a partnership in Wilson's firm.

Being directed by Frank McDonald, the story concentrates on amusing situations. The character of its fun has definite appeal, and there's the quality of the cast in addition for general audiences.

Suicide Club

(MGM)

Romantic Mystery

Name value which this production provides in the way of players, author and title credits, should be provocative of quite a bit of audience and showmanship interest. In Robert Louis Stevenson's story of adventure, romance, comedy, thrills, drama and suspense, it presents Robert Montgomery, last in "Petticoat Fever," and Rosalind Russell, seen in "Rendezvous" and featured in the forthcoming "Under Two Flags," in the leading roles. It supports them with two of the stars of "The Great Ziegfeld," Frank Morgan and Reginald Owen, and rounds out a well balanced cast by the inclusion of E. E. Clive, Louis Hayward, Walter Kingsford, Ivan Simpson, and David Holt and Virginia Wildler, who play the roles of Montgomery and Miss Russell as children.

The story is of a mythical kingdom, with romance, drama, adventure and comedy. Despite its title it is not a horror story; rather it is one of Stevenson's most popular works of romantic fiction. A young prince and princess battle during the youthful years. When they grow up, each still uninterested in the other, are to be married for political reasons. They run away from each other and as the sustaining elements mingle romance with adventure, comedy with drama and mystery with suspense, they become members of a suicide club. The girl selected to kill the boy saves him. He is compelled to fight a duel with his father's political enemy. Winning, he returns to court to marry the girl, still carrying out the pretense that it is love at first sight.

Being given the benefit of production scope commensurate with the worth of the prestige of the author and the principal players, the production looms as one of the out-of-the-ordinary romance dramas for the spring and early summer season.

The Singing Cowboy

(Republic)

Comedy Drama

This picture will start and finish in typical western fashion. But what happens in the meantime is something new to this form of screen entertainment. It is a departure that probably will lift the feature out of the ordinary routine and cause it to be more talked about than is the usual outdoor action adventure picture.

Two partners in a gold mine quarrel. One contrives to bring about the other's death. At the same time the victim's little daughter is seriously injured. The hero is named guardian of the child. To get money to pay for an operation on her, he organizes his cowboy pals into a hillbilly orchestra and plans television radio broadcasts. Gaining success and his purpose becoming known, he brings down upon himself the wrath of the villain. As a battle to disrupt the television broadcast equipment takes place, the singing cowboys capture the bad man and his gang. Proving his complicity in the murder and injury, title to the mine reverts to the little girl and it is possible to negotiate a loan to insure the operation.

Based on an original by Tom Gibson, the screen play is by Dorrell and Stuart McGowan. Direction is by Mack Wright, who has made many Republic westerns. Songs are by Smiley Burnette and Oliver Drake.

Principals are Gene Autry as the hero, Lon Chaney, Jr., as the heavy and Ann Gilles as the young girl. Others who will be seen are Lois Wilde, Earl Hodgins, Harvey Clark, Keen Cooper, Snoflake and a large number of western character actors.

White Fang

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

The producers suggest that this picture be publicized as the sequel to "Call of the Wild." The reasons are plain. Both stories are by Jack London. Both move to the same dramatic action adventure and romance contrasted tempo. Last summer "Call of the Wild" proved to be popular entertainment.

The story is drama of the frozen north, written in typical Jack London punchy style. Two boys set out to find a gold mine. They endure the tortures of Arctic winter. One, driven to desperation, takes the easiest way out. A wolf saves the other's life. The survivor, assuming the identity of his dead companion, reaches the mine. With the coming of spring the dead boy's sister returns to Alaska. Romance develops, but there is the drama of crime and conspiracy as the survivor is accused of murder. His life is saved from lynchers by White Fang, who brings the girl and aroused miners to the scene.

Michael Whelan, seen in "Professional Soldier" and "Country Doctor," and Jean Muir, remembered among other pictures for "Oil for the Lamps of China," are the leads. The supporting cast includes John Carradine, currently in "Prisoner of Shark Island" and "Under Two Flags," Slim Summerville, Charles Winninger soon to be seen in "Showboat," Jane Darwell, Thomas Beck, Joseph Herrick, George Humbert, Marie Chorie and the dog hero of "Call of the Wild," Lightning.

With screen play by Gene Fowler, Hal Long and S. G. Duncan, direction is by David Butler, maker of several Will Rogers and Shirley Temple pictures.

Fer de Lance

(Columbia)

Dramatic Mystery

This B. P. Schulberg production brings Nero Wolfe, celebrated fictionary detective character, to the screen. The personality has been the subject of several Rex Stout short stories which have appeared in popular magazines as well as many book length novels.

The theme is unusual dramatic mystery. While it follows the many suspects formula, it moves to an air of difference and novelty that promises to set it apart from the regular mystery. As the dramatic character continually is concentrated upon, there is an acceptable romantic love interest contrast, but the picture's comedy is provoked by audience reaction to Wolfe's dialogue, methods of crime solution, action and habits. As the story reads, it appears to have sufficient mystery quality to defy advance solution either of the killer's identity or the motive for his many attempted and accomplished crimes.

To interpret the role of the rotund Nero Wolfe, Schulberg has selected Edward Arnold, whose recent interpretations of "Diamond Jim Brady" and Johan Sutter in "Sutter's Gold" have established him as one of the screen's forecast character actors. The supporting cast is made up entirely of familiar names. It presents Lionel Stander, remembered particularly for his work in "The Milky Way;" Joan Perry, Victor Jory, Nana Bryant, Dennie Moore, Russell Hardie, Walter Kingsford, Thurston Hall, John Qualen, Gene Morgan, Rita Cansino and Frank Conroy.

The screen play for the Stout story is credited to Howard J. Green, Bruce Manning and Joseph Anthony. Direction was by Herbert Biberman.

their success in several pictures, notably "Six of a Kind," "Pursuit of Happiness" and "Ruggles of Red Gap." The character of the story, goofy comedy, which has been chosen for their reunion, is looked upon as one that will give both unusual opportunities to exercise their fun-making talents. In it the stars are sweethearts; they've been going together for 20 years. Ruggles never has popped the question, because he has a terrible affliction—he's a sleep walker. But under the spur of the promise of a big bonus, the glass-eye salesman marries. Going in search of a big order, he lands it loses it and lands it again. He doesn't do so, however, before he becomes involved in a hilarious mystery, menacing intrigue, robbery, murder and exciting expense. All of it takes place while he is sleep walking.

The story is an original by Lucien Littlefield and Chandler Sprague, with screen play by Arthur Kober. Direction is by Norman McLeod, who specializes in comedy production.

Principal supports to Ruggles and Miss Boland include quite a coterie of known screen names such as George Barbier, Robert McWade, Sidney Blackmer, Gail Patrick, Helen Flint, Lucien Littlefield, Arthur Hoyt, Colin Tapley and Billy Gilbert. Among the many who have minor parts are Dorothy Christie, Frank Darien, Brooks Benedict, June Gittelson and William Irving.

Queer Money

(Columbia)

Drama

The counterfeiting racket which is the basis for this picture's drama, romance and thrill action seems to be a subject in which there is unusual interest. Criminals deprived of the lush profits of pre-repeal days have turned to the manufacture of queer money on a scale that is and has brought the racket forcibly to the attention of both the public and the federal government.

In this story, which is an original by William Rankin on which Bruce Manning collaborated in screen play preparation, the subject, approached from a dramatic-romantic standpoint, is traced in all its many ramifications. While it is a picturization of the government's attempt to break up a notorious counterfeiting ring it also is the story of an undercover operative and a girl who is the innocent tool of a cruel and resourceful racketeer brain. Majoring on action adventure, it takes the operative into the inside of the counterfeiting ring, supposedly making him a ruthless killer, and as he falls in love with the girl, he finds himself in the spot where he is ordered to kill her lest she betray gang confidences. Building to a thrill climax, various forces of the government converge to trap the ringleader as the undercover man saves the girl.

Chester Morris, currently in "Moonlight Murder," plays the lead role with Marian Marsh as the girl decoy about whom the adventurous love interest rotates. Lloyd Nolan is the counterfeiter king. Other players include Margot Grahame, Claude Gillingwater, George McKay, John Gallaudet, Gene Morgan, Pierre Watkins and Marc Lawrence.

The picture is being directed by Erle Kenton.

The Lonely Trail

(Republic)

Action Drama

While this production is essentially western adventure with a dramatic and romantic counterpart, it uses the thematic background of Reconstruction days in Texas for its action. As the story details the events and incidents when, following the close of the Civil War, northern carpetbag politicians and military racketeers swooped down on the stricken South, it has a certain historical significance. This element, however, is of secondary importance to the straight story which it tells. In that, the hero, who out at the outbreak of war had deserted his Southern friends to fight for the North, returns to find his friends and their homes at the mercy of a soldier politician. Distrusted by his old friends, his former fiancee having nothing but the utmost hatred for him, he is unable to rally any support in his effort to rout the carpetbaggers. Joining a troop of guerillas, he frustrates a raid on the girl's home. In the action he is wounded and captured as a traitor by their leader. As the girl comes to see that he was working for their good, she brings the governor of the state to the scene, rounds up the farmers and ranchers, and in a fierce battle frees the hero and wipes out the raiders.

The story is an original by Bernard McConville, who collaborated on the screen play with Jack Natteford. Direction is by Joseph Kane.

John Wayne is featured in the leading role, with Ann Rutherford as the girl. The leader of the land-grabbing invaders is Cy Kendall. Other players include Robert Kortman, Yakima Canutt, Denny Meadows, Jim Toney, Lloyd Ingram, Jack Kirk, Bud Pope, Tex Phelps, Tracy Layne, Clyde Kennedy, Etta McDaniel, Snowflake and Floyd Shackelford.

Hot Money

(Warner)

Comedy with Romance

Modern topical comedy is the substance of this production, which seems to have the elements in story content situation and action comedy that make for high amusement. It's about an odd character and his odd invention, a cheap but highly efficient substitute for gasoline. In that brief description the basic showmanship is evident. The compound works all right, but there are certain complications in its promotion and marketing that, in addition to entailing a romantic contrast to the basic comedy, bring on light but exciting drama as the Department of Justice and Better Business Bureau, plus a pair of very terrible gangsters descend upon the promoter. Only the lucky break having the substitute actually work saves the situation.

The story is an original by William Jacobs, who also did the screen play. Direction is by William McGann.

While most of the cast are familiar names, one new but not entirely unknown actor, Paul Graetz, is introduced in an important role. A former protege of Max Reinhardt, starred in many German-made pictures, American audiences saw him in "Mr. Cohen Takes a Walk," which Warner made at its British studio. An accomplished comedy character performer, he appears to have the fun-making talents that appeal to domestic audiences.

Other players who are featured are Ross Alexander as an ex-convict now an enthusiastic stock selling promoter; Beverly Roberts, who made her debut in "The Singing Kid" with Al Jolson; Joseph Cawthorne, now in "Ziegfeld" and "One Rainy Afternoon," and Andrew Tombes. Players who will be seen in minor character and supporting parts are Mary Treen, Cy Kendall, Frank Orth, Joe Cunningham, Eddie Conrad, Harry Burns, Addison Richards, R. Emmett Keane, Milt Kibbee and Harry Hayden.

Navy Born

(Republic)

Drama

Although the title intimates it and there is quite a bit of naval atmosphere in the feature, this is not the garden variety of navy pictures. Rather, with a vein of romance woven in and plenty of action taking place all the time, it is drama for possession of an orphan baby. The child's mother has died and the father, before he is killed, requests his flying buddy to care for the child and in any event keep his in-laws from getting control of the foundling.

As the drama of a shrewd battle of wits ensues, with the hero bound to keep his promise to his departed buddy, and the girl fully intent that the youngster shall be removed from rough-and-ready naval influences, the stage is set for much unusual comedy and a romantic love interest contrast when, in the finale, the baby is kidnaped from its aunt only to have the naval air forces take off after the gangster and to the tune of a thrilling air chase have the baby recovered and love dawn for the battling guardians.

The character of story promising better than average entertainment, casting seems to be of a similar grade. The three principals are William Gragan, Claire Dodd and Georgia Caine. The support includes several players of known name value such as George Irving, Addison Randall, Douglas Fowley, William Newell, Claudia Coleman and Dorothy Tree. Additionally Myra and Charles Marsh, Larry Stears, Hooper Atchley and Douglas Wood will be seen.

The story is an original by Mildred Cram, adapted by Marcus Goodrich, with screen play by Albert DeMond and Olive Cooper. Nate Watt, long time assistant director of many important pictures, is making his first picture on his own responsibility.

U.S. Films Hold Prestige In Imports by Hollanders

by J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

American product is holding its position of prestige in the Holland market in the face of a general decrease in use of foreign-made pictures during the past year. Import figures for the twelve months, just published, show that the decline of imports was most noticeable in German product, though it was felt in the totals from France, England and the United States. However, whereas German films fell from 306 in 1934 to 218 last year, imports from America declined from 858 to 819. French product registered 210 last year as against 261 the year before.

Columbia Sales Heads Convene

Columbia Pictures on Tuesday, in New York, held the first of a two-day preconvention sales meeting, attended by home office sales executives, headed by sales manager, A. Montague and the company's division managers. Present from the home office were: Jack Cohn, vice president; A. Schneider, treasurer; J. A. McConville, Rube Jackter, Lou Weinberg, Louis Astor, Max Weisfeldt and Leo Jaffe. The district managers included Sam Moscow, southern division; Nat Cohn, New York; C. H. Shalit, central; S. A. Galanty, eastern, and Max Roth, midwest.

A subsequent meeting will convene within two or three weeks.

Mr. Cohn, who had just returned from the coast, presented the latest developments in future production plans.

The purpose of the early gatherings is to give the division supervisors an opportunity to discuss and participate in establishing a new sales policy.

In line with a policy of vesting authority in a group, a sales cabinet has been functioning for the past two years, and to that sales cabinet is now being added the district control group.

Duovac & General Seek $37,850,000

General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation filed claims totaling $37,850,000 against Electrical Research Products, Inc., in the United States district court at Wilmington, Del.

These claims are for losses General Talking and Duovac say they suffered through alleged acts of Erpi, Western Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph Company in curbing competition in film production.

General Talking Pictures seeks $30,000,000, triple of its alleged damages of $10,000,000 and $250,000 lawyers' fees. Duovac says its injuries amounted to $2,500,000, but it is allowed triple damages under the anti-trust act bringing the total for Duovac to $7,500,000.

General Talking manufactures sound motion picture equipment and Duovac, no longer an active organization, had been manufacturing electrical devices, including vacuum tubes and photo electric cells.

There is pending in the United States district court at Wilmington, a decision of Judge John P. Nields in a suit of equity on the anti-trust allegations of General Talking and Duovac against Erpi, Western Electric and A. T. & T. The anti-trust trial of Erpi, Western and A. T. & T. charged with having built up a monopoly in the industry through a series of contracts with producers and exhibitors, opened before Judge Nields a year ago.

At the time it was charged restrictive agreements were: Tying agreement in the licenses or leases of Erpi to exhibitors whereby exhibitors agree to purchase from Erpi all repair and replacement parts for the reproducing apparatus and equipment leased by Erpi.

The exclusive agreements in the contractual letters accompanying the leases of Erpi to producers whereby producers agree to distribute films produced on the producing apparatus only to exhibitors supplied with Erpi reproducing apparatus and equipments. It is also charged that the exclusive agreements in the contractual letters require producers to refrain from distributing talking motion pictures to exhibitors who have not acquired reproducing equipment from Erpi.

Freedman Motion Denied

A motion to dismiss a claim for accounting in a suit against him by Pathe Film Corporation was denied to Harman B. Freedman by Justice John Carewe in New York supreme court April 23rd. The Pathe suit is for $5,000 on two notes in favor of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Freedman's account claim for $5,000 alleges that Pathe Exchange, Inc., wrongfully declined to extend aid to First Division Exchanges, Inc., to publicize and exploit six films produced by him.

RAPID STRIDES IN FILM TECHNIQUE REFLECTED AT SMPE CONVENTION

by BILL CROUCH

in Chicago

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers opened its Spring convention at the Edgewater Beach hotel, Chicago, on Monday. More than 150 delegates from all parts of the world were in attendance. From their discussions it appears that the motion picture is making rapid strides technically.

H. G. Tasker, president of the organization, gave the address of welcome. The Monday morning session was given over to reports of the convention, membership, papers and progress committees.

Monday noon, the delegates attended an informal luncheon, which had for its speakers Loran Gayton, chief engineer of the City of Chicago, who represented Mayor Edward J. Kelly, who was out of town; Jack Miller, of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, and W. M. Dewey, managing director of the Edgewater Beach Hotel.

Mr. Gayton welcomed the SMPE members to Chicago, as did Mr. Dewey. Mr. Miller said the exhibitors appreciated the work the organization was doing. He pointed out that the advent of sound came at a most opportune time and prevented what seemed to be an impending downfall of the motion picture business.

Mr. Miller also said that now was an opportune time for the introduction of something else of a revolutionary nature in the business. In a facetious mood he said that if it were in the line of television, he suggested that television engineers "take it easy," as he reported Illinois had a new law which allowed a "three day open season on television engineers, allowing one engineer to each exhibitor as the bag limit."

Monday afternoon was spent in listening to papers. Monday night a film program was offered with "Under Two Flags," a Twentieth Century-Fox production being the feature attraction. On Monday night it also was announced that the fall convention was set for Rochester, New York, and would be held October 12-15, inclusive.

Shearer Demonstration Delayed

Announcement also was made that the Douglas Shearer double channel sound reproducing system would not be demonstrated on Tuesday night, as planned. This announcement caused a great deal of disappointment as many of the delegates had looked forward to this part of the program. RCA Photophone had installed $2,500 worth of special equipment for the demonstration and the canceling of the showing made this arrangement useless. The Shearer system uses a method of transmission to reproduce sound just as it is heard by the human ear, thus giving the illusion of emanation from a very definite point on the screen.

The new equipment aims to enable one to hear a voice on the screen and be able to tell exactly where it comes from, even if from one person in a mob scene.

As a substitute for the Shearer demonstration Metro's "Small Town Girl" was shown to the delegates.

Wednesday morning was spent in a laboratory and projection session. Wednesday afternoon, the members of the various groups visited the Underwriters' Laboratories and other points of industrial interest, among which were: Burton Holmes Films, Inc., Bell and Howell Company, Chicago Film Laboratories, Inc., Da-Lite Screen Company, Inc., Motiograph, Inc., Herman A. DeVry, Inc., Holmes Projector Company, J. E. McAuley Mfg. Company, Jam Handy Pictures Corp., Jenkins and Adair, Inc., National Screen Service, Inc., Western Electric Company, Wilding Picture Productions, Inc., Society of Visual Education, Northwestern University.

Wednesday night the semi-annual banquet was held and was followed by an address on "Bringing the Movies down to Earth," by Prof. C. G. Croneis, of the department of geology of the University of Chicago. Dancing followed.

Thursday morning was spent in a slide film symposium and non-theatrical session. In the afternoon, the session was devoted to apparatus and equipment.

Richardson Demands "Action Needed"

Frank H. Richardson, editor of "The Blue Book School" for projectionists in Motion Picture Herald, stressed to the engineers the importance of excellence in projection, citing possible beneficial results to be realized through the cooperation of the SMPE. The opportunity for educational work with projectionists' organizations was described by Mr. Richardson and the manner in which such educational work might be financed and carried on effectively.

John G. Frayne, chairman of the SMPE's "Progress Committee," reported decided advances in both professional amateur cinematography in 1935, and in sound recording technique and equipment, as well as in sound reproducing systems for general theatrical usage. Mr. Frayne's committee cited as outstanding advancements last year: the new Kodachrome color film, the extension of the three-color Technicolor process to feature production, new polarizing filters introduced by Eastman, the development of gaseous conductors, "which threaten to revolutionize the field of lighting," new lens spots utilizing the Fresnel type in studios, and the development of the new push-pull method of recording.

C. Tuttle, chairman of the Screen Brightness Committee, placed before the convention the question of whether standardization of screen brightness is desirable at this time, and what should be the brightness level.

Progress on the study of frequency response characteristics of release prints made by the use of the committee's frequency reference standard was reported by P. H. Evans, chairman of the Sound Committee.

R. F. Mitchell, chairman of the Non-Theatrical Committee, reported that "tremendous advances in the use of 16 mm. sound prints are reported and the possibilities of this medium seem to be achieving wide recognition." He stressed the necessity for an SMPE 16 mm. sound test reel and some recommendations were listed for preferred practice in this field.

Other committee reports were made by W. C. Kunzman, chairman of the convention committee; E. R. Geib, membership committee; Harry Rubin, projection practice; J. G. Bradley, committee on preservation of film; J. A. Ball, committee on color.

Fall Convention Is Set for Rochester October 12-15; "Bringing Movies Down to Earth" Is Banquet Address

Explaining the progress to date of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library for the preservation and screening of historical films, John E. Abbott, director of the Museum, told the engineers that the college professors, members of art faculties, museum directors and students who have witnessed the first five programs released have, in the Museum's opinion, "acquired a totally new respect for an understanding for the motion picture medium."

M. F. Jameson and T. E. Shea, of Bell Telephone Laboratories, read a paper and gave a demonstration explaining the laws governing photoelectric cells and their method of operation.

Burton F. Miller, Warner Studios, Burbank, discussed "Harmonic Distortion in Variable Density Records," and was followed by G. A. Morton, of RCA, who described the construction and theory of operation of the electron image tube.

"The resolution of sound film records has been increased by the use of ultra violet light in recording and printing," declared G. L. Dimmick, of RCA.

C. M. Mugler, Hollywood acoustical engineer, explained a new innovation in architectural and acoustic design of the scoring stage installed in Columbia Pictures' studio. Mr. Mugler said that the new system, based on the "controlled reflections and diffusions of sound waves," discards the "live-and-dead-end" theory of acoustic design which has been greatly in use heretofore.

Acoustics for Sound Stages

Rules based on the preliminary experimental work to determine acoustic considerations and characteristics in constructing sound stages were given by D. P. Loqe, of Erpi in Hollywood, for the avoidance of poor quality where it is deemed necessary to use more than one microphone for pickup purposes.

H. Pfannenstiehl, E. O. Scriven and J. F. D. Hoge, of Bell Laboratories, described the structure and the workings of a new sound reproducing system, to be marketed by Erpi, intended for use in theatres seating less than 600 persons.

Recent improvements in the variable width recording system used by RCA were dealt with in a paper by Barton Kreuzer, of RCA Manufacturing Company. Mr. Kreuzer's discussion was followed by an analysis of sound waves by Harry H. Hall, of Cruft Laboratory, Harvard University.

Matthew Luckiesh and Frank H. Moss, of General Electric, presented to the SMPE suggestions for "practical studies of the possibilities of evolving the lighting of the motion picture screen and its environs from its present primitive stage of purely localized lighting which is generally undesirable."

R. R. Farnham and R. E. Worstell, of General Electric, discussed the advantages of concentrating the source of gas-filled incandescent lamps.

The present trend in the application of the carbon arc to the needs of the motion picture industry is toward more extensive use of the high intensity arc, both in the theatre and in production, according to W. C. Kalb, of National Carbon Company.

Photoelectric exposure meters now enable the cameraman to determine proper exposure "with originality" instead of through "stereotype instructions or the need of considerable experimentation," according to a paper by W. T. Williams, of Weston Electrical Instrument Corporation.

A film emulsion for making direct duplicates of prints in a single step was explained by W. Barth and F. Schoeck, of Agfa Ansco, the new emulsion making use of the solarization effect "for the first time in practical photography."

Industry Scored on Projectors

A. J. Holman, of East Orange, N. J., chided both producers and exhibitors for their lack of interest in good projection.

The hazards in the handling or storage of cellulose nitrate motion picture film are due to the unusually low temperature of ignition of the film, its extremely rapid rate of combustion, and its ability of decomposing even in a restricted supply of oxygen with the evolution of explosive and poisonous gasses, declared A. H. Nuckolss and A. F. Matson, of Uniderwriters' Laboratories, Chicago.

Available light on the theatre screen is increased 30 per cent by a new 13.6 mm high intensity carbon which, according to D. B. Joy, of National Carbon Company, will burn at currents as high as 190 amperes.

The development of slide-film stereopticons was described by Marie Witham, of the Society for Visual Instruction, Chicago.

"Because of the rapidly increasing popularity of slide films and the small demand for glass lantern slides, the extension service of the United States Department of Agriculture is now preparing all its new illustrated lectures on slide films only," declared C. H. Hanson, of the Agriculture Department.

The value of visual education was emphasized also by J. B. MacHarg, of Lawrence College, while pictorial values in advertising were explained by W. F. Kruse, of Bell and Howell.

Other papers included: "Photographic Race-Timing Equipment," by Fordyce Tuttle and C. H. Green, of Eastman Kodak; "Use of Motion Pictures in an Accurate System for Timing and Judging Horse Races," E. M. Honan, Electrical Research Products; "1,000-Watt 16mm. Filmosound," R. Fawn Mitchell and W. L. Herd, Bell and Howell; "Copper Oxide Rectifiers for Motion Picture Arc Supply," I. R. Smith and C. E. One Rainy Afternoon

(UA-Pickford-Lasky)

Comedy

Mary Pickford and Jesse Lasky, who certainly know what theatregoers need for entertainment and what exhibitors require for exploitation purposes, have whipped together in this, their first picture, an attraction potentially pleasing to both. "One Rainy Afternoon" is farcical and romantic comedy. Fast moving story is cleverly blended with plenty to hold interest and action, situations and dialogue. It presents a star, Francis Lederer, who won quite a bit of popularity via his work in "Pursuit of Happiness" and "The Gay Deception." It supports him with a surprisingly effective Ida Lupino and lines up five comedians, Hugh Herbert, Roland Young, Erik Rhodes, Joseph Cawthorn and Donald Meek, to give the picture a verve and sparkle that keyed the preview audience to a high pitch of appreciative enthusiasm.

The story is gay and merry. Well conceived and directed, it permits exceptional individual performances that finely embellish its motivating character. While the plot is simple, and it carries through continually, plenty of unique substantiating detail has been inserted to permit the individual players to score with their respective talents.

As it goes, tempered to a lively key, actor Phillipe and Yvonne are carrying on a romantic flirtation. They usually meet in a darkened movie show. One rainy afternoon they are separated and under the spell of the picture's romance, Phillipe, by mistake, kisses Monique. The excitement is great and funny as the Purity League president busts in and demands Phillipe's arrest. Monique's father, Plerin, is a publisher. Rival editors; keen to have some fun with him, make a sensational matter of the escapade and Phillipe is labeled a monster. Pelerin's chagrin is matched by that of suitor Donstelli, producer Maillot and Phillipe's stooge, Toto. A trial that is a masterpiece of farce, in which Judge Donald Meek does some grand miming, is held. Phillipe is sentenced. Monique, who has become more than mildly interested in the romantic monster, pays his fine.

In the meantime the women of Paris are busting down the doors of Maillot's theatre in order to see Phillipe. As a new show is built around Phillipe's publicized kissing proclivities, Maillot gives a demonstration of how it should be done on the stage. As Phillipe is rushed to the theatre, the whole menage involved in the kissing episode are in attendance. Going on with his act, Phillipe sings to spectator Monique, who rushes into his arms, much to the delight of everyone but dejected Donstelli.

While the show is presented in a Continental fashion, it consistently has an intimate and easy to understand character that indicates it should be popular with both class and mass audiences. As the first Pickford-Lasky production, it has a natural exploitation start that can be used to stimulate primary interest. Additionally, in the value of star and name players, it has much that can be quickly adapted in conjunction with publicity that identifies the story character and emphasizes its amusement worth.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre. Audience reaction, gauged by the number of times it broke into applause, indicated that the picture has quality and quantity to create and hold popular interest.

The Ex-Mrs. Bradford

(Radio)

Comedy

Here's a picture that carries an ample load of diversified entertainment to catch the fancy of any kind of audience. It also carries an equal amount of potential and easily adaptable showmanship to meet the requirements of any kind of showman. The title, sounding rather sophisticated, is rather a misnomer. Not by any stretch of the imagination does it identify the picture's character. In essence it's a comedy that borders closely on the farcical. Substantiating that quality is a trickily unique brand of romantic love interest. Peppy and intriguing, this element is anything but sophisticated. Further separating the picture from that classification is the atmosphere of melodramatic murder mystery constituting the background against which the hilarious fun of the romance is enacted.

Dr. Bradford, divorced from Paula, is living in happy comfort. Then she decides to move in with him again, partly to insure collection of alimony and partly because she likes him. At the same time a race track murder is committed. Bradford, who dabbles in amateur sleuthing, is asked to lend his talents in solving the crime. Paula, who has a penchant for writing mystery stories and is the possessor of a vivid imagination, fairly pushes her ex-husband into the case. Between the pair of them, circumstances contrive to have Bradford looked upon as the first of a whole slather of suspects. To save his own skin, and to the tune of much farce dramatic adventure, he goes to work on the case. Another murder causes Bradford to believe he has a clue. In ingenious fashion he fixes a setup whereby the actual killer will identify himself. In his home, as all the suspects are gathered, he shows a motion picture that traps the culprit. Of course, there's an exciting anticlimax before he is overpowered. A badly battered Bradford staggers before the screen as a picturized clergyman remarries him to Paula.

The picture provides refreshing amusement. Dialogue and action, together with situations, move to a new kind of directorial technique that makes the fun funny; the drama melodramatic and the mystery mystifying.

In addition to the showmanship values that accrue to such a layout the picture presents two players, William Powell and Jean Arthur, who in their two most recent pictures, "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," respectively, have scored hits that add measurably to marquee value of their names. Supporting these performers is a well balanced cast, all of which contributes work that embellishes the playing of the leads.

Forgotten Faces

(Paramount)

Drama

Straight drama, without any comedy and only a modicum of romantic youthful love interest, is the material of which this attraction is woven. Serious in tone, inasmuch as a great part of it is devoted to a battle of psychological wits between a husband and wife who have only the bitterest hatred for each other, it is emphatically an adult picture, with considerable interest for them, because of the character of the story, the quality of the acting offered by the stars and the principal supports, and the grim and realistic style in which the story is told.

As the story goes, Harry Ashton kills Davidson when he finds him associating with his wife, Cleo Ashton. Before surrendering to his friend, Officer Donovan, he explains the circumstances and asks the policeman to find a home for child Sally where she forever will be beyond her mother's influence. He goes to jail. Cleo gradually sinks lower and lower in the scale as a burlesque actress. Sally, under guardianship of the McBrides, grows to maturity. Despite every effort of Cleo, who has blackmail in mind, she cannot locate her daughter. Announcement of Sally's engagement is published. From Dono-

Mystery

With a five-dollar bill as a clue, a beautiful blonde as an inspiration and a microphone connected to a nationwide radio chain as a weapon, Lew Ayres here is presented as a modern announcer-detective in an unpretentious mystery yarn for those audiences that prefer action dramas. There are ample portions of drama, suspense, action and romance blended together, with Florence Rice, Benny Baker, Edwin Maxwell and Murray Alper supplying additional name value.

As for exploitation material for showmen, there are several mysterious murders and threats of additional ones; there's the unique radio method of detective work, with Ayres in the part of a Winchellesque announcer; romance between the announcer and the unknown, beautiful blonde in distress; sporting events such as fights, horse races and baseball games, all of which serve as backgrounds for Ayres' work as a broadcaster.

The picture opens with Ayres broadcasting the World Series. A star pitcher fails to appear. Searching out the reason, Ayres stumbles across a five-dollar bill marked with a series of numbers. This bill immediately places him in the middle of a fight between two factions for its possession.

As his life is threatened, Ayres meets Miss Rice in peculiar circumstances, and on discovering she is involved in the mystery also, places himself on her side and doubles his efforts.

While broadcasting a steeplechase race, Ayres stumbles upon a clue and things begin to hum. Between mad dashes for his microphone and trips to a cryptographer, he begins to unravel the tangled threads. It appears the numbers on the bill tell where $200,000, all that is left of certain ransom money paid out years before, are hidden. It also is revealed that the money belongs to Miss Rice, since it was her father who paid it to the man who had kidnaped her brother when she was a child. It is further revealed that the remnants of the kidnaping gang will stop at nothing to get the money. In a fast-moving climax, during which Ayres broadcasts the solution of the crimes to the world, as well as to the police, the crooks are captured as Ayres and Miss Rice wind up in each other's arms.

Reviewed at the Globe Theatre, second-class Broadway first-run theatre, where a sparse audience composed chiefly of men and children, received the picture quite favorably.

Lawless Riders

(Columbia)

Action Drama

Hard-riding and fighting Ken Maynard gallops through several reels here in the manner that has proved satisfactory to those audiences who like their heroes set against the background of the old west, where men were men and those "slow on the draw" were soon dead. The ingredients are for the most part run-of-the mill, but Maynard is permitted to demonstrate his vocal powers with two songs. Showmen know best how to handle pictures of this type in their own situations.

Others in the cast include Geneva Mitchell, Harry Woods, Frank Yaconelli, Wally Wales and Frank Ellis.

As the picture opens, Maynard and his pal, Wales, are riding into a country infested with bandits. They rescue Miss Mitchell from a runaway stagecoach, whose driver was killed by the bandits, and escort her to town. As the friendship ripens into love between Maynard and Miss Mitchell, mysterious things happen, such as disappearing herds.

They decide to organize, but in the meantime a dance is staged to raise funds for the widow of the coach driver. At the party Maynard hears of a plan to rob the bank of Miss Mitchell's father. Trying to stop the robbers he is shot and left before the open safe. He is accused of murdering the bank's watchman.

Meanwhile the bandits have tricked Miss Mitchell into going to a hidden valley by making her believe a hermit lives there who will be able to clear Maynard. Wales goes with her and they both are trapped. Wales manages to escape. Maynard breaks out of jail and beats the posse to the bandits' hideout. Plunging through a rear window he engages Woods, leader of the outlaws, in a hand-to-hand fight as the sheriff and his men shoot it out with the gang.

Interspersed in the picture are various situations allowing Maynard to display his skill with a gun and on his horse.

Speed

(MGM)

Drama

The title keys the character of this picture as thrill action drama. Supporting that dominating quality is a vein of combative love interest. Actually it is a story of speed as it pertains to automobiles. Educational as it portrays the workings of a modern auto factory, it is thrilling when it follows the zip and danger of speed in two topical locales, the Memorial Day races at Indianapolis, factory testing grounds, and on the Modoc Dry Lake bed where the Bluebird flashed to its amazing record.

In the story, Terry Martin is working in Dean's plant. He is specializing in the development of a new high speed carburetor. At the same time he is romantically inclined towards Jane Mitchell. She also is the object of engineer Frank Lawson's attention. When she perceives Terry having some difficulty in mastering technical phases of his invention, she prevails upon him to let Lawson assist. The practical man thinks the technical expert actually is snooping. Carrying through this are various shots of factory workings and thrilling experiments on the testing grounds.

The story moves to the Indianapolis track where Terry's car crashes. Returning to the factory, further work is put in on the carburetor. As it is perfected, the locale moves to the lake beds where to the tune of an exciting race against time that duplicates the Malcolm Campbell record breaking thriller, the invention is proved practical and Terry claims his reward in promotion at the factory and Jane's hand.

Fast moving as the title would indicate, the picture packs plenty of excitement, as well as love interest, comedy and drama.

Comedy

This show is almost exclusively Joe E. Brown. In most cases that's about enough to satisfy audiences and exhibitors. The theme of the picture is war, but it's presented from a ludicrous burlesque standpoint. Brown sings, dances, mimics and clowns gleefully. As he's in the picture practically every minute, liberal license had to be taken with the stage play from which it was adapted. Nevertheless the result is plenty of entertainment for fun-loving audiences and, at the same time, sufficient showmanship potentialities to engage the attention of the most enthusiastic exploiteers.

An actor who doesn't want to fight, he is shamed by Beverly Roberts and terrorized by Winifred Shaw, breach of promise addict, into becoming an unwilling volunteer. In France, where all action picturizes the rigors of military life from the comic side, rookie Joe has little conception of what discipline means. Becoming enamored of a French girl, Joan Blondell, he specializes with an apache dance and later, following a misadventure, he is arrested as a spy. Ensues a ridiculous situation with G. P. Huntley, Jr., British officer, in which Brown escapes dressed in his uniform. Sent over the top by his Tommie comrades, he captures a machine gun nest of Boche who have less desire for fighting than he. He climaxes this coup by rounding up whole regiments of the enemy. Rearrested when he returns with his prisoners, he believes he is to be shot. A supposed death warrant turns out to be a French citation and medal award and the clown rookie is decorated as a great hero.

Comedy is the essence of the attraction. There are only a few conflict scenes and they are treated to accentuate the motivating quality. The picture may be sold with that asset in mind, with the maximum amount of attention devoted to Brown.

Previewed in Warner's Hollywood Theatre. Audience reaction was favorable, though it evidenced that it thought certain sequences were too long drawn out, a handicap that will undoubtedly be remedied before the picture is given general release.

Special Investigator

(RKO-Radio)

Melodrama

The title is accurately indicative of the content and character of "Special Agent." The tracking down of a gangster and his affiliates covers a wide geographical area and the plot is worked out in complete seriousness without comedy relief. The gangster's efforts to dispose of gold bullion follow unusual lines and lead to unique complications. The love story, likewise, departs from routine channels.

The performance of Richard Dix as the reformed criminal attorney turned special investigator and that of J. Carrol Naish as the gangster are the outstanding characterizations. The scene shifts from a big city, inferentially Chicago, to Reno and the open country thereabouts. There is a brief shooting sequence at the start of the picture and a longer one at the finish.

The story centers around Bill Fenwick, criminal lawyer, whose brother, a Department of Justice man, is killed by Gangster Selton, who has stolen half a million dollars worth of gold bullion. Fenwick learns that Selton is taking the gold to Nevada where he has acquired an abandoned gold mine where he plans to melt down the bullion and sell it as newly mined. Fenwick becomes a special investigator and goes to Nevada, posing as a small town attorney for the purpose of establishing contact with Selton and his men.

Selton's sister comes to Nevada, learning the gangster is ill, and falls in love with Fenwick. On the night when the federal men are going to attack the Selton stronghold Fenwick tries to keep her away from the scene, but fails. He is identified by the gang, which repudiates its leader and attempts to escape with the gold. Fenwick confronts Selton and the desperado commits suicide. Other members of the gang are killed or arrested and Fenwick and the girl are free to marry.

Two In Revolt

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

Although there is a strong racetrack factor in the story background, affording a dramatic finish, the appeal of this Robert Sisk production consists chiefly in the activities of Lightning, a dog, and Warrior, a horse. Half or more of the footage presents these animals in the period of their return to the wild state of their forebears, human actors appearing not at all in many of these stretches and briefly in others.

Exploitation based on the widespread and earnest human admiration for dog and horse is suggested by the picture content. Special attention might be given to the early sequences, depicting the infancy of the featured animals, and to the canine and equine combats which take place when they escape to their primitive associations with their kind. The love story woven into the plot is simple and only moderately emphasized.

Warrior and Lightning, horse and dog, are born on the same day at the farm of Cyrus Benton, race horse owner, and become attached to each other. As colt and puppy they play a game wherein the dog calls the horse by barking and the horse sprints to join him. As the dog, half wolf, grows up, he is banished from the farm for seeming savagery and joins a pack of wolves, of which he becomes leader. Some time later thieves attempt to steal Warrior, but the animal escapes and joins a herd of wild horses, which he dominates. Horse meets dog and they recognize each other.

John Woods, as the trainer of Warrior and suitor for the hand of Gloria, his employer's daughter, searches for Warrior and finds Lightning. The dog leads him to the horse. All return to the Benton farm and Warrior wins the important race with the help of Lightning when the dog barks encouragement as the horses come down the stretch. Woods marries Gloria.

DISTRIBUTORS CLAIM BIG LOSSES DUE TO EXHIBITORS' REFUSAL OF PRINTS

Companies Required to Pay Transportation Cost Both Ways, Necessitating Higher Charges for Rentals

Motion picture distributors today expressed alarm over the extent of the exhibitor practice of arbitrarily refusing acceptance of prints sent by public transportation media by the exchanges on exhibitor booking commitments. The distributors said they thereby are losing thousands of dollars annually in transportation charges which they are forced to pay both ways, and in lost playdates, and that the exhibitors also are losing because the resultant increase in distribution costs must be levied against the exhibitor in higher rental.

Not only did the distributors refuse to admit the size of their loss, fearing that it will be used as an argument on their behalf for the re-establishment of arbitration, but they frankly admitted that they have no solution at hand for correction.

The practice of booking pictures and then refusing to pick them up on delivery is not a new one, but the manner in which it is being extended is new, growing yearly since compulsory arbitration and the distributor system of credit ratings were abolished by federal court order on the grounds of illegalities.

When exhibitors refuse to accept a shipment, the exchange finds itself faced with paying transportation both ways in order to retrieve the print from the transportation company, which forces the distributor to guarantee all shipping charges in the event of non-delivery. On top of this there is a dual loss on playdates, suffered, first, in the loss of possible revenue from another exhibitor seeking the print on a spot booking, which print is tied up in-transit, and, secondly, the losses incurred when the exhibitor refusing the print either refuses to pay for the missed booking or demands an adjustment on the miss.

Six Features for One Day

Distributors in New York claimed that exhibitors who indulge in this practice have been known to accumulate as many as six features for one day, picking the best and refusing to accept the remaining prints. Five film companies therefore suffer a loss.

The home office sales executives conceded that little can be done about the situation as long as no credit rating system exists, or as long as there is no medium for arbitrating arguments over such losses in their individual small size. The individual amounts involved are too small to be litigated in the courts.

The practice is engaged in practically in every exchange center where long shipments are required, complaints coming especially from Kansas City, St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit and localities of their type. It hardly exists in the large metropolitan areas, where owners usually pick up the prints themselves.

Several causes were cited for the practice. An exhibitor may get into debt to an exchange, and the exchange therefore will put the servicing of that theatre on a C.O.D. basis, adding the debt to the shipment charges to be collected from the exhibitor. The owner, aware of such an eventuality, deliberately will book another picture or two from other exchanges and refuse the original booking in order to avoid paying the exchange to which he owes money. In some cases the exchange never is able to collect its outstanding debt or the transportation outlay, for the exhibitor will avoid doing business with that exchange for a year or two, and by that time the exchange is glad enough to get some representation in the town or in the theatre to forget past grievances, including the debt.

Another cause is the percentage picture. The exhibitor's percentage count on patrons frequently differs from that of the checker representing the exchange. The exhibitor refuses to pay the difference when it is added to the bill on a subsequently delivered film by refusing to accept the later print.

In some instances, according to the New York distributing executives, the exhibitor is simply careless in booking, or he may put off playing a picture he has paid for, tying up two dates instead of one.

Distributors added that the practice increases the cost of distribution and such additional costs eventually are applied to the cost of film to the exhibitor.

Tammany Young, Actor And Gate Crasher, Dies

Tammany Young, 49, for many years an actor in New York and more recently in pictures, died in Hollywood Sunday from a heart attack. He recently finished a role in "Poppy," starring W. C. Fields, whose "stooge" he had been for some time.

Mr. Young was also known as a gate crasher and his reputation was such along Broadway that doormen no longer tried to keep him out. He is survived by his wife, who is bringing his remains to New York for burial.

Alexandra Carlisle Dead

Alexandra Carlisle, actress, was found dead in her room at the Hotel Astor late last week. She was 50 years old, and death was attributed to natural causes. Her last stage appearance in New York was two months ago in "A Woman of Destiny," presented by the Managers Tryout Theatre of the Works Progress Administration theatre project.

Fighting MGM's Appeal of 'Lynton'

Attorneys for Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes, playwrights, have filed a petition with the United States supreme court in Washington in opposition to the request by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for a review by the high court of the recent circuit court of appeals decision against MGM in the plagiarism action involving the film "Letty Lynton."

The petition was filed on the final day for the filing of the brief by the plaintiffs. The supreme court is not expected to make known whether or not it will hear the case until May 11. Since the court recesses for the summer early in June, it is unlikely that the appeal will be heard until the fall term of the court at the earliest, in the event it decides to review the case.

The playwrights brought the action against MGM, charging plagiarism of their copyrighted play, "Dishonored Lady." In 1934 the federal district court in New York returned a verdict against the plaintiffs, but on January 17, this year, the circuit court of appeals reversed the lower court. MGM petitioned the supreme court for a review about three weeks ago. In the interim, a brief was filed with the supreme court on behalf of 17 producers, supporting MGM's request for a review. It was pointed out at that time that the issue of public domain, about which the case revolves, is of major importance to all companies, and that if the circuit court of appeals decision is permitted to stand, it will "work a great hardship" on all producers.

MGM has contended the material from which the picture was made was a sensational trial in Scotland and was in the public domain. As a result of the reversal the plaintiff won a damage verdict of $21,000, plus attorney fees, based on the showing of the film in 84 houses, assessed at a minimum penalty of $250 per violation under the copyright laws.

Promoting "Romeo and Juliet"

Nathan Zatkin has been assigned special promotional work on "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and to act in similar capacity for MGM in behalf of "Romeo and Juliet." Barrett Kiesling of the company's coast publicity staff is lecturing on the picture before women's clubs in this country and Canada.

Financial Statements from Four Companies Bear Out Findings of Poor's Publishing Company Canvass

Theatre attendance, box office revenues and film company earnings have continued in 1936 the steady upswing from their 1932 low, with an increase of 15 per cent over 1934, and computations indicate that this advance will be sustained during the remainder of the year, according to a survey issued this week by Poor's Publishing company.

"A pleasing upward trend for both film rentals and box offices is providing motion picture companies with earnings higher than those of the early 1935 months," said the survey, adding, "That attendance during the first three months of 1936 should have run ahead of last year, despite adverse weather conditions and floods, is adequate testimony to a rise in consumer incomes which promises much for the motion picture industry as time passes."

Financial statements of four motion picture companies issued in the last week bore out these findings.

Paramount Pictures, Inc., showed a net profit of $3,153,167 for 1935.

Loew's, Inc., reported a net of $5,033,038 for the 28 weeks ended March 12, 1936.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum's statement for the year ended Dec. 31, 1935, showed a net profit of $684,733, which compared with a loss of $310,575 in the preceding year.

Famous Players-Canadian's annual statement gave net profit for 1935 as $388,156.

The Paramount figure of $3,153,167 was after deduction of all charges but before a special inventory reserve of $2,500,000 set up for productions not released. The balance, $653,167, was transferred to surplus. Referring to this reserve, John E. Otterson, president, said:

"The high cost pictures made during the period of studio reorganization which had not been released at Dec. 28, 1935, would normally involve a charge against 1936 operations. Inasmuch as the excess costs of these pictures were an incident of the studio reorganization the directors have set aside out of 1925 profits the sum of $2,500,000 as a special reserve against the picture inventory, absorbing all of such estimated excess cost in 1935 operations rather than spreading it over the active life of the negatives."

$28,262,546 Net Working Capital

The cash and marketable securities of Paramount amounted to $18,093,850 at the end of 1935, the picture inventory after all reserves amounting to $15,926,811. Total current assets including inventory after reserves were $38,045,009, with current liabilities of $9,782,463 leaving net working capital of $28,262,546.

Gross income for the year was $93,274,855, of which $90,581,006 came from theatre receipts, film rentals and sale of accessories. Theatre operating and general expense was $37,891,990. Film distribution and producers' and others' shares of rentals amounted to $16,737,200. Amortization of films equalled $28,487,784, leaving an operating profit of $10,157,880. Interest requirements for non-recurring bank debts and subsidiary companies were $1,575,700 and $1,576,600 on Paramount debentures. Depreciation totaled $3,048,550 and taxes $481,321.

At the meeting of the board the resignation of Robert K. Cassatt, New York and Philadelphia investment banker elected to a one-year term expiring June 1, was accepted, and John W. Hicks, head of the foreign department, was elected to a vice-presidency.

The Paramount statement, first to be issued since that reporting the year ending December 26, 1931, does not include operations of the Paramount Broadway corporation or Olympia Theatres, Inc., which is in receivership.

Loew's Shows Gain

The financial statement of Loew's, Inc., parent company for MGM and other subsidiaries, showed a gain over the corresponding period of 1935. Net profit of $5,033,038 for the period of 28 weeks ended March 12, 1936, was $687,701 in excess of the preceding year's showing.

The Loew's net profit figure represented earnings of $36.81 a share on the preferred stock and $3.04 on the common. Earnings for the same period of 1935 were equivalent to $31.78 on the preferred and $2.64 on the common.

The company's share of operating profit after subsidiaries' preferred dividends was $7,878,998. Taxes and depreciation amounted to $2,845,960, which was $175,621 more than for the same period a year ago.

Loew's, Inc., net profit shown by this statement was within $2,546,705 of the corporation's net for the fiscal year which ended Aug. 31, 1935, with 24 weeks of the current year remaining.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum

Net profit of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum corporation and subsidiaries as shown by its financial statement covering the year ended Dec. 31, 1935, was $684,733, which compared with a net loss of $310,575 for the preceding year. The net was after interest, taxes, amortization of leaseholds, loss on investments and capital assets, provision for losses of unconsolidated affiliated companies and other charges. The report was by trustee, the company being in reorganization.

Total assets were given as $93,086,487. Capital deficit was $11,001,351 and operating deficit was $15,936,565. Current assets of $14,939,086 included $5,053,005 cash. Current liabilities were $10,661,860. Inventory

ST. LOUIS CASE SETTLEMENT TALKED, U.S. STUDIES PRODUCTION PRACTICES

Distributors Deny Illegalities in Kansas City Clearance Case; Fifth Plan of St. Louis Settlement Up to Cummings

The court aspects of the arguments between distributors and exhibitors over trade practices became complicated this week with a general denial by distributors of illegalities in the Kansas City clearance situation; and by the reputed efforts launched to settle the Government's anti-trust suit against Warner, RKO and Paramount, in the St. Louis-Fanchon and Marco complaint.

The eight large distributor defendants in the federal court Kansas City conspiracy suit of Emanuel Rolsky and other independents against Fox Midwest and the distributors filed an answer denying all important allegations in the plaintiff independents' petition.

Distributors asserted that they are not violating the Sherman anti-trust act, or conspiring and combining in restraint of trade. Represented by Cooper, Neel, Kemp and Sutherland, the distributors declared that the life of a film is not limited to 60 days, but that prints may be run from 45 to 60 engagements covering a distributing period of, in many cases, as much as six months.

Denying the inference that the defendants are the only large producers of motion pictures in the United States, defendants said that substantially more than 10 per cent of the quality pictures available for exhibition in the country are produced and distributed by other than the defendants, and that theatre operators in the Kansas City territory do not have to obtain all of their supply of pictures from the defendants.

Deny It's Interstate Business

The defendant distributors "neither admit nor deny that the distribution and delivery of films by Kansas City exchanges to plaintiff theatres in Kansas City, Mo., constitute inter-state commerce and demand that plaintiffs make strict proof of that allegation."

However, they did deny that production and exhibition is essentially, or otherwise, interstate in character, or that it is a conclusion of law that the distribution of film is interstate in character.

Twentieth-Century Fox denied that "Fox Midwest is substantially owned by it, or by a corporation subsidiary to it, or by a corporation by which it is owned."

Though admitting it may be so in certain cases, it is not necessarily true, distributors held, that each picture be exhibited in a theatre within a reasonable time after first run for profitable operation of subsequent-run theatres; nor is it necessarily true that the longer the time elapsing between first and subsequent runs the less valuable it is for following subsequent-runs, particularly if such prior and preceding subsequent runs charge the same or substantially the same adult admission price.

Distributors denied concerted action in 1935 or at any other time, and asserted that they did not formulate or set up an arbitrary grouping and zoning of subsequent-run theatres in which availability of runs and clearance was established.

They replied that they neither refused to negotiate contracts with independents, including plaintiffs, unitl Fox Midwest was afforded the opportunity to make a choice of pictures, availability, runs and clearances; nor did they force plaintiffs, over their protests, to consent and agree that pictures would be furnished them in accordance with the alleged schedule as a condition precedent to the plaintiffs obtaining pictures for the 1935-36 season. Neither did they inform plaintiffs that they would not furnish pictures except on this basis, or enter into contracts to supply Fox according to the alleged schedule and not to supply independents contrary to its provisions.

Distributors denied that exhibitors in the city are prevented from competing with the Fox Plaza, Isis and Apollo; that they can't double pictures singled at the Plaza, or that

TRADE PRACTICE TALKS RESUMING NEXT WEEK

The large distributors—all except Warner Bros.—which two weeks ago met with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to devise self-regulation machinery, this week received requests from the MPTOA for appointments, to meet individually with each company next week, to determine definitely the companies' attitudes toward the ten-point program proposed by the MPTOA for establishing harmonious relations between exhibitors and distributors.

And as the MPTOA extended its activities to set up fair trade practices—governing exchanges and theatres, state exhibitor organizations were meeting and demanding that the distributors act immediately in granting relief from practices they deem unfair.

Allied in the northwest is demanding cancellation of from 25 to 33 per cent. Allied in Omaha asks for a 33 per cent cancellation privilege, elimination of score charges, discontinuance of preferred playdates and a halt on the practice of withholding product. The Connecticut MPTO seeks an unconditional rejection privilege, elimination of score charges, elimination of the practice of forcing shorts with features, abolition of non-theatrical competition as distinguished from purely educational showings, a "simple" standard exhibition contract, more prints to eliminate bicycling, and modification of preferred playing time policies.

Justice Department Asks Studios for Data; Friends of Block Booking Bill Demand Committee Action

Fresh prospects of United States Government interference pointing toward investigation or control of motion picture trade practices appeared on the horizon of Capitol Hill at Washington this week. Studies of activities of the industry by the Department of Justice are now being extended into production, while at the same time new efforts to "blast" pending block booking legislation out of Congressional committee were undertaken by interests favorable to the Neely-Pettengill measure which would abolish the practice in its so-called "compulsory" form.

Producers in Hollywood have received requests from the Justice Department for information as to their activities for the years 1932 to 1935, including data as to the output of films by types and facts regarding distribution.

Little information regarding the purpose back of this inquiry was available at the Department at Washington, where it was said it was part of a general study of the industry.

Possibilities that the Government may be contemplating further activities against the film industry, however, are seen in this new inquiry, following an announcement that a grand jury is to be empaneled at Madison, Wis., next week to investigate alleged monopolistic practices on the part of oil products producers in the Middlewest.

Tells of Complaints

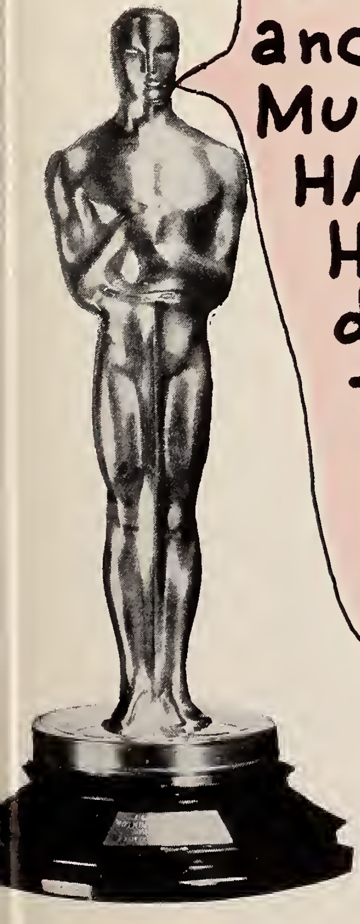
Appearing before a Senate committee last week, Assistant Attorney General John Dickinson, in charge of anti-trust activities, disclosed that more complaints are received against the film and oil industries than against any others and intimated that the Department was preparing for broad investigations. This was followed by announcement of the new "trust-busting" expedition against the oil industry.

While before the committee, Mr. Dickinson suggested that the department should be enabled to follow up "leads" developed by the Federal Trade Commission or by Congressional committees. Coupled with his statement regarding the picture and oil industries as major subjects of complaint, the inference at Washington was that the Department was interested in the recent block booking hearings, at which frequent charges of monopolistic and unfair practices were made against the distributors.

That efforts to "blast" the block booking legislation out of committee are being made by interests favorable to the measure was learned at Washington this week.

Members of both the Senate and House Neely-Pettengill committees in charge of the bill, it was disclosed, are receiving a large number of letters and telegrams expressing approval of the measure and urging prompt action.

Neither committee, however, is exhibiting impatience over the delay in acting on the bill, apparently feeling that the remaining time of the session is so short as to make enactment impossible.



"I'm the SHORT SUBJECT PRIZE OF 1935 and they gave me to M-G-M for that hilarious 'HOW TO SLEEP' featuring Robert Benchley... but on the level folks I didn't know which M-G-M Short to honor with my presence... there were others equally great, for instance... 'PERFECT TRIBUTE' Chic Sale's portrayal of Lincoln.... 'HIT AND RUN DRIVER'- another of the wonderful 'Crime Doesn't Pay' series ...also AUDIOSCOPIKS, the greatest audience novelty in ten years.... and 'PIRATE PARTY ON CATALINA'- another of those star-studded Musical Revues.... and all those HAPPY HARMONIES - cartoons by Harman-Ising.... and those de luxe FITZPATRICK TRAVEL-TALKS.... I guess I'd better make up my mind that I'll be the permanent guest of Leo, Junior!"

ST. LOUIS ACTION SEEN

they can't play pictures before the three Fox houses do.

Detailed allegations with respect to individual zones, such as that defendants have refused to provide the Lindbergh with pictures unless Rose and Abe Baier agree that the pictures be first exhibited at the Rockhill, were denied.

Distributors asked a final decree be entered against plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs be assessed court costs.

The distributors' answer, along with Fox Midwest's motion to dismiss, will be heard by Judge Merrill E. Otis probably before the weekend.

St. Louis Settlement Seen

Reputed settlement of the injunctive proceedings brought by the government against Warner, RKO and Paramount for allegedly refusing to serve Fanchon and Marco's Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central in St. Louis was mentioned last weekend, unofficially, in New York. It was said that Attorney General Homer S. Cummings is understood to be considering with no little interest terms of a proposed agreement reported near between the complaining and responding parties.

Inasmuch as the civil suit was instituted by the government, any settlement reached by the litigants must be sanctioned by Washington before the action may be withdrawn from the federal court calendar. While no government representative interested in the St. Louis case would reveal any information in connection with the new developments, it was said that Washington is fully aware of discussions already held in an effort to end the litigation.

Five Plans of Settlement

While the equity action was under way in St. Louis, last year, at least three different plans of settlement were broached unsuccesfully. Since the court hearings last January, two other proposals have been promulgated. It is believed that the fifth and last plan is now before Attorney General Cummings for official adoption or rejection.

The government never suggests a settlement, it is pointed out, but if the interests involved find a solution of their difficulties without pressing court action such moves are not frowned upon.

New Suit Filed

Minnie Pulverman of Duluth, Minn., doing business as the Royal Talking Pictures Service, has started a $300,000 federal court suit at Superior, Wis., against Vitagraph, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, G.-B., and the M. P. Exhibitors' Protective Association of Northern Wisconsin charging conspiracy in restraint of trade and violation of the anti-trust laws.

The plaintiff has been exhibiting pictures in C. C. C. camps. She contends the defendants have conspired to prevent her from getting film. The case is scheduled for the July term of court.

If the proposal to end the court battle is not approved by Mr. Cummings, Mr. Hardy plans to call all of the witnesses he put on the stand last January in addition to a few others.

Lenience Urged on Mexico's Censors

by JAMES LOCKHART

in Mexico City

The local censor board has been told by civic authorities to be less stringent in its action on films. The rebuff came as a result of numerous complaints from federal officials and the public that the censors make wholesale deletions in interesting films and ban many worthwhile productions.

Famous Players - Canadian

Gross earnings of Famous Players-Canadian corporation for 1935 equaled $1,788,394, which compared with $1,639,372 for the previous year. Net profit for 1935 was $388,156, as against $302,625 for 1934, and earned surplus carried forward was $3,907,907, compared with $3,762,037 the year before. Dividends in 1935 equaled $189,395.

Current assets of the corporation were given as $2,163,131, a gain of $239,902. Current liabilities were $390,454, a decrease of $182,875. New working capital was $1,772,677, an excess of $422,777 over that of 1934. Funded debt was reduced $235,500 to $7,553,000 and mortgages $52,333 to $444,179. Stock outstanding was valued at $9,179,065.

Total assets were listed at $22,705,974, of which $10,262,788 was described as physical or fixed assets. Net profit for 1935 was equal to 85 cents a share on outstanding capital stock, compared with 82 cents per share the year before. There were 378,790 shares outstanding.

To save approximately $175,000 in interest, Famous Players Canadian has decided to redeem its six per cent first mortgage bonds and six and one-half debentures, both due in 1948, refunding them with a four and one-half per cent 15-year issue to the extent of $7,100,000, the balance of close to $700,000 to be paid for in cash from the company's $1,800,000 in cash, call loans and Dominion Government bonds.

This refunding will represent a saving of more than 45 cents per share on the 378,790 common shares outstanding, most of which are held by Paramount Pictures of New York.

ABOLITION OF CANTON CENSOR FEE EXPECTED TO STABILIZE INDUSTRY

Will Provide Precedent Against Taxation Burdens; Newspaper Ad Cost Is One-Fourth of Receipts; Exploitation Trend

by J. P. KOEHLER

in Shanghai

The Canton censor fees of C$3.00 a reel are shortly expected to be abolished, at least in so far as they apply to the foreign distributor. It will be recalled that the dispute over these fees, which were instituted by the Canton City Government in March, 1935, resulted in a complete stoppage of American films in Canton for three months and the loss of tens of thousands of dollars in business. That the fee, as instituted, was illegal and contrary to the national law of film cencershop cannot be disputed. Therefore, the victory is Nanking's, in upholding the rule which makes the license certificate issued by the Central Film Censorship Committee in Nanking the only legal permit for which the distributor must pay a fee.

The ruling sets a precedent that may prove invaluable in the future. China is in a period of development of national unity, and under such circumstances even ordinary political differences may, for a time, cause situations to arise similar to the Canton affair. Therefore, it is of extreme importance to the distributor that he has behind him the national law upholding him in his contention against illegally imposed local censoring charges.

Should any future occasion arise where the distributor is forced to pay local fees in order to keep films circulating, then it is hoped that Nanking, upon being advised of the situation, immediately will take steps to relieve the distributor of such extra-legal payments through reimbursement during period of negotiation with the offending locality.

The eight major American distributors during the year 1935 paid to the Central Film Censorship Committee at Nanking approximately C$50,000 in censor fees, fines for violations, and so on. In addition to this, the same distributors paid C$19,500 for services in connection with the translation of dialogues and shipping of films to the Central Film Censorship Committee. The total censor fees paid certainly should net a good profit to the Government, since it has been shown, by figures of the CFCC itself, that its costs of operation would not exceed C$40,000 for the year.

As there are still the fees collected from some 70 or 80 other foreign films amounting to C$9,000 plus all the fees from Chinese productions which, though amounting to only C$15.00 a feature, still will run to several thousand dollars; then clearly the Central Film Censorship Committee in Nanking is a good revenue producing source.

In 1933 and 1934 advertising expenses in Shanghai local newspapers had reached an impossible figure of practically 25 per cent of the box office receipts. The burden was unbearable, and the advantage gained by such huge outlay was doubtful, since it precluded any real outlay for outdoor exploitation. Then in 1934 the exhibitors of Shanghai's first-run cinemas drew up a gentlemen's agreement, after a thorough consultation with local newspapers, to limit the total daily space to 60 column inches maximum in any daily paper in Shanghai, and the distributors agreed also not to buy any additional newspaper space, with the newspapers agreeing to give fair attention to publicity.

Radio Starts It

All this apparently had worked well until recently RKO Radio came out with a supplement for "Top Hat," which, though made up of cooperative advertisements of local merchants, apparently made other distributors feel the agreement was no longer in force. Came Shirley Temple in "The Littlest Rebel" and Fox broke out with a full-page advertisement, followed by Paramount's "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" with a full page, and then Warner followed with a double-page spread for "Captain Blood"; Columbia and Universal expecting to follow in like manner. Whereupon the distributors, realizing that they were falling back into the old habit of spending large sums for newspaper advertising, suddenly came down hard and ended the unhealthful situation by agreeing to stick by the old limitation as better all round, no matter what may be said for or against newspaper advertising in Shanghai. As it is, the agreement is fair to the newspapers, who, in turn, have played fairly with the cinemas and distributors.

Exploitation Boost

As a result, outdoor exploitation will develop, as it should, in Shanghai and elsewhere. Such exploitation as done for "Bengal Lancers," "Top Hat" and others and the recent fine work in tie-ups done by Warner Bros., F. N., Shanghai Exchange—for "Captain Blood" should prove definitely that money for outdoor exploitation is well spent. Both "Bengal Lancers" and "Top Hat" put out 48-sheet size cutout displays in prominent downtown locations, and for "Captain Blood" Warner's made a house-to-house distribution of 400,000 heralds in addition to 400 shop-window display cards in a tieup with Nestle's chocolate, besides other exploitation. All this is a healthy sign of the renewal of outdoor exploitation in China leading to improved business.

"Bengal Lancer" Sets Record

With a run of 11 days, including two weekends, Paramount's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" now holds the all-time record in the Grand (2,000 seats) theatre, Shanghai, since this cinema opened on June 15, 1933. This should put the box-office at or above C$40,000 for this picture, certainly good business for a depression-ridden Shanghai.

Percy Hammond, Critic, Passes

Percy Hammond, drama critic of the New York Herald Tribune, died at Midnight last Saturday at the Rockefeller Institute hospital where he had been critically ill for several days with pneumonia. He was 63 years old and is survived by a son, John Hammond.

Mr. Hammond, who had been drama critic of the New York Tribune since 1921, had the reputation of being New York's best informed and most urbane commentator on the theatre. Respected by the people he wrote about he was a non-conformist but unquestionably the finest stylist of New York drama reporters. Born in Cadiz, Ohio, his first play was "Little Nugget," shown in a tent during fair week in his home town when he was 13.

His first important job was with the government printing office in Washington. Following that he returned to Ohio and graduated from Franklin College in 1896. His first newspaper job was on the Chillicothe News-Advertiser and he soon rose to the post of editor. Following his marriage to Florence Carnahan he went to Chicago as a reporter for the Chicago Evening Post at a salary of $8 a week, and after five years of general editorial work became its dramatic critc.

He came to New York in 1921 to become drama critic of The Tribune and the reputation he had on the strength of his Chicago writings grew so wide that his syndicated articles were much sought after.

Mr. Hammond's style, though involved, was never absurd. Of "Ladies of the Evening," 12 years ago, he wrote, "A carnal trap, baiting morality with the savory cheese of sex." Of "Pigs," he remarked, "Even a subject so untidy as Pigs, it seems, can be made cleanly by Mr. John Golden's burnishing sapolios. Mr. Golden is a sunny chimney sweep who, with a song on his lips, cleans Life's flaming smokestacks of all their odious sootiness."

At Mr. Hammond's request there were no funeral services. Cremation took place last Sunday in Queens.

Morris Goodman, sales manager of Republic Pictures' foreign department, leaves for Porto Rico next week on the first leg of a trip covering Central and South American countries. He expects to return to New York in three months.

Beverly Miller, Kansas City manager of National Screen Service, has resigned to accept a post with a portable air-conditioning system manufacturer. Charles Gregory, St. Louis manager, will serve the Kansas City area temporarily.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Showboat"

(Universal)

HOLLYWOOD, April 13.—Here is musical drama certain to thrill. Lavishly, but tastefully, produced; intelligently directed, its acting splendid, the picture impressively combines entertainment and commercial essentials completely assuring class-mass popularity.

The motivating story is deeply human in character, continually keyed to stir tender and sympathetic emotions as well as a love drama hitting right at the heart. Its music, particularly Paul Robeson's singing of "Ol' Man River," was received by a preview audience with thunderous applause and actually is an artistic masterpiece. The melodies rendered by Allan Jones, Irene Dunne and Helen Morgan, in addition to the charm of the score and the choral features, potently embellish the appealing plot power.

The scope of modern production technique, allowing the fullest in effects, faithfully preserves and accentuates the full qualities of the original story by Edna Ferber. The script and lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd, and the music by Jerome Kern, plus the cast selections by Carl Laemmle, Jr., the producer, placed in the hands of James Whale, the director, afford opportunity for the greatest effort in his career.

His handling extracted the full values which the vehicle provided. As the picture was shown here, and accepting a preview audience's reactions as a gauge, everyone associated with the production will share in the credit of participating in what is probably the most important Universal production in years.

The preliminary sequences portray gaiety, color, glamour and excitement of the arrival of Charles Winninger's showboat. The dramatic trend enters as Donald Cook thrashes Arthur Hohl for trifling with his wife, Helen Morgan. Preluded by Robeson's rendition of "Ol' Man River" to hint further at dramatic contrast, romance enters with a tuneful meeting of Jones and Miss Dunne.

Forced by his rigorously moralistic wife, Helen Westley, to discharge Miss Morgan and Cook, Winninger, against her wishes, installs the lovers as the show's leads. As comedy, music and excitement fulfill their functions, Jones and Miss Dunne marry and leave the showboat after the birth of their baby. Living in poverty, deserted by her husband, and the child placed in a convent, Miss Dunne is found by Queenie Smith and Sammy White. Giving her a chance when she is sliding, Miss Morgan recognizes her erstwhile protege and disappears. Miss Dunne, found later by Winninger, goes on to great heights under his showmanship guidance.

Subsequently, Miss Dunne retires from the stage to train her daughter, Sunny O'Day, in her footsteps. On the night of the girl's debut, her mother recognizes the pathetic doorman as her husband. As both, reunited, stand by to complete the love drama, the daughter is acclaimed a worthy successor to her mother.

Convincing performances, contributed by Miss Dunne, Jones, Winninger, Miss Westley, Miss Smith, White, Miss Morgan, Robeson and the lengthy supporting cast, leave nothing to be desired. Similarly, the music is a treat, certain to charm any and all in both specialty as well as in choral numbers. It has a quality of lasting impression. For spectacle, "Showboat" has logically woven in all the color and excitement of the showboat era along the Mississippi, plus the cabaret and theatre glamour of the day. Dance arrangements by Leroy Printz are always in the spirit of the picture's mood.

A show that will grip the imagination and sate the appetite of any kind of audience, "Showboat" is destined for grand grosses if showmen will only put half the effort into the selling that the producers, writers, directors and players did in the making.

CANADIAN MUSIC COPYRIGHT GROUP FACING BREAKUP OVER LEGISLATION

Robbins and Feist Will Set Up Own Collecting Agency If Restrictive Regulation Passes, Says New York Executive

Breakup of the Canadian Performing Rights Society is in prospect as a result of regulatory legislation which music publishers anticipate will shortly pass the House of Commons at Ottawa. While the pending measure is not intended to destroy the licensing agency, it will have that effect because member publishers will establish their own licensing agencies to escape the severe restrictions, according to New York music interests.

Jack Bregman, executive of Robbins Music Corporation and Leo Feist, Inc., music publishing subsidiaries of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, said this week that if the legislation is approved his companies will set up an individual collecting agency in the Dominion. The regulations are aimed at copyright pools and do not apply to individual copyright owners, he explained.

Such a move also would weaken the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers which owns a 50 per cent interest in the Canadian Performing Rights Society, the other half being controlled by the Performing Rights Society, Ltd., of England.

Since exhibitors and other music users will be compelled to do business with several agencies instead of one central organization if other companies follow the lead of the Robbins and Feist houses, the music publishers declare that the cost of music to the consumer will be greatly increased, and that, furthermore, the statute will impose no curbs on the amount of music taxes they could charge. Also, ASCAP considers the impending situation a "proving ground" of the contention that "monopolistic" copyright pools are detrimental.

Dominion Government Acting

While exhibitors and other music users in the United States are seeking relief from burdensome music fees and are hopeful that legislation being shaped will grant such relief, the Canadian Government is taking action to ease the burden on exhibitors in the country to the North.

Canada's pending legislation covering performing rights went through the second reading in the House of Commons last Friday without opposition. This is the measure intended to carry out the recommendation of Judge James Parker, who conducted the Royal Commission investigation into the activities of the Canadian Performing Rights Society.

A Government measure introduced by the Secretary of State, Ferdinand Rinfret, it can now be considered a practical certainty that it will become a law.

Sets Up Three-Man Commission

The bill, which amends the copyright laws, sets up a three-man commission which is to meet annually to consider protests against tariffs filed by the Performing Rights Society or other organizations licensing the performance of music. The members have not been named but one is to be a judge and the other two will be public officials who will serve without extra remuneration.

COURT EXHIBITS CAR SAFETY FILM

Judge Charles Newell Carns of the municipal court of Los Angeles is trying a new system on traffic violators. He became tired of delivering the same lectures over and over again to those brought before him so he now shows the new traffic safety film, "Everybody's Business," twice daily in the courtroom to "selected audiences."

"We have had one-third fewer excuses and alibis during the first week of showing this picture," Judge Carns said. "Drivers who are graphically shown the appalling consequences of traffic violations, similar to offenses which they have committed, seem more willing to admit their guilt without offering blundering excuses."

The commission will have the power to regulate fees in accordance with the statute. The effect of the move is to provide constant official supervision and regulation over music rights and the fees charged. In practice, it will mean that rates assessed against theatres can not be arbitrarily set by the copyright owners nor can the tariff scales be increased without Government examination of the reasons for the boost.

With respect to theatres, the belief of the Royal Commission was that the music taxes were inequitable, and lower fees were recommended. Until the tribunal is set up and until it rules on the subject, the Secretary of State has power to continue the amended fees at the lower rate.

Copyright Bill Puzzle

Meanwhile in Washington members of the House patents committee subcommittee attempting to draft a new copyright bill are meeting almost daily in their task of reconciling the Duffy, Sirovich and Daly measures into a bill that can be reported to the House.

The subcommittee hopes to have a bill ready to report to the full committee early next week. Its consideration in the House, however, will be sidetracked until major legislation is out of the way. The necessity for agreement with the Senate, which passed the Duffy measure, will cause further delays.

Warner License Signed by 185 Radio Stations, But Large Networks Are Still Outside; ASCAP Reelects Buck

It was learned unofficially in New York this week that 185 radio stations have signed the five-year music license which Warners offered April 1, superseding the temporary three-month agreement. At the same time it was announced that 67 more copyright infringement suits had been filed by Warner against radio stations, night clubs and restaurants.

The deluge of litigation by which Warner seeks to compel broadcasters to become Warner licensees has not had the effect of driving the large networks into the Warner fold, and the exploitation possibilities for Warner pictures and music have been severely curtailed as a result.

However, Warner Bros. is benefiting from the current expansion of Hearst radio interests, which have acquired several stations and now are negotiating for others. Too, in broadcasting circles, Harry M. Warner's recent statement that he intends to build a third national radio network is linked with Hearst Radio, Inc., subsidiary of the publishing interests headed by William Randolph Hearst and affiliated with Warners through Cosmopolitan Productions.

Subject to approval of the Federal Communications Commission, Hearst Radio has acquired KTAT, Fort Worth; WACO, Waco, Tex., and KOMA, Oklahoma City. These are in addition to KTSA, San Antonio, and KNOW, Austin, Tex., which Hearst Radio purchased early in March for $180,000 and $45,000, respectively. With acquisition of the five Southwest units, it is presumed that Hearst will assign Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, who on March 10 became vice-president of Hearst Radio and president of KTSA and KNOW, as directing head of all stations.

Hearst radio properties now include 11 stations, and court action is pending in the District of Columbia supreme court on the proposed purchase of WMAL, Washington. The six stations already operated by Hearst are WINS, New York; WCAE, Pittsburgh; WBAL, Baltimore; WISN, Milwaukee; KYA, San Francisco, and KEHE, Los Angeles.

In the light of this expansion, orders understood to have been given by Mr. Hearst revising the [illegible] newspapers to the radio industry are conflicting. The Hearst newspapers' radio pages were paying too much attention to the large chains, Mr. Hearst is reported to have felt, and some of the radio columns were withdrawn pending reinstatement under a new policy. The complaints of Hearst newspaper executives that radio was strong competition as an advertising medium were also a factor, it is reported.

Gene Buck Reelected

Gene Buck, president of ASCAP six years, was reelected at the annual directors' meeting last Thursday, and E. C. Mills was reelected general manager for a fifth year. Others reelected were Louis Bernstein and Otto A. Harbach, vice-presidents; Joseph Young, secretary; Robert Crawford, assistant secretary; Gustave Schirmer, treasurer; Sigmund Romberg, assistant treasurer; Nathan Burkan, general counsel. The board of directors is self-perpetuating. The next board meeting will be May 28.

Mr. Mills is expected to return early in May from an annual swing around the country on which he left three weeks ago. While in the state of Washington last week he conferred on the attorney general's ouster suit there against ASCAP and the criminal indictments filed against the Society's officials on charges of conspiracy and intimidation.

EIGHT BILLION TELEVISION MARKET TO GET RULES FROM U.S. COMMISSION

Federal Board Meets June 15 to Determine Relation to Radio, Press and Motion Pictures; Hollywood Is Calm

Sound equipment and radio manufacturers face the happy prospect of an $8,000,000,000 market in television recording and reproducing apparatus, say broadcasting economists, as the television "industry"—potential competitor of all amusements—awaits developments on several fronts affecting the immediate business and entertainment future of the new medium.

A concentration of effort early this summer is expected to determine the "where and when" television is going, as follows:

June 15th: Federal Communications Commission will fix rules governing the conduct of television in its relation to radio, the press and motion pictures.

June 29th: Television field tests will be conducted by RCA in a $1,000,000 experimentation. An advance demonstration was given newspaper editors last Friday.

July 1st: Daily television broadcasting officially starts in England, where regular television broadcasts to theatres also will be inaugurated.

The New York Times, however, finds Hollywood's motion picture producers unworried over television, although the newspaper sees radio's "digging in" in Hollywood as protection for them when television comes. America's large broadcasters have been giving considerable attention of late to the extension of their broadcasting facilities in Hollywood at the greatest source of "eye and ear" talent. Besides its relationship with RKO, RCA's National Broadcasting Company has built elaborate broadcasting studios and powerful broadcasting equipment at the back door of Hollywood's studios. Likewise Columbia Broadcasting System's new broadcasting setup, one of the strongest in the west, is in the heart of Hollywood.

That California's film producers have been studying television's possible effect on production and talent became known when the Times learned that a financial and production group representing some large studios engaged experts to report on the motion picture's relation to television and was assured that there was no immediate cause for alarm.

Hollywood, therefore, continues to view the possibility of competition of television in the home with detached interest, almost with apathy, but with the feeling that if and when the occasion arises, the motion picture will be able to take advantage of anything the process offers.

The first estimate of the extent of the television market ahead for sound equipment and radio manufacturers comes from C. W. Griffin, of First National Television, Inc., who declared that the average cost per set will approximate $225, as compared with the present price of $400, with a potential market in this country for 35,500,000 sets, for a total sale price of $8,000,000,000.

Mr. Griffin predicts that exhibitors eventually will use television locally as an advertising medium to broadcast trailers of their forthcoming attractions.

Television to date has been proceeding unhampered by the stringencies of the Federal Communications Commission, such as those that govern the conduct and advancement of radio and communications. This situation the Commission proposes to change after June 15th, when, after public hearings television will be bridled with definite rules and regulations controlling its technical and public entertainment advancement, its commercial possibilities and its relation, as a competitor, to radio, the press and motion pictures.

TRAIN SHOWS WIN PASSENGERS' VOTE

"Films on wheels" were advanced this week by the Burlington Railroad at Chicago as a means of relieving the boredom of long distance travel.

Reporting on experimental film showings from March 24 to April 7 on two of the road's fast trains, A. Cotsworth, Jr., passenger traffic manager, said that 96 per cent of the 461 passengers who attended expresed the wish that the entertainment be made a permanent feature.

Dining cars served as theatres, with 16mm. projectors at one end focused on a small screen at the other. One small speaker was used.

The FCC still is studying the report of T. A. M. Craven, FCC chief engineer, as filed early in April. Out of Mr. Craven's recommendations will come the determination of FCC policy on television, in June, when a definite long-term radio and television attitude will be adopted. All radio and television interests will be heard at the June 15th meeting, also newspaper and motion picture representatives.

Mr. Craven is urging the Commission to keep television on an experimental basis until complete commercialization of the medium is effected by television's sponsors.

"Economic factors" of television are emphasized by Mr. Craven, who says that these include the effect television transmission would have on present broadcasting, "the existing receiver manufacturing industry, as well as the newspaper and motion picture industries."

By keeping television on an experimental basis, he continues, the principal economic effects could be more accurately predicted before the Commission gave consideration to issuing commercial television licenses.

E. O. Sykes, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission's broadcast division, says the June inquiry into television was designed to "take time by the forelock" and gather information which would be valuable in mapping policies to meet changing conditions—technical, competitive and others.

RCA's Television Field Test

RCA's $1,000,000 experiments with television will be tried for tangible results on June 29th when the Radio Corporation of America will conduct the first field tests from the Empire State Building. Experimental receivers for the demonstrations are to be placed at various points in New York.

Preliminary to the $1,000,000 field tests,

RCA Will Conduct Field Tests June 29 in Million Dollar Experiment; British Daily Broadcasts Begin July 1st

RCA this week gave an advance demonstration to newspaper editors at its manufacturing plant at Camden, N. J., where television outdoors was broadcast a mile, with the local fire department staging a "fire" as the actors.

The pictures were five by seven inches, of greenish hue. Some blurred, but they were shown "out of the laboratory at last."

The receiving set, intended for home use, was described by Orrin E. Dunlap, Jr., in his report to the New York Times, as follows:

"The latest television receiver at first glance looks like an ordinary console radio, but inside the mechanism is radically different, more complex. There are 33 vacuum tubes in the circuit, compared to the average broadcast receiver's 12. Adding to the complexity are 14 control knobs, seven white ones arrayed on the front of the cabinet and seven black knobs on the top. They regulate the sound, govern the brilliancy of the picture, focus, synchronize, center the image, regulate its size and generally refine the image.

Tuning with Single Knob

"Tuning is accomplished by a single knob, because the sound-sight is combined on one wave, and once the sound is accurately tuned the picture 'takes care of itself,' as the engineers explain the operation. The images travel on a six-meter wave.

"On top of the receiver cabinet, under a hinged cover, is a large funnel-shaped cathode ray tube called a kinescope, protruding through a circular opening. The end of this tube is covered with a fluorescent material. There the image is 'painted' electrically. The cover of the set can be raised so that the image from the tube's face is reflected from a mirror to the spectator. These kinescopes are estimated to cost from $50 to $100, depending upon the number produced. The cost is taken as an indication of what the multi-tube home-television instruments may sell for, probably $300 to $800, according to the engeneers, who report no definite retail price has been established.

30 Pictures a Second

"Films were also projected. It is believed that reels will be the backbone of television. The film is broadcast by television at the rate of 30 pictures a second, although the film passes through the projector at 24 pictures a second, because the associated sound is recorded at 24 frames a second. The receiving antenna is only ten feet long."

Engineers described the system as "all-electronic." No mechanical parts are utilized. There are no whirling disks festooned with lenses, as in early television methods. Scanning is now electrical.

The received picture is comprised of 343 interlaced lines designed to minimize flicker. The green tint of the picture is purposely arranged because the human eye is more sensitive to that color, according to Dr. V. K. Zworykin, inventor of the kinescope and iconoscope. He said the ultimate home-television receiver will probably offer a pale yellow picture.

Last May, David Sarnoff, president of RCA, said that from 12 to 15 months would be required to begin test programs. Now the programs are almost ready for presentation, al-

Harry H. Thomas Quits as First Division Head

Harry H. Thomas on Tuesday resigned as president of First Division Exchanges, Inc., which he founded 10 years ago, and as director of First International Corporation, as a result of negotiations concluded with Pathe Film Corporation disposing of his contract and 10 per cent stock interest in First International. His personal service contract, which was for five years, had more than three years to run.

Pathe announced it "has entered into a deal with Grand National Films, Inc., of which Edward L. Alperson is president, to liquidate First Division through that organization. Mr. Thomas plans to launch an independent film organization following a vacation of several weeks.

Mr. Thomas entered the industry as an exhibitor in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1907. Six years later he became associated with the Greater New York Film Company, until he aligned himself with General Film Company. Later he went with Fox as special representative. In 1921 he organized the Alexander Film Company and subsequently became vice-president and general manager of the Merit Film Exchange in New York. In 1926 that exchange was absorbed when Mr. Thomas organized First Division.

Mr. Alperson and Pathe officials expressed regret at Mr. Thomas' leaving.

Pathe Officials Reelected

Frank F. Kolbe, president of Pathe, and Robert W. Atkins, executive vice-president, were reelected at a board meeting Tuesday which followed the annual stockhelders' meeting. Directors elected or reelected were Mr. Atkins, Henry J. Gould, Robert M. McKinney, Charles L. Stillman, Charles A. Stone, Theodore C. Streibert, W. C. Stettinius, Charles B. Wiggin and Mr. Kolbe.

Mr. McKinney, Mr. Stillman and Mr. Stettinius are to fill vacancies created by the resignations of Paul Fuller, Jr., Ellery W. Mann and George S. Montgomery, Jr.

Details of the distribution of a large part of Pathe's stock in Grand National Films to Pathe stockholders are being worked out by Pathe directors. Time, Inc., which had a small interest in First Division, now absorbed by Pathe, will also participate in the financing.

Alperson Assumes Post

Mr. Alperson officially was scheduled to assume his presidential post on Friday. He will be assisted by James Davidson, who has been named vice-president of Grand National Distributing Corporation, subsidiary of Grand National Films. Mr. Davidson was Mr. Alperson's assistant at National Theatres.

Grand National Distributing Corporation has filed articles of incorporation at Dover, Del., and Sacramento, Calif., listing 50 shares of $100 par and capital of $5,000. The incorporators are given as Alfred McCormack, George G. Tyler and Rober C. Sonneman, all of New York.

Meanwhile the first Division exchange in New Haven, Conn., is the first to become a Grand National outlet, with no change in personnel. M. I. Levine continues as manager and Jeanette Berliner office manager. Several First Division franchise holders who own their state rights exchanges are reported unwilling to be absorbed in Grand National.

Al Friedlander, vice-president of First Division in charge of distribution, denied reports he would join Mr. Thomas in his new venture or that he had discussed a settlement of his contract, which runs until 1938. The company has asked him to remain in his present capacity, he said.

First Division has completed 85 per cent of the feature programs announced for 1935-36, with the release of "Southern Maid" and "August Week-End," Alliance and Chesterfield productions, respectively.

No successor will be named to Mr. Alperson in the post of chief film buyer for National Theatres, it is understood. Spyros Skouras, the circuit's operating head, will become more active in negotiations for 1936-37 product. J. J. Sullivan, West Coast film buyer, is now in New York on new film deals, and in the next few months divisional theatre managers will come East for conferences on next season's product.

William S. Hart Wins $85,000 in UA Damage Suit

After one hour's deliberation a jury in the New York supreme court late last week brought in a verdict of $85,000 in favor of William S. Hart in connection with his $500,000 conspiracy suit against the United Artists Corporation. Counsel for United Artists immediately made a motion to set the verdict aside as excessive, but Judge Philip J. McCook denied the motion. Thereupon counsel for United Artists indicated an appeal would be taken.

The action arose when the actor charged that United Artists failed properly to exploit his final film, "Tumbleweeds," and that Joseph M. Schenck, former head of the corporation and now chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and the late Hiram Abrams, an executive of United Artists, had conspired to force him out of producing pictures after "Tumbleweeds" had not been a success.

Mr. Schenck denied the conspiracy charge.

Moffitt Announces List Of Kentucky Directors

Each district governor will represent two congressional districts.

The directors appointed by Mr. Moffitt are Harry Moore, E. W. Dozier, Fred Doll, John P. Masters, Charles Hunsten, John Elliott, Maurice White, Lawrence Davis, and Otto Brown. Associates are M. D. Greene, J. N. Allison, Sam Switlow, F. M. Pittman, Paul Sanders, Sam Lee, Lewis Wiethe, Bill Cain and Lewis Merrinbloom.

W. Hammons, Austin Keough, Willard McKay, Joseph Moskowitz, Louis Nizer, Charles Pettijohn, Martin Quigley, Philip Reisman, J. Robert Rubin, Louis K. Sidney, Frank Walker and Herbert J. Yates.

Television Plans Pushed; England to Get Daily Service

though admittedly television in its present stage still has some severe limitations: the short range of transmitters, from 15 to 25 miles; the great number of television broadcasting stations required to serve the 3,000,000 square miles of the United States; program problems, and the serious difficulty of creating a network system.

RCA's first television broadcasting studio is being constructed in the RCA Building at Rockefeller Center as a part of the National Broadcasting Company's operations, and will form part of the activities in June in connection with the taken of the development from the laboratory for its field tests. The findings of these tests will be applied immediately to the establishment by RCA of a public television service.

England Set for Daily Service

July 1st has now been set as the opening date for the British Broadcasting Corporation's regular daily television service, embracing a three-hour daily broadcast of "newsreel" items, vaudeville acts and short motion pictures, covering a 25-mile radius. Dramatic feature films will be tried later.

Completion of the official transmitting station, at Alexander Palace in North London, is at hand, the Baird and E.M.I. companies installing equipment. Television tests have been conducted for more than one year.

Television cables will link London to Birmingham, Manchester and later with other provincial cities.

England already has television receiving equipment scheduled for ten regular motion picture theatres.

Theatre owners in Great Britain have been studying for months the possible effect of television on their box offices and, mechanically, on their screens, especially since Jeffrey Bernerd, distribution director of Gaumont-British, was quoted in the New York Times as follows: "Before long our newsreels (GB's) will be broadcast from a central point (in London) and thrown upon every screen in the United Kingdom. The saving in the cost of release prints and the elimination of distribution expenses will more than justify broadcast charges."

It is assumed that GB will continue to charge exhibitors the regular newsreel rentals, but that theatres will receive the news subjects via television rather than in the present sound film form in a can. The company has signed contracts with British Broadcasting—official government broadcasting agency—to use GB newsreels.

"We believe that dramatic presentations eventually will be shown the same way," according to the New York Times account of Mr. Bernerd's remarks.

Meanwhile the government in England is considering meeting the costs of a public television service out of public funds.

Blackstone Lesser Agency

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Productions, Inc., has signed the Blackstone advertising agency to handle eastern publicity for the company.

Rex Premiums Expands

Jack Goldstein, general manager of Rex Premiums, New York, has taken additional store space on West 44th street to augment the company's showroom facilities.

Cerning Cameramen And "The March of Time"

BY E. de S. MELCHER.

"THE MARCH OF TIME" is getting to be a habit, like breakfast, the Marx brothers and Charlie Chaplin (when you can get him). It can no longer be called a newsreel. It is a fullfledged dramatic entertainment, or rather three fullfledged dramatic entertainments, on facts and presented with enormous vitality. It raises the standard of theater's program about three notches. It offers its current day beating around the bush. And any subject which it chooses to handle you can count on knowing before the film is finished from A to Z.

There is more of a kick in "The March of Time" than there is in Mae West. Furthermore, its influence on public thinking should not be minimized. While the beauty of it is that it does its thinking for you, before it has been moulded into shape a smart scenario expert has whipped it up to a boiling point.

NEW RUSH TO CANADIAN LOCALES AIDS EXHIBITOR

Few Films Made for Dominion Patrons, but Hollywood and London Offer Tieups

by J. A. COWAN
in Toronto

Excepting short subjects and newsreels where the home made label has specific cash value, there has been little opportunity to discover any relationship between Canadian-made pictures and Canadian box-offices. But there is such a thing as a "Canadian angle" which can be picked up and exploited by the astute manager with sound and often choice results. In this respect, current and coming films probably provide a new high.

The subject is a little tricky. A Canadian name in a cast does not necessarily mean business. There have been plenty of cases of Canadian names meaning strictly nothing to the exhibitor's bank account, usually because the individuals in question were not known at home before they scaled the celluloid heights. Of course, if a producer with a Canadian name on the payroll put some publicity pressure behind that fact, aside from the straight exploitation on the individual picture, it no doubt would produce results but only a restricted amount of that has ever been done. There are plenty of Canadian names which are unknown as such to Canadians. Walter Huston's Canadian origin leaked out after his popularity with the fans was solidly established and the fact that Victor McLaglen had once been a boxer in Canadian silver camps around Cobalt was a more widely press-agented story.

What brings up the subject at the moment is the rising total of current exploitation opportunities and the recent examples which have meant business. There seems to be more current Canadian film-making activity and more attention to Canadian locales and backgrounds than in a long stretch of seasons. An odd feature is the fact that the purely Canadian undertakings are largely intended for non-Canadian audiences, whereas those which should add up nicely in the Canadian exhibitors' ledgers are almost exclusively under the auspices of Hollywood and British producers.

The shining example of all is "The Country Doctor," not merely because it concerned the Dionnes but also because of the way it was handled by the producers and also due to the personal popularity earned by director and players during their Canadian stay. "Quins" or no "quins," the production could have slipped over to the acid side in this country with consequent box office suffering. As it is, the film stands as an excellent piece of diplomacy as well as a big grosser. Reported plans for a film based on the Moose River rescue and the work of the draegermen would be another case where, as far as Canadian theatres are concerned, the final result might go either way, depending on the handling.

While it didn't receive the same newspaper attention, "Rose Marie" was another fine instance of a Canadian angle that drew in Canada. The story has a Canadian setting, of course, but this was duplicated in California. In this case it isn't probable that the box-office take in Canada would have been materially increased had the mountain scenes been made where the story was laid. It looked authentic on the screen and that was what counted with the customers.

On the other hand, the fact that scenes for "Captain Courageous" were shot off the Canadian Atlantic coast can be built into extra box-office interest throughout a large section of Canada. "Rose Marie" definitely was stamped with the Canadian label in the public mind, no matter where it was made. In the other case, the label has to be applied by exploitation.

Other Instances

From London, Gaumont will be sending "Great Divide," starring Richard Arlen, based upon the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a picture which should be a "push-over" in any Canadian center with a theatre. The story by Alan Sullivan sidesteps the political pitfalls which might have caused trouble. It already has been serialized in MacLeans, largest Canadian magazine, which has revealed to large segments of the public the fact that it is romance plus action, and thus has removed the possible handicap that customers might be expected to raise against a solemn celluloid treatise on empire-building. Of Gaumont's other empire-building epics, "Rhodes" has a Canadian star in Huston but there is another exploitation source which apparently has not been tapped to date. The shining goal of thousands of young Canadians in college or hoping to get there is the Rhodes scholarship, of which the film's chief figure was the founder. The outstanding academic prizes of any year, they provide for study at Oxford or Cambridge in England and Rhodes scholars now are scattered throughout the whole Dominion. Incidentally, that also applies to the United States.

If the Korda-Wells "Things to Come" needs anything else, it has one of the best possible Canadian names in Raymond Massey. A younger brother of the present Canadian High Commisioner in London, Hon. Vincent Massey, the name is known in every corner of Canada.

For strictly Canadian-made pictures, there is so far little of interest to the Canadian exhibitor. "The King's Plate," made in Toronto by Dominion, is apparently intended for British rather than Canadian distribution and was made as a quota film. Ruth Roland made "From Nine to Nine" in Montreal for Coronet Films, announced as the first of 18 features, but that too seems headed for trans-Atlantic consumption.

Within the year, one really fine film has been made in Canada and about seven out of ten fans know nothing much about it. "Maria Chapdelaine," based on the Canadian classic of the same name, was shot in Quebec by a Parisian company.

Famous Canadian Bond Issue

Within the next few days a new bond issue of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., Paramount subsidiary, is expected to be offered in Toronto and Montreal. The amount probably will be $7,100,000 at 3 to 4½ per cent. The purpose of the issue is to refund the circuit's present 6 and 6½ per cent bonds and debentures which amount to aproximately $7,500,000. The difference between the new and old issues would be paid out of cash on hand. At the end of last year the company had Canadian government securities of $1,000,000 market value and an additional $750,000 in cash and call loans. No official announcement has yet been made, but the move has been expected in Canadian financial circles for some weeks.

Rescue and Box Office

Canadian box offices, particularly in Ontario and the Maritimes, went into a sudden and, in some cases, drastic slump during the Moose River mine rescue. Several Toronto neighborhoods were reported as much as 40 per cent below normal. The absent patrons were apparently camped by their radios listening to the bulletins which came over every few minutes. It was the most impressive demonstration so far of the opposition which radio can provide the industry, particularly since it struck so unexpectedly. During the winter, a Saturday night network broadcast of major league hockey was rated as cancelling thousands of theatre admissions weekly in Canada, but nothing previously had exerted the draw of the underground struggle to save the entombed Canadians.

Harry Evans To Hunt Talent for Universal

Universal has established a new department in its home office, to be called the eastern talent department. Harry H. Evans, former managing editor of Life and editor of the Family Circle, is to be the director.

Heretofore this work in Universal was combined with the eastern story department, and the eastern story editor was charged with the double duty of discovering new talent as well as new novels and plays. Mr. Evans will confine his efforts to the discovery of new talent for Universal and the company has given him a roving commission.

Mr. Evans began as a writer of sports. He was then summoned to the staff of Life. Several years later he followed Robert Sherwood as motion picture critic and later assumed the duties of dramatic critic as well. Eventually he was made managing editor of Life. In 1932 he organized the Family Circle, a weekly magazine, and became its editor and president of the publishing company.

12 STATES NOW HAVE UNEMPLOYMENT FUNDS

Forty Per Cent of Country's Payroll Now Covered by Jobless Insurance Legislation

State tax laws to provide unemployment insurance under the United States Social Security Act are now in effect in the District of Columbia and 11 states: Alabama, California, Indiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New York, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wisconsin, and apply to all employers, including producers, distributors and exhibitors. In the District of Columbia, the law is applicable to employers of one or more persons; and to employers of four or more persons in New Hampshire, New York, Oregon, Utah and Washington. In the remaining states it applies to employers of eight or more persons.

The states which have enacted unemployment insurance legislation to date cover some 40 per cent of the country's payroll.

The plan is intended by the Administration as "a piece of legislation setting up the framework within which the nation can work out a more orderly and efficient system of providing against the insecurities of life," and concerns itself with (1) public assistance; (2) unemployment compensation, and (3) federal old-age benefits.

Already 7,000,000 persons are covered by the unemployment compensation laws of the 12 states, including many thousands of motion picture workers.

The federal Social Security Act which prompted the states to enact similar legislation through which the Government will aid such states in creating unemployment insurance, provides for an excise tax, amounting to one per cent in 1936; two per cent in 1937, and three per cent thereafter, on all employers who in some 20 weeks of the year had at least the specified number of workers in their employ.

In the cases of the 12 states now having laws of their own, an exhibitor or other employer affected may credit against the federal excise tax the amount of contributions he pays into the state unemployment compensation law, but such credits may not exceed 90 per cent of the federal tax. The tax began to accrue Jan. 1, 1936, and exhibitors and other employers must keep records of employment in their establishments from that date, in order to serve as the basis for tax payment at the end of 1936, and thereafter.

Additional states—Colorado, Connecticut, Kentucky, Maryland, Ohio, Rhode Island and South Carolina—are working on similar unemployment insurance legislation.

The payrolls of employers in states without state laws will be subject to the full federal tax, anyway. The difference between those states that have approved laws and those that do not have them will simply be that the former in effect can keep up to 90 per cent of the federal tax within the state to pay benefits to unemployed eligible workers of the particular state, while in the latter case employers will have to pay the entire tax into the general fund of the United States Treasury and none of it will be available to meet the particular state's responsibility of its own unemployed population.

The years 1936 and 1937 will be entirely concerned with the administrative procedure involved in the collection of contributions. During these two years contact with employers will be a primary concern of state and federal authorities. From 1938 on, when benefits begin to be paid, the problem of instructing the employees in their rights and duties under the unemployment insurance systems will be paramount. Efforts are expected to be expended to work out, in cooperation with organized groups of employees, unions and the like, simplified methods for registration of the unemployed and for the payment of benefits to them.

First test of the constitutionality of the state job insurance law was ended by the New York State court of appeals when it decided last week that the act is valid. The specific piece of legislation questioned in the courts also exists, with some variations, in Alabama, California, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Oregon, Washington and the District of Columbia.

RCA Files Cross Bill In Battery Action

A cross bill was filed by the Radio Corporation of America this week in the chancery court of Wilmington, Del., in the action instituted against it last May by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company. Hearing is set for September 14th.

RCA in its bill maintains that all royalties paid by the Philadelphia company were properly paid and justly due and that the latter concern has failed to pay all of the royalties due. It alleges that the battery concern sold large quantities of apparatus, licensed under terms of the license agreement, to Philco Radio and Television Corporation, its subsidiaries and Transitone Automotive Radio Corporation.

RCA further alleges that the Philadelphia company has violated the article of agreement that forbids the licensee to assign, transfer or divide license without consent of RCA and that it has failed to compute royalties in accordance with the agreement.

Salesmen Talk Insurance

Group insurance was discussed by the members present at the weekly meeting of Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., at the Lincoln Hotel, New York, last week. Plans for the Monster Dinner and Dance to be given at the Astor Hotel on Thanksgiving Eve were taken up and Ben Roman was sent to the coast to contact studio executives in regard to the souvenir program of the affair. Proceeds will go to charity.

Cagney Retrial Refused

Superior Judge Charles I. Bogue in Los Angeles has denied the motion filed by attorneys for Warner Brothers asking for a retrial of the James Cagney contract case. An appeal will be filed with a higher court this week, attorneys said.

U. S. to Retain Theatre Project, Says Whitehead

The WPA federal theatre project is to continue under the aegis of Uncle Sam after next June, according to unofficial understanding, Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors and an official of the vaudeville branch of the program, said this week.

Government officials have issued no official word, however, in reply to the protest by actor and labor groups against the reported transfer of the activity from federal to state administration when present appropriations expire.

Meanwhile opposition to further allotment of funds is shaping up, it was indicated in the action this week of Senator James J. Davis of Pennsylvania, who assailed Communist influence in the theatre project in New York and cited reports that many without theatrical experience are on the payroll while professional actors walk the streets. Actors' Equity Association repudiated this charge, and national WPA officials issued denials.

The most ambitious project of the WPA in San Francisco was scheduled to open this week at the 1,400-seat Columbia theatre, with a week's performance of "The First Legion." In Los Angeles the WPA has opened the Mason Opera House, long dark, for a series of revivals of stage hits.

From Hollywood comes word that Al Woods, stage producer, has purchased rights to "Censored," federal play put on at the Hollywood Playhouse, for Broadway production next fall.

Brandt Circuit Increased

Opening of the new Plaza theatre at Stamford, Conn., and acquisition of the Garden at Paterson, N. J., bring the Brandt circuit to a total of 53 houses. The Plaza is a 1,400-seat theatre designed by Architect Thomas Lamb, who will also be in charge of $50,000 worth of remodeling operations decided upon for the Garden. Harry Brandt, circuit head, recently bought a half interest in the Hub and University theatres, with Al and Charles Gottesman holding the other half.

Academy Contract Ruling

Weekly contract players are not entitled to further compensation after a production has been suspended, according to a decision handed down by the Conciliation Committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood this week, after studying the case of Sam Jaffe, actor, against Paramount. The difficulty arose out of the termination of production on "I Loved a Soldier" after Margaret Sullavan broke her arm.

'TALKERS' OF YEARS AGO RECALLED BY PIONEER

Bide Dudley Tells of Theatre Career Doused by an Intoxicated Man

The fortieth anniversary of the career of motion pictures on the theatre screen was observed last Wednesday night by the Tudor City Forum in the Windsor Tower auditorium in New York with a two-hour program of early-day films from the period 1893 to 1915 and personal recollections by that hardy pioneer and frontiersman, Bide Dudley.

Mr. Dudley, veteran newspaperman, musical comedy author and dramatic critic, a pillar of the old New York World and now with the Mutual Broadcasting chain, let memory drift back to a short-lived venture in "talking picture" exhibition in the days when "the movies" were a vaudeville show on the flickering screen.

It develops that Mr. Dudley was one of the promoters of a contraption called the Cameraphone, an "all talking moving picture machine."

"In 1904 an enterprising fellow was showing pictures with the Cameraphone at the Grand theatre in Denver, and at an admission of 15 cents did a big business all summer," he reminisced. "The device consisted of two cylinders behind the screen, recorded on both sides and played alternately. They were supposed to be synchronized with the projector in the balcony, but never were, so far as I could see. The operator kept them running to make it appear that the actors were talking and singing, and sometimes he got the wrong cue.

"The potentialities of the device for making money appeared so bright that I quit my job on the Denver Post and induced a stock yards man in St. Joseph, Mo., named Jack Sperrett, to become my partner. We bought the St. Joe rights for $1,200, and the contract called for a flat rental of $500 a week for the projector, films and Cameraphone.

"We hired the Tootle theatre, and our career as talking picture exhibitors in St. Joe was launched. We gave a screen vaudeville show with several short films running about an hour, including a scene from Belasco's 'Music Master,' with David Warfield, Eva Tanguay in her famously abandoned song, 'I Don't Care'; Blanche Ring in her current hit, a dash of 'The Merry Widow,' and the like.

Projectionist Goes on Drunk

"The St. Joseph News, where I broke into newspaper work, went overboard with publicity, and the first two or three days we did a land office business. Then fate or something intervened. The projectionist got drunk and stayed drunk four days. There was no one else who could run the machine, and that ended my career as an exhibitor.

"Finally I sold the rights to a laundry man in St. Louis named Ike Stone and Colonel Clarence U. Philley, manager of the Tootle theatre, who also was the local billposter magnate. I went back to newspaper work, but motion pictures have exerted an overpowering attraction over me ever since."

Ike Stone was a brother of the late Abram Stone, founded of the Stone Film Library, which supplied the early-day films for the Tudor City show. Abram's daughter, Miss Dorothy T. Stone, who inherited the library, thus learned for the first time that her family's association with motion pictures dates back to the primordial days.

Accepted in Good Faith

"The early motion pictures which we find irresistibly comic today represented the highest art of the screen years ago," said Mr. Dudley in comment on the program. "They were good entertainment, too, and were accepted in good faith, even when the hero arrived in the nick of time to rescue the fair maid from the clutches of the big, bad wolf."

The show, which was repeated Thursday night to an overflow crowd, consisted of: "The New Porter," with Charlie Chaplin; "The Taking of Luke McVane," a William Hart picture; "Heritage of the Sea," with Norma Shearer, and a newsreel titled "Parade of the Past," covering the years 1893 to 1901.

The Fred F. French real estate organization plans to inaugurate summer "Repertory Cinama," using old films from the Stone Film Library and charging admission, primarily for those residing in the Tudor City apartment buildings. As soon as weather permits, it is planned to present the shows in an open air garden, where patrons may see the came-the-dawn films while inhaling beer and sandwiches.

Eight Exhibitor Group Meetings; New Unit Forms

Organized exhibitor activity opened this week with the semi-annual meeting of the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas, and was followed by the formation of a theatre owners association in the Rocky Mountain region; the decision of the new Connecticut Independent Theatre Owners Association to affiliate with Allied States; a meeting of Louisiana owners to map a campaign to fight legislation and giveaways; the election of E. L. Peaslee as president of Allied of the Northwest; further discussions of a merger of rival independent groups in New York, and similar discussions in Philadelphia.

The second session of the semi-annual meeting of the ITO of Arkansas was featured by a talk of Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who told the delegates that "despite the fact that some civic organizations were unfamiliar with conditions under which theatre owners operate, rapid strides have been made in securing better and more suitable films for the public." All officers of the organizations were re-elected. They are: Ray Morrow, Malvern, president; L. F. Haven of Forest City, vice-president, and J. F. Norman of England, secretary-treasurer.

A Theatre Owners' Association of the Rocky Mountain Region is being formed in the Denver territory by Denver Theatre Managers, Inc. At their last meeting the members voted unanimously that they amend their charter and change the name of the organization to include theatres in Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, western Nebraska, the Texas panhandle and the Dakota Black Hills. The new organization may replace the Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners' Association, which became dormant two years ago because dues paid were insufficient to keep it going.

The newly organized Independent Theatre Owners of Connecticut will affiliate with Allied States, Nathan Yamins, president of the national organization, said following his talk before the new unit in New Haven.

A statewide meeting of independents called by President Henry Lazarus of Allied for all operators irrespective of affiliations, to map out a campaign to fight expected legislation against giveaways, was scheduled for this week in New Orleans.

E. L. Peaslee, Stillwater, Minn., has been elected president of the Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest at the recent annual convention in Minneapolis. He succeeds J. B. Clinton of Duluth. Other officers chosen were: W. D. Gowal, Ortonville, vice-president; W. L. Nicholas, Fairmont, secretary; and Abraham Kaplan, St. Paul, treasurer.

Plans for the merging of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatre Owners' Association will be announced late this week or early next week, it was said in New York when it was revealed that although preliminary details have been agreed upon by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the former organization, and Harry Brandt, head of the ITOA, final matters will not be settled until the reelection of Mr. Brandt.

At the same time the highlight of the meeting of the MPTO in Philadelphia was the appointment by president Lewen Pizor of a committee to meet with the ITO committee to again see whether one exhibitor organization can be formed in this territory.

Du-Art Complaint Dismissed

United States District Judge Robert P. Patterson in New York late last week dismissed the complaint in a suit brought by Du-Art Film Laboratories, Inc., and Arthur Gottlieb against Consolidated Film Industries, Inc. The plaintiffs charged wrongful interference with contracts made with the U-Film Laboratories whereby the latter leased premises and equipment from the Du-Art laboratories and agreed to employ Mr. Gottlieb as manager. The court ruled that the plaintiffs' complaint did not reveal a cause of action.

"CHANCE GAME CIRCUIT" IN CHICAGO IS LATEST CASH PRIZE INDUCEMENT

Participant Registers at All Theatres Within Day's Distance Using Practice and Is Eligible at Each

Chicago's 3,500,000 inhabitants this week week were presented with probably the greatest incentive offered to date anywhere by those theatre owners who feverishly desire to get the public to participate in the the chance game stimulation of box offices. Chicago's exhibitors now offer the "Bank Night Circuit," by means of which the public may register at all theatres using Bank Night that are within a day's traveling distance within the city.

Evidently the Loop City's owners were unconcerned over the legal and legislative battle that raged in territories surrounding them over the chance game, the arguments this week echoing loudly in New York, Kansas City, Boston and Augusta, Maine.

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Chicago theatre patrons' new game is called "Playing the Bank Night Circuit." The participant registers at all theatres using bank night that are within a day's traveling distance, and then when the bank night award gets up around the thousand-dollar mark he visits each theatre during the day the number is to be drawn and buys a ticket. Thus he is eligible to win even if he is not present when the number is drawn.

The reason this is possible is that local theatres are using the "all-day" bank night plan, whereby if the patron buys a ticket and registers his name on a card, the money will be paid if that name and number are drawn that evening. This makes it possible for one person to "attend" several bank nights on one day.

During the week various B & K theatres are having the largest group of awards available since the game was started there a year ago. Four of their larger houses have prizes well over the $1,000 mark. The Uptown, with $1,800, leads the list, with the Tivoli at $1,600, the Southtown at $1,500 and the Harding with $1,200.

Plans to run the "world's largest Bank Night" again are being made for this summer at Riverview park, Chicago amusement center. Last summer the park played the giveaway game, awarding a $250 weekly prize which finally accumulated into $2,750 before it was won. More than 280,000 persons registered. This year the park will start the award with $500 plus $250 a week. Chances of winning will start at 280,000 to one and probably reach the half million mark before many weeks have passed.

Theatre registrations in the larger Chicago theatres are around the 100,000 mark, which gives the patron about a 100,000-to-one chance of getting the prize.

Operators on the theatre office switchboards at Chicago have all the information about bank nights at the various circuit theatres and hundreds of calls are received daily as to the amount of the awards at the various houses.

Local theatre men at Chicago predict a bigger summer this year for the game than last year, the first season. Unlike most places where the game operates, one has to buy a ticket

Sponsors Win New York Case

One of the newest legal complications embroiling the chance game was won by the sponsors, in New York, where Jerome H. Barr, of counsel for the chance game operators, explained the case as follows:

"A decision rendered in the court of special sessions of the City of New York held the operation of the 'Lucky' game to be legal and in full conformity with the laws of this State.

"Trial of the case was held on April 20th, and after trial, upon request of the court, briefs were submitted by Bernard S. Barr, of the firm of Barr and Barr, decision being reserved until today. At this session, the court acquitted the defendant, holding that there was no violation of the law in the operation of 'Lucky.'

"Although the operation of this game has heretofore been sustained by various magistrates throughout the city, this is the first opportunity that the higher court, to wit, the court of special sessions, has had occasion to pass upon its legality."

The Lucky case decided was that of People vs. Deveaux, the defendant being the manager of the Manhattan theatre, a Springer and Cocalis house.

Injunction Suit Dropped

In Kansas City, Johnson, Garnett and Quinn, attorneys for Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., bank night patentees, dismissed the temporary injunction suit against E. S. Young and other independent exhibitors who last winter for several weeks operated a Sweepstakes pool.

Basis of the dismissal was that the defendants some time ago had ceased using Sweepstakes. However, bank night attorneys asked for a dismissal "without prejudice," meaning that if the independents should resume use of the Sweepstakes promotion, the suit immediately can be filed again.

Bank night attorneys filed the petition several months ago in Judge Merrill E. Otis' division of the federal district court on the basis that defendants were competing unfairly with bank night with a promotion idea based on the distinguishing features of Bank Night.

Suit Against Exhibitor Settled

The suit of Affiliated Enterprises against George Shilkett of the Rex theatre, Joplin, Mo., brought on refusal to pay bank night royalties, was settled for $300. Bank night, according to R. W. McEwan, distributor, secured judgment for $275 in court there about 14 months ago. The case went into circuit court where the judgment was affirmed.

A supreme court ruling deciding the fate of bank night in Massachusetts is expected on May 11. An appeal of James Wall, manager of the Fellsway, Medford, from a conviction, on a charge of violating the lottery laws is scheduled to come up at that time.

Bank night was one of the matters brought up at the annual conference of Maine Methodists and strenuously opposed. The organization plans to move against the premium scheme at the next legislature.

A suit on the legality of bank night under the Maine anti-lottery laws reached the state supreme court for decision a few weeks ago but was dismissed on the grounds that several points were not clear. Prosecution was dropped.

J. R. Grainger Signs Anew as "U" Sales Head

James R. Grainger this week signed a new contract to continue as general sales manager of Universal Pictures Corporation for a reported period of three years beginning May 18. His current contract expires in June. The agreement was drawn by Willard S. McKay, general counsel for Universal, and by Saul E. Rogers, acting for Mr. Grainger.

Mr. Grainger has long been occupying important executive positions in the sales department of various companies. He was at one time western divisional sales manager for Edison Talking Pictures, later assuming the general managership of Thomas Ince Pictures Corporation. Upon the death of Mr. Ince he joined Fox Film Corporation as assistant to Winfield Sheehan and a year later resigned and organized the Marshall Neilan Productions. During the time he was general manager for Neilan Productions he represented Charlie Chaplin on distribution of "The Kid" and also represented William Randolph Hearst in his association with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through which he was distributing at the time.

Mr. Grainger next became vice-president and sales manager of the old Goldwyn Company, resigning to accept the position of general sales manager of Fox in 1924. In 1930 he was elected vice-president in complete charge of sales and distribution. He left Fox in May, 1933, to become general sales manager of Universal, his present post.

The annual meeting of stockholders of Universal will be held this Friday at Wilmington, Del. Directors will be elected and the annual reports of officers received.

Common stockholders will elect seven directors and preferred holders two. It is believed that the present six directors representing the common stock, who were elected on April 2 following the transfer of control from Carl Laemmle to Standard Capital and Charles R. Rogers, will be reelected. They are J. Cheever Cowdin, R. H. Cochrane, Mr. Rogers, Budd Rogers, Paul G. Brown and William Freiday.

At the same time word comes from Hollywood of the proposed formation of a separate corporation to handle the production of all serials for Universal release. It is understood that the plan has been formulated in order to enable the major unit to concentrate entirely on feature product.

Sills Joins Republic

Leonard H. Sills has resigned his 11-year post with Universal to join Republic as assistant to Oscar C. Binder, manager of branch operations.

NUMBER OF FLOTATIONS OFFERED IN BRITISH FIELD

County Cinemas, Ltd., Issue Is First; One from London Films Is Awaited Next, Says Allan

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

First of an expected series of big appeals for public money is the issue of County Cinemas, Ltd., which, through the London Industrial Finance Trust, Ltd., is offering £665,000 of 5 per cent first mortgage debenture stock and £850,000 in 3,400,000 5/- ordinary shares.

According to the most recent listing, the County circuit consists of 42 theatres, most of them of good capacity, while many are super theatres of late construction. Started by C. J. Donada, previously a Paramount executive in London, the circuit has figured in various merger stories. At one time it was definitely planned to combine County and the Odeon circuit in association with United Artists, but Joseph Schenck's idea fell through—largely it is said, because Mr. Donada was unwilling to share control.

An interesting feature of the present flotation, with which no production interests at present are associated, is that the new chairman of County will be Reginald C. Bromhead, one of the founders of Gaumont-British. His nephew, Ralph S. Bromhead, is the general manager of County. R. C. Bromhead has not been actively associated with the trade since he resigned his G-B managing directorship in 1929. He is a director of Moss Empires, Ltd.

Mooted for a long time, a public issue by London Film Productions, Ltd., is now believed to be imminent, but no definite official confirmation, and no reliable details, are available at this moment. The completion of the first stages of the Denham studio and the fact that scheduled space at the studio has been heavily booked by other companies are factors indicating the present as a propitious moment for such a move by London, which has achievements, artistic and commercial, to its credit setting it in a place of its own among British production organizations.

It would be inaccurate, in the case of London, to speak of a flotation. It is already a public company, with a registered capital of £825,000, but all the shares originally were placed privately. Insiders, with or without inside knowledge, were suggesting this week that the London issue would be in the form of loan capital.

Dividend Fund for Consolidation

It is understood here that Gaumont British will not pay its usual half-yearly interim dividend, but intends to use the money available for that purpose to strengthen its cash position in view of the plan to effect an amalgamation of the various units of Gaumont British. The plant is said to be very near completion.

The arrangement, which has been under consideration for many months, chiefly involves theatre companies, it is understood, and is basically an internal financial consolidation. Over a period of years Gaumont British has acquired numerous theatres, either individual houses or small circuits. In most cases the corporate entities of these companies have been retained, and they have become subsidiaries of Gaumont, usually with stock participation arranged. It is the intention now to consolidate these companies. Gainsborough Pictures, Ltd., in which Gaumont is heavily interested, may also be included in the amalgamation.

Doyle to U. S. for Product

The visit to the United States in June of Stuart Doyle, managing director of Greater Union Theatres, large Australian circuit, is understood here to be for the purpose of obtaining assurances of sufficient product for the circuit if and when the joint operating arrangement between Greater Union and Hoyts' is dissolved, which is expected in December, 1937.

Doyle will leave here for New York on the Queen Mary May 27, planning conferences with major distributors. He was guest of honor at a trade dinner last week at Claridges, which was arranged by Eric Strelitz, London representative of British Empire Films, the Doyle Australian distributing unit for British product.

The Hoyts'-Union joint operation is carried on through General Theatres, and is said to have been brought about by banking interests common to both companies. Ernest Turnbull, managing director in Australia of British & Dominions, has just completed an arrangement for distribution in Australia with Fox Films of Australia and New Zealand and Hoyts'. Both Doyle and Turnbull, it is said, are seeking production affiliations which will permit of early dissolution of the working arrangement or for protection when it comes. The inclusion of Hoyts' in the earlier Turnbull deal is understood to be dependent on dissolution of General Theatres.

Dacey Codefendant In Author's Suit

Justice Alfred Frankenthaler in the New York supreme court last week granted a motion by Liberty Pictures corporation making John J. Dacey a codefendant with them in a suit for $120,000 filed by Eleanor Gates, writer, in connection with a story, "The Search for Spring," purchased by Liberty from Mr. Dacey in 1933. Miss Gates' action seeks to prevent use of her name in advertising or distributing the picture, "Once to Every Bachelor," setting forth that she is the author of the same and that Mr. Dacey did not possess the rights thereto.

Actors Plan Party

The American Federation of Actors has announced a get-together party, with entertainment, at the Delano Hotel, New York, May 1st.

Echoes Heard on Three Tax Laws; Blue Law Fight

The legislative front was quiet this week as it involves the motion picture, the principal activities concerning repercussions from existing statutes, especially those pertaining to taxation and Sunday closing.

The United States supreme court held the State of Washington's sales tax invalid; New York independent owners were refused an appeal on the city sales tax, while in Florida, the Saenger theatres were placed on a curtailed operating basis in answer to a new amusement tax at Pensacola.

Pennsylvania was assured that there will be no sales tax; Alabama's proposed theatre tax died, and in Iowa, the Allied Exhibitors organization moved to have a store tax applied to theatre circuits.

New Test in Virginia

Virginia's ancient blue laws will stand another constitutionality court test, a more encouraging sign than that faced by Portland, Ore., exhibitors who were charged with violating Sunday closing ordinances.

Sunday shows won in one Nebraska town, but lost in two others.

The efforts of the Washington State authorities to impose upon motion picture distributors taxes based on leases to exhibitors within the state were in effect held unconstitutional by the United States supreme court in Washington Monday when it refused to review a decision of the state supreme court.

At the same time, in New York, the efforts of the Independent Theatre Owners Association to obtain an injunction restraining the city from levying a sales tax on film rentals and distributors from collecting it collapsed when the appellate division denied a motion to permit the ITOA to take its action to the court of appeals at Albany.

Carrying out a threat made some time ago, Saenger Theatres will show pictures in Pensacola only two days a week, according to Norman L. Carter, Saenger executive. The new program starts May 6 when the new city amusement tax goes into effect.

Pennsylvania Escapes Tax

Governor George H. Earle, however, assured the taxpayers that he and his administration will not impose a sales tax in Pennsylvania during the coming extra legislative session which opens in Harrisburg May 4. At the same time the special session of the Alabama legislature adjourned without passing the proposed 10 per cent tax on amusements that threatened theatre men in that state.

Allied of Nebraska and Iowa, according to its president, L. F. Wolcott of Eldora, Ia., favors applying the Iowa chain store tax to circuit groups. This would hit the two A. H. Blank circuits, the Tri-States and Central States, and the Finkelstein and Seff groups.

In Virginia, efforts to get a high court ruling on the constitutionality of the state's blue laws have been started again. Charles A. Somma, one of the owners of the Byrd, Richmond, has taken an appeal from a $5 fine for showing "The Witness Chair" on Sunday. Prominent citizens were brought in to testify that films on Sunday are a "moral necessity."

In Nebraska, in three municipal elections, Sunday shows won once and lost in the other two. In Tobias, Sunday films were voted in, while Strona Stromsburg voted no for the fourth time, and Edgar declared in the negative.

SPAIN'S PREMIER HEADING MOVE TO SET NIGHT LIFE CLOCK FORWARD

Aguilar of Universal Proposes Resolution to Association; Says Film Attendance Would Immediately Rise 40 Per Cent

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

Presaging much for the permanent welfare of the motion picture industry, American and native, is the determined effort now being made by the newly seated national government of Spain, and especially impulsed by Premier Manuel Azaña, to prevail upon the Spanish people to curtail, by an hour or two at least the night life for which the principal cities of the Peninsula are famed. While there have been sporadic attempts—once before under the aegis of a cabinet headed by the present Premier and, even earlier, under the dictatorship of the late Primo de Rivera—to put back the hour for the beginning of entertainments from 10 to 8:30 or 8 o'clock, this is the first time that a government enjoying the solidarity of the masses has inaugurated a definite campaign of education.

In the opinion of Enrique Aguilar, recently appointed managing director of Hispano American Films, S.A.E., the Spanish affiliate of Universal, the present movement, if and when it is finally put into effect, will increase motion picture attendance by a minimum of 40 per cent and more likely by upward of 50 per cent.

Mr. Aguilar plans to urge upon the Camara Española de Cinematografía the passage of a resolution favoring the change and to be filed with the Cortes at Madrid. The Hispano American Film head is the only native Spaniard in charge of an American distribution representation here and the fact that he is the youngest of all the executives composing the Mutua in no way detracts from the authoritativeness of his views. Indeed, he is regarded as one of the shrewdest of the distributor members and his counsels and initiative in the controversy that followed the whispering campaign against the general manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica here are known to have been particularly welcomed by the "Big Three" of the Mutua—M. J. Messeri, Sydney S. Horen and Jacques Edelstein.

Far-Reaching Benefits Seen

"Owing to the late hour at which all cinema performances end here at night," remarked Mr. Aguilar to Motion Picture Herald's correspondent, "many people, especially those whose work requires them to be at their places of business or employment early in the morning, confine their motion picture entertainment to a Saturday evening or holiday eve. Very many of these, certainly 40 per cent and probably more, logically would be patrons of the cinema at least once during the mid-week."

FIVE ARE CALLED IN SPANISH MUTUA SUIT

Five members of the board of directors of Mutua, organziation of distributors in Barcelona, with the exception of Zoilo Oliver, president, have been summoned to appear in court this week in the suit brought recently by three Barcelona exhibitors on charges of coercion.

The board is composed of Enrique Aguilar of Universal, vice-president; Jose Viros of Warner, secretary; Pedro Ballart and Cifesa Ignacio Simon, for the distributors, and Eduardo Villaseca, for equipment dealers. Defendants face jail sentences as well as civil suits totaling 500,000 pesatas.

Promising as the plan appears in immediate results at the box offices, the reform has possibilities infinitely more permanent and far-reaching in a broad economic sense. To the present night life of Spain much of the country's retarded industrial growth is attributed by competent observers, Spanish and foreign. Like the United States, Spain, among few countries of the world, possesses the three fundamentals for industrial development and progress—iron, timber and the components of concrete for construction, coal for fuel and cotton and wool for textile milling. Coupled to these essentials is labor of a high standard of skill, but a low cost, while its coast line is comparable in extent to that of Germany and superior to it in the absence of climatic rigors and in accessibility to its industrial and agricultural centers. In addition, vast territories of the New World south of the Rio Grande and Florida are automatically commanded by Spain as potential markets. Spain today is passed by other Continental states, such as Czechoslovakia, having no direct outlet to the sea.

When the wasteful, profitless habit of vast numbers of Spain's population of "turning night into day" is in part remedied, the country can be expected to enter upon a stage of prosperity and progress unknown even when the galleons returned gold and silver-laden from Perú and Mexico.

Patrons of the big Urquinaona theatre in this city, the scene of many first runs of major American, Spanish, French, British and German films, were afforded a truly delightful experience this week when "Amok," French picture, was billed. One of the finest dance orchestras ever heard on the screen played two numbers for a ballroom scene.

Improved General Business Is Also Seen; Theatres' Receipts Now Show Big Strides After the Easter Week Closings

Heavy Attendance

Easter ave, Saturday, found the Barcelona first-run theatres reopened after the Holy Thursday and Good Friday closings, each with its banner attraction of the second half of the season. "Sombrero de Copa" (Top Hat) was the offering by Radio Films at the Astoria. The Hot Club of Barcelona, an amateur jazz organization, had bought out the house.

At the smart Cine Femina, on the Paseo de Gracia, Barcelona's Champs Elysées, Samuel Cornfield, that picker of winners, brought out the Metro "Melodia de Broadway de 1936."

Hispano Foxfilm had two premieres. At the downtown Capitol, on the Plaza Catalunya, was Shirley Temple's "Littlest Rebel," while at the Fantasio, another cinema in the exclusive residential section, "El Ray de Batalclán" (King of Burlesque) was the attraction. Harold Lloyd's "Via Lactea" (Milky Way) filled Paramount's big Coliseum, while at the Maryland the Warner Brothers-First National offering was "El Gondolero de Broadway."

The Metro picture presenting for the first time in Spain the "Audoskopic" principle of characters in relief was shown in the Actualidades, a newsreel theatre on the Rambla de Catalunya.

Third in the total of releases to first-run houses in Spain this year has been the Columbia product. The next offering at the Palacio de Musica, in Madrid, will be "Estrictamente Confidencial" (Broadway Bill), while the Palacio de la Prenza, also one of the first Madrid cinemas, will house "Conoce a Tu Hijo" (The Awakening of Jim Burke). Coming to the Maryland here before the close of the month will be "La Sublime Mentira" (Feather in Her Hat). A late April arrival at the handsome Coliseo España, Sevilla's chief legitimate theatre, will be "Crimen y Castigo" (Crime and Punishment) and the new Rialto, in Valencia, will show "Una Noche de Amor" (One Night of Love).

Sale Held Fraudulent

Judge Robert P. Patterson in a federal court decision last weekend held to be fraudulent the sale of certain assets of the Acme Film company to Edna Weinberg on Dec. 3, 1932. The decision came in a suit brought by Arthur Gottlieb as trustee in bankruptcy of Hans Frohman against Edna Weinberg and Arcadia Film Corporation, and set forth that Hans Frohman was adjudged bankrupt on May 15, 1932, that on December 3rd of the same year he had sold $2,000 worth of equipment to Edna Weinberg for $500, and that subsequently the Arcadia Film Corporation was organized with Mr. Frohman as president and Miss Weinberg secretary and treasurer.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 19.—(A) If a 110-volt light bulb uses 0.5 of an ampere, what is its resistance in ohms? (B) Name one reason why a reflector type arc produces a hotter spot per watt of energy applied, than does an arc that uses a plano-convex condenser. (C) What is a "space charge"? (In considering these questions, remember the same question is asked, though worded a bit differently, in one of the Bluebook subject indices.)

Answer to Question No. 14

Bluebook School Question No. 14 was: (A) How often should knife switches be inspected, and what faults should be looked for? (B) Of what does rubber-covered insulation consist? (C) Describe the cathode of a photoelectric cell; the anode.

Up to this time this material was prepared for publication, answers from the following, sufficiently correct to merit credit, arrived:

W. C. Brown; G. E. Doe; R. A. Hooker; W. Limmroth; J. R. Prater; P. and L. Felt; J. J. Cuddy; A. L. Cooper; G. Thompson. W. H. Edmonds; C. L. Loft; H. Polies; J. J. Callahan; D. Pollock; C. Rau and S. Evans; B. DeVitti; Nic Granby; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; V. Sanders and J. Jenson; H. D. Lally; D. Emmerson; T. H. E. Richman; N. T. Brown and B. M. Powell; C. L. Sexton; S. E. Gay; T. R. Fanning and W, Burns; M. and J. Devoy; H. T. Granger; C. Hawkens; F. H. and L. Klar and T. H. Morton; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Savlor; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; R. Tomkins and H. K. Abernathy; L. N. Morgan and W. J. Larcher; N. R. Timlinson; N. J. Perkins and R. Mills; T. H. Samuels and R. D. Nadell; G. Sargent and S. G. Sanders; F. Maddon and F. I. Daniels; L. B. Hardy; R. R. Robins and H. Winkle; F. C. Nailor; W. D. Samuels.

(A) W. C. Brown says, "Period between knife switch inspection depends, as to length, upon the use each switch gets. Frequently used switches should be inspected carefully each week for contact and pitting. Switches that are seldom used may be inspected monthly only, or even at longer periods. Every switch, whether used much or little, should be inspected at intervals."

R. R. Robbins says, "Length of inspection periods for knife switches is of course dependent upon the amount of use they have and the voltage and current they carry. Those used frequently, or that carry heavy current or high voltage, should be inspected at least once each week. If the voltage or current be high more often, in some cases every day.

"The faults to be looked for are: Tightness of all contacts, particularly those holding blades in position. These latter should be sufficiently tight that the blade or blades will be held in any position they are placed. Examine contact surface for roughening, tightness and even contact all over contact surface. Inspect for perfect cleanliness, and that all parts are tight and in good condition."

R. A. Hooker says, "Knife switches should be inspected at least once each week. The hinge joints should be tight, and the blade-clip contact kept tight and smooth. This latter is a 'wipe' contact and must make firm, smooth contact the full width of the blade. Keep cross-bar, handle and all parts tight. Rub vaseline on all metal parts and then wipe off thoroughly. Use a light oil on hinges, but permit no surplus oil or vaseline to collect anywhere."

(B) B. DeVietti says, "The term 'rubber-covered' is applicable to one specific type of insulation, its elements being essentially as follows: First, to prevent corrosion, the wire must be covered with tin. Unless this be done the sulphur present in rubber will erode copper, but has no effect upon tin. Over the tinned wire is placed a coating of rubber of thickness according to the voltage the wire is to carry, or, in some instances, the use to which it is to be put. Over the rubber (or rubber compound) is placed one or more layers of cotton fabric which has been impregnated with an insulating compound very similar in appearance to tar."

(C) John J. Cuddy answers, "The cathode of a photoelectric cell in the early stages of sound pictures consisted of a thin layer of active metal placed on the inside of a glass cell itself. Nowadays a surged element is placed inside the cell. On this element the same kind of active metal is applied. This element is rather wide in area so that it may catch practically all the light flashes which are focused on it by the exciter lamp light shining through the slit and sound track.

"The anode of a photoelectric cell is a thin bar of metal placed in front of the cathode in such a way that it will not shadow the cathode too much.

"These two elements, the cathode and the anode of a photoelectric cell, form the negative and positive poles of a circuit, they being connected across a steady electric current. The cathode really acts as an emitter when light strikes it, and the negatrons which are discharged are attracted to the positive or the anode of the photoelectric cell."

J. R. Prater puts it thus: "The cathode of a photoelecric cell consists of a very thin coating of light-sensitive metal deposited on a broad, curved element or even upon the inside glass surface of the cell, although this letter type is now almost obsolete. Since the photoelectric cell depends for its action upon the amount of light falling upon the cathode, this element is so constructed that it will receive as much as possible of the light entering the cell.

"The anode of the photocell, while serving a purpose similar to that of the plate in amplifying tubes, is of very different construction. Because the photocell anode must be placed in front of the cathode, it consists of a thin rod or ring of metal which will obstruct as little light as possible."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

GRAND EXIT: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—A very interesting action picture. It's a little different, too, in that it deals with arson. Average draw. Played March 17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HEROES OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard, June Gale—A mighty good western that pleased the weekend crowd. The singing, riding and fighting are all above par, but what is the use of having a lot of shooting that never gets anywhere. There's too much in this. Played April 3-4.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall, Leo Carrillo—This picture is strictly a "sleeper" and with the proper buildup will show profits at the box office. Title offers many ways of "tieups" with restaurants and cafes. Played on Easter Sunday to excellent business. Patrons left theatre completely satisfied and think that Carrillo stole the picture.—Emmett Lyons, Nordland Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio. General patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND: Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson—This was received very well. Did average business for two days in spite of an all day rain on Sunday. Played April 5-6.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A crackerjack of a story that is exciting and dramatic. Cagney better than usual. Our business was only fair on this, although it's hard to see why. Played March 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GB Pictures

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—This was a nice picture and would satisfy the average crowd. Business good. The French police and others with English accent was a bit out of line. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 13-15.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Town and rural patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Played this on three-day weekend change to just fair business. Picture has some good technical shots, but is dramatically weak. One scene between Helen Vinson and Madge Evans is positively amateurish. Running time, 96 minutes. Played March 26-28. —Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable, Adrienne Ames—One of those kind of pictures that you put on for a run and back it up with big advertising, and your ticket girl sits and sits and wonders what she is waiting for because there is no ticket selling. It really gets under some folks' skin and they rave and tell you how grand it is, recording of music is marvelous, cannot understand Montgomery, but it has its good moments, and maybe you will like it if you get 'em in.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

IN OLD SANTE FE: Gene Autry, Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—Gene Autry is quite a favorite here. Had many favorable comments.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—The performance of Wallace Beery and Lionel Barrymore was great. Picture no draw at the box office.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—This is the first Garbo picture we've played in this town since the talkies came in, but judging from favorable comments we believe we can play another.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminnce, Ky. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This one went over big. Everyone liked it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—We advertised "Positively No Opera In This" and grossed more than on previous slapstick-opera mixtures. The combination of these two elements in one picture has not appealed to our patrons.—T. R. Burcbam, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor, Una Merkel—This was a fine musical picture and Powell's dancing was outstanding, but bad weather and impassable roads killed it for us. Running time, 101 minutes. Played April 2-4.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel—When they billed this one as the greatest musical of all time they didn't do it justice; why limit it to "musical?" Use all your adjectives denoting perfection and you'll still be on the safe side! Clean and wholesome fun neatly woven into the rhythmic background of song and dance, and introducing the best tap dancer in the world, bar none! (Yes, that includes Astaire!) You can give us Eleanor Powell in double orders; also Benny and his stooge, Sid Silvers! In fact, each and every member of the cast is an individual treat. Bravo! Running time, 99 minutes. Played April 18.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans, Stuart Erwin—They don't come any better than this one for a weekend date; action. good story, swell acting and Stu Erwin. Good any day of the week. This Stu Erwin can certainly go to town when he has the right role.—A. E. Hancock. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny. Una Merkel—This show went over for me satisfactory with average business. Jack was O. K. in this but not as good as in some of his previous releases. There is a good deal of comedy verging on the slapstick but they seemed to like it. Would make a good weekend picture though I used it for Sunday. Running time. 80 minutes. Played March 22-23.—F. L. Clarke. Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

KIND LADY: Aline MacMahon, Basil Rathbone—If you never play this one, it will be too soon. This one is terrible.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—This picture was "different" and seemed refreshing thereby to the jaded palates of some of our regular fans. Audience reaction varied widely. Little small-town box-office appeal, and about fifteen minutes too long.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—This should please the majority as it is full of action and is never boresome. Some lovely scenic backgrounds. Mala and Lotus are fine co-players. Why not feature them in a film version of "The Hurricane" by the same authors as "Mutiny on the Bounty?" Played April 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gahle, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—A great picture. Business above average but not enough to justify the rental charged.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Our patrons were in a constant uproar all through the show. This is the best picture they have made outside of their first one.—M. F. Bodwell. Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—We went back to pick this one up for a weekend date, and it pleased. It has so much action there is no room for much else except a few bits of comedy. It will entertain almost any audience.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Picture a trifle rough for a Sunday showing. Even so, they seemed to be satisfied. No complaints.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeannette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—An outstanding musical success which pulled extremely well and had the customers raving. Even the striped nightshirt slip-up failed to register with our patrons, which proves the interest was being held every minute. Beautiful photography and perfect recording added to the entertainment value. Running time, 113 minutes. Played March 29-31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clattskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—A superbly enacted and staged drama that is probably one of the best, if not the best, productions ever made. Of course, there is no foolishness about it. It is real red meat, and will cause the ladies and some of the men to shed tears in parts. There is some comedy relief and our crowd was pleased with the show. However, it did not draw the business it was entitled to. Running time, 126 minutes. Played April 19-20.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—A wonderful picture, a perfect cast, spectacular and educational. It is one of those pictures that ought to please everyone but doesn't. Colman gives a wonderful performance. The cast is all so good there is not space to mention all, but Blanche Yurka is outstanding. She gives an unforgettable performance. This is a picture you may be proud to run, even if the box office is not so good. Ran this too late to make any money, but it is a great picture. Running time, 126 minutes. Played April 10-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan, Edna May Oliver—One of the great pictures of all time. The big scenes are overwhelming and breath-taking. but this failed at the box office. The only answer I can find is that it is too sad for the masses. No matter how wonderful the scenes are showing the guillotine square, it is not pleasant for the "romance hungry" patrons to have their hero's head chopped off.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia, Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—The dog is clever, but the story is not so hot. There was a little too much on the side of sentimentality and a little mushy for the average adult audience. A semi-gangster picture with Jackie and the dog on spot.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore—A dandy story of a man and his dog. Should please any audience. Played March 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook. N. H. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Excellent. Myrna Loy is always good, Spencer Tracy gives a better than usual performance, good story and good comments from the audience. Running time, 92 minutes. Played April 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable. Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—It may be an old, old story, but given a splendid cast. good dialogue and a generally refreshing treatment throughout, this emerges a decidedly fine piece of entertainment. Our patrons enjoyed it and said so. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 5-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman—The best Crosby opus in a long time. And he does his share in providing the fun as well as the songs. Ethel Merman great. and Charlie Ruggles in top form. Nice music. Played April 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre. Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—This is a combination of radio stars blended with comedy situations. Not as big as the title would make you believe. Business below normal. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 12-13.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—This gave general satisfaction.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Robert Young—Another one added to the long list of Paramount plops. Claudette is surrounded with a fine flock of performers, but an attempt has been made here to produce another "It Happened One Night," but it does not click. It may get by on double feature or bank night.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good picture. But not much above a program. Did not draw here at all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 3-4.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

CORONADO: Betty Burgess, Johnny Downs—Did not please even the very few whom we managed to entice inside. The only bright spots are Leon Errol's appearances.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper—This is an extra good feature. Above average. Will stand extra advertising. Running time, ten reels. Played March 25.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Tom Keene, Larry Crabbe, Katherine DeMille—Tom Keene's early training in the silent picture was just like a young man going to college; it gave him a background that his entrance to the talkies is a very natural thing, and if I don't miss my guess, his services will be greatly in demand. "Drift Fence" is real box office. Did a third more business than "Bar 20 Rides Again" and your patrons will like it.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Good western as far as it goes but it is too short by two reels. Why do they not make a little more length to westerns and shorten some of the jazz a little. Did a little above average. Good but still too short. Running time, 60 minutes. Played March 20-21.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Paula Stone —I am a confirmed "western-hater," but I have to play them. This is the best western I have ever seen. It is exceedingly well put together and well-directed, and has that elusive human quality which makes the actors seem someone you've known. (I could compare it to "It Happened . . .," but just to be different, I won't.) Mulford is well-read hereabouts, and Cassidy is, therefore, wellknown.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith—Very ordinary. Don't promise much on this one. Might get by on a double feature program.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou—A positive laugh riot! Harold sure does his darndest in this, aided by a swell cast. Played April 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR: John Howard, Wendy Barrie—A generally neat little piece of entertainment. No important stars to help draw, but the cast is all good. John Howard deserves more assignments. Played March 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—Played this one night only, then came the flood! We didn't reopen for four days. Those who saw it seemed to enjoy it. Several who missed it expressed their disappointment. We are pleased to report the Paramount exchange cooperated with us, making good when we needed help due to the flood coming during the run of this picture. Played March 18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott, Walter Connolly—Those that came out liked it very much.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

WOMAN TRAP: Gertrude Michael, George Murphy —Almost a western. Will satisfy the action seekers. Played April 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Republic

DANCING FEET: Ben Lyon, Joan Marsh—Directed by Joseph Santley, and this makes it good. A story done many times before, but it is still good. This one went over fine to good business on a double bill with "Westward Ho."—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TWO SINNERS: Otto Kruger, Martha Sleeper, Cora Sue Collins—Enjoyed by all. A picture that may be rated very high for both adult and children patronage. Pleased all and made a very big hit. Republic pictures is to be thanked for making such a fine production. Only one thing wrong. The name could have been better and we would have had a greater volume of business. Print was in perfect condition. Sound was recorded marvelously. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 17-18.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—This picture did not click here, financially speaking. That is perhaps why I failed to see anything extraordinary about the picture, in which the target motif is strikingly carried out. I gave this a Sunday date, when it certainly should have been on weekend. —T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—Quite a pleasing offering. It makes fine entertainment. One surprise after another. Used on double bill and it is good. But no business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—Pretty good program picture. While no outstanding stars, they do their parts well. Running time, seven reels. Played March 27-28.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—The best that can be said of this picture was that the color is beautiful. No draw and no business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 9-11.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Town and rural patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—This one is a fine one to keep you from wearing out the seats of your theatre. It is one of those stories that was good in the old silent days but the dialogue just makes you goofy to listen to it. Anne Shirley may get far in the movies but I would say she will have to have different material than this. Business poor three days in spite of connection with school selling tickets.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—This is the type of picture that will please audiences who come to enjoy fine acting and a good play. It takes a little appreciation of the author's intent to fully enjoy it. Anne Shirley is good enough for more popular material. Played April 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck--Good! But people are fed up on this type of entertainment.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—As good as any previous Buck thriller. Satisfied the large majority of those who came. Played April 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—Not as good as some in the past. Too much time taken in making traps. Draw fair. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 15.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone—Good clean picture that was fairly pleasing and drew quite well. Just an average show without much drawing power. Played March 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Many compliments on this fine picture. Ginger, also, got the patronage and pleased her audience as usual. You will make no mistake in putting this on your best nights and advertising it to the limit. Better than average business on this. Runnng time, 87 minutes. Played April 12-13.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—This pix is a "humdinger." People will talk about this one and bring them in for you. Brent excellent and Ginger good except for songs. She could stand more popular songs in even this "quickie." Business not so good due to weather but received much praise from those who saw it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 18-19.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—Just another report from the legion of small-town exhibitors who couldn't do any business on this.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MUSS 'EM UP: Preston Foster, Margaret Callahan —Did not draw. Only fair picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 10-11.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler—An "all-star" western of average caliber, but the star lineup did do some extra business and it satisfied.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Another above average western production on which I received many compliments, no kicks and above box office receipts. I believe the western production is coming back. Since sound came in I have been unable to get up any interest in the western show but I have noticed recently that they seem to go for them better. Here's hoping that it continues. Running time, 71 minutes. Played April 3-4.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond—This hardy old play is again revived with good success. If there are among your patrons some who still want to see it, they will be well pleased. It is good in this version. Played March 31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Pretty good comedy. Some smiles and a few laughs. Will get over. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 18.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

Tapernoux

MADAME BOVARY: Pierre Renoir, Valentine Tessier—A French talkie well acted, enjoyed by all who saw it. It was a classic from the famous story by Flaubert. However, the cinema did not have titles in English. Therefore, most of the people could not understand it. Of course, it could not be compared to such films as "La Maternelle" or "Don Quixote," which we have played. However, it can be classed as a great cinema in its own field of art and beauty as it did have its own place among the great cinemas of the year that were produced in Europe, and it also received a great deal of praise from the New York cinema theatres. We are not sorry that we played it as we did do a very fine business on it. However, it would not go for a small town, as some people have never heard of it before, let alone reading the book which it was taken from. This picture will never make box office fame but it still will be famous among the socalled classics of a certain type and mood. However, it will never rate as high as a picture that would please everyone. Nevertheless, it was a great picture even though it has a few faults. That is not saying much against it as every picture has faults and indeed many more than this one sometimes. In France they act. The actors fit the part of the picture as one can see in this picture. In Hollywood the picture has to fit the actor. Of course, not in all cases. Hollywood has a great deal to learn from the foreign cinema; but Europe has a great deal to learn from Hollywood as Hollywood is far ahead of the foreign cinema in lighting, settings, sound and many other things. So keep up, Hollywood, and some day both will learn from each other. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 15.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. French and college people patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—A very nice picture and the "Quints" score. Drew them in but the scenes depicting Canada and Canadian life were a joke on Canada. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 6-8.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Town and rural patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Very, very poor, in fact one of the weakest pictures it has been my misfortune to use in the twenty years I have been in this town. My patrons evidently had the same opinion of this as I did, as was shown by the receipts, which were way below average. Drop it if you can. Running time, 76 minutes. Played March 27-28.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—This picture is important because it has Rosalind Russell in it. Raft does not and never has drawn at this house. The picture is okay, it has a good story and some action, but our audience seems to have a complex on Raft, for we never do normal business in any picture that he heads. But this lady, Miss Russell, is something else again; she has what it takes and is coming fast in popular esteem; she is clever and easy on the eyes. In other words, she has that something on the ball that a lot of them have not.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—A pretty good story for George Raft's talent. Nothing great on pulling in the shekels, however. Rosalind Russell okay. Played April 1-2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Jenacook, N. H. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie—Here is as good a musical production as you could ask for, and in my opinion should go over big where pictures of this type are liked. I am unable to say anything about its drawing power as we hit a storm on Sunday night that just about cut our usual crowd in half. The Monday night was not patronized but hardly ever is with any picture. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 5-6. —F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, Arline Judge—This one pleased one hundred per cent, all classes. The entire cast is excellent, good story, good music, good dancing, just everything it takes for an all-around good show. Dixie Dunbar seemed to be the favorite with her dancing. Pleased. Running time, 88 minutes. Played April 8-9. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—Jane is a great little trouper and comes through 100 per cent in as fine a family show as you could wish for. Much good comedy, also pathos. The comedy borders on the slapstick but that is what they like. For some reason unaccounted for it failed to draw for me. Perhaps partly accounted for by school activities. Running time, 76 minutes. Played April 17-18.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers—If they will watch the material that they give Jane Withers, she should become a drawing card close to Shirley Temple. "Paddy O'Day" is good in every way. They have given it a good production and the picture as a whole will increase this star's popularity. Business on this was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—A good picture. Should be supported by a cheerful sort of shorts or companion feature as the prison scenes are plentiful and none too pleasant to watch. Baxter plays his part in fine shape. Played April 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—A conglomeration of fairy story stuff. Good performances by cast hold it together. Fair business. Twentieth Century productions still not meaning much to us. Played March 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton —Just a fair program picture with some laughs by Horton's funny talk. It's O. K. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 8.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Plenty of farce and comedy that was pleasing to our patrons. Kept our audience laughing all the time so it must have pleased them. A small town picture. Played March 28.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

KING SOLOMON OF BROADWAY: Edmund Lowe, Dorothy Page—Played it two days middle week double feature and it held up its end of the double. It has everything one could wish for in entertainment, expensive sets. But no business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Magnificent is the best way to describe it. Satisfied 100 per cent and drew better than any other Universal picture in a long time. Played April 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—I consider this the perfect motion picture. Why? I can exactly tell. It is perfectly acted and the picture moves along smoothly from beginning to end. Never before have I seen an audience so interested, so quiet. Even the smallest children, as well as the older people, seemed so intent upon watching and following every word and every emotion of the actors that there was at times absolute silence and you could shut your eyes and imagine that you were alone in the theatre and that the actors were actually living human beings. When a better picture than this is made, I want to see it. Played April 4.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—I had seen this before showing it, and as a result, advertised it as one of the most beautiful, the most appealing, the most inspiring, romantic dramas ever shown. This is high praise, but the picture is deserving of this praise. It goes without saying that everyone connected with the making of this picture gave his best. Every player seemed perfect for his part. I have only one fault to find. During the picture the characters suffer and the audience with them, handkerchiefs are freely used and when it comes to the final happy ending, they cut the footage down to a minimum. How much better it would have been if they had added another final scene, showing Robert Taylor and Irene Dunne honeymooning and standing at the same bridge in Paris that they stood at while Irene Dunne was still blind. That would be much better than ending with the sickbed scene. I would suggest to directors as a whole: do not be so stingy with your happy ending scenes. When you make audiences suffer in sympathy with the characters throughout a picture, let them rejoice for a few seconds longer with the characters at the ending. Business on this was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNSET OF POWER: Buck Jones, Dorothy Dix—Good western for small towns. If your audience likes westerns they will like this one. Running time, 7 reels. Played April 10-11.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WHY HE'S JOINING THE REPORTERS

> "This is my first contribution to 'What the Picture Did for Me' section of the HERALD. Have always enjoyed reading the information given by other showmen on pictures, so thought I might add my little bit."
> —EMMETT LYONS,
> Nordland Theatre, Cincinnati.

SUNSET OF POWER: Buck Jones, Dorothy Dix—Awfully poor, Buck! You'll have to do better than this or step aside. From our viewpoint the poor stories your pictures come from lately are largely at fault. Also very mediocre productions at a time when one can obtain real good westerns, excellently produced, elsewhere. Played March 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta, Charlotte Henry, Frankie Darro—A real small town picture, good for any night. Photography very dark. Played to very poor business. Zero temperature. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 5-6. —Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta—Not as good as I thought it would be judging from the reports I had seen. I consider it but a fair, small town picture. Played April 11.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta, Charlotte Henry, Frankie Darro—Here is a good one from Universal. Everybody enjoyed this as this has almost everything that appeals to the masses, lots of fun, heart throbs and a smash thrill ending. Business a good average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—Buck Jones' westerns are always good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Jack Oakie, Joan Blondell—This is an elaborate musical, but not quite up to Vitagraph's standard. The main reason, I think, is that the dancing sequences with Keeler and Draper were too long and too much. A very good ensemble was the style show. But the audience reaction, as I stated above: if there had been less and shorter footage of Miss Keeler and Draper, it would have been better. It was too much of a repetition of the same steps and routine.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Naturally we took advantage of Miss Davis winning the Academy Award and drew some extra business. She is having more drawing power with each picture. One lady remarked: "I had to see her three times before I liked her, but she certainly makes a person remember her."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Frank McHugh, Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull—Pleased the young folks fairly well, but owing to lack of any stars it was a hard picture to sell. Frank McHugh gives a fair performance, Joseph Cawthorn is always good, but Patricia Ellis is a complete washout as the lead. The boat race is very good and this one will get by if they don't expect too much, but not on your best nights. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 4-5. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN HUNT: Ricardo Cortez, Marguerite Churchill, Chic Sale—This one is plenty good entertainment. Marguerite Churchill has a good role and does well with it. William Gargan in a role better than his usual lot shows up to good advantage. Chic Sale proves plenty of down-to-earth laughs. Played April 14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—If your patrons like westerns you can't go wrong with this picture. Of course, there is nothing outstanding in it, but it is far better than the average western production and Dick's singing is a hit. It also had extra drawing power for me, giving me the best Friday-Saturday in several months. In fact, it got more money for me than "Captain Blood" played on same days of the week. That's going some. Running time, 63 minutes. Played March 20-21.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—A first-rate cast in a good play. Dialogue is plentiful, although there are some real tense action moments. Fair draw. Played March 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Short Features

JACK FROST: Comicolor Cartoons—A very good colored cartoon—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE BEARS, THE: Comicolor Cartoons—A fine colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

CAUGHT IN THE ACT: Andy Clyde—Too silly and dumb to be funny. Andy should be ashamed of this. We were. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOTCHA MELODY: Krazy Kat Cartoon—These Krazy Kat Cartoons are nearly as good as Columbia's "Scrappy" series. They're not very clever.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S BOY SCOUTS: Scrappy Cartoon—One of the best cartoons we've run this season. The scouting idea is cleverly developed.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S PONY: Scrappy Cartoon—A good cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S TRAILER: Scrappy Cartoons—A good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN SEPTEMBER: Jackie Coogan—A pretty amusing little short presenting the now grown-up Coogan. He looks the same and does okay in this story of a kindly old lady and racing midget cars.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THANKS, MR. CUPID: Ernest Truex—Better than most of this star's attempts at comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WINGS OVER MT. EVEREST: Special—A great two-reeler; should be shown to all schools. Sure some scenery. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WINGS OVER MT. EVEREST: Special—Mediocre, too long drawn out and foggy shots, except towards the last they have Lowell Thomas raving about the feat. Audience reaction nil and taken off the second day.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: M-G-M Miniatures—Along the usual lines of these novelties. Okay enough.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GYMNASTICS: M-G-M Sports Parade—A fine array of gymnastic talent. Amazing tricks of these athletes will entertain any audience.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacock, N. H. General patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another beautiful color travelogue. Interesting scenes.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WANTS ADJUSTMENT WITHIN THE INDUSTRY

TO THE EDITOR OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

At a meeting of this organization held in New Haven on Tuesday, April 21, with 42 non-affiliated theatres represented, a resolution was passed unanimously instructing me to advise you that our organization is not connected with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in any manner, being exclusively an independent theatre owners' organization.

It is our belief that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is dominated by producers-distributors and by theatres owned by producers-distributors or affiliated with the same. For this reason, we hold that Ed Kuykendall cannot adequately represent our interests in the current socalled "intra-industry" conferences.

Our organization believes in controlling and adjusting our problems within the industry if possible.

We feel that the trade press announcement to the effect that "Such groups of exhibitors as shall be deemed advisable by the MPTOA will be invited later, if needed," will in no way change the expected biased aspect of these conferences.

It is highly probable, therefore, that unless strictly independent theatre groups are represented at the conferences the result of same will be the subject of doubt and dissension.—J. A. DAVIS, Executive Secretary, Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, Inc.

other fine colored travelogue.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 1: Charley Chase—Personally I thought this the silliest of the Charley Chase comedies, but judging from the laughs from all ages my patrons did not agree with me. Pleased and that is all that I ask. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revue—We paired this one with "Broadway Melody of 1936" and what a pair! The color in this two-reeler is the best we've seen so far; and for all-around entertainment the show put on by m. c. Leo Carrillo, Bing Crosby, Raquel Torres, Lloyd Hamilton, Fio Rita's orchestra and others is tops! MGM deserves a hand for making a short like this. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

WATER SPORTS: MGM Sports Parade—As always with this series, our folks were well pleased.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

BABES IN HOLLYWOOD: Headliners—Not the usual band type of act that is expected in this series. Still it is a very funny subject featuring David Holt and some other cute youngsters who produce a movie all their own.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MUSICAL MEMORIES: Color Classics—The best old-timers' cartoon we've seen. The old songs are brought to life and animated dancers or singers put them over. Real good orchestral background.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VIM, VIGOR AND VITALITY: Popeye the Sailor—A good Popeye subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOU GOTTA BE A FOOTBALL HERO: Popeye the Sailor—This is a very good cartoon, full of football hero stuff and Popeye is the hero. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

FELIX THE CAT AND THE GOOSE THAT LAID THE GOLDEN EGG: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—An outstanding cartoon. Will go over good in any spot.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

FOOLISH HEARTS: Radio Musical Comedies—Two-reel musical. Two good songs, balance weak. Lacks action. No chorus or dancing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 1—Not as good as the later Major Bowes, but a nice little filler on any program. The Oklahoma Mustang Wranglers pleased every one and RKO is to be complimented on these doubles. Running time 19 minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW AND THE INDIANS: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Very good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS: No. 51—I just can't say enough about it. All I can say is it is too good to be true, but yet it is a fact. Fox News marches on. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

FOX MOVIETOWN NEWS: No. 52—Very well done. I cannot say enough for Fox as they seem to fill every gap that a feature or other shorts do not do. Fox News still tops in our cinema theatre. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

SHADES OF CAIRO: Magic Carpet Series—Beautiful scenes and famous landmarks. It is an education in itself. Very suitable for any program. Liked 100 per cent. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

COCK OF THE WALK: Silly Symphonies—An ordinary colored Disney Silly Symphony, good, but not exceptional.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

CLUBHOUSE PARTY: Mentone Musical Comedy (No. 6-B)—A very good musical comedy; all cast good. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ON YOUR RADIO DIAL: Mentone Musical Comedy (No. 3)—A dandy number for anywhere. Swell acts throughout.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPEEDY JUSTICE: Mentone Musical Comedy (No. 2-B)—A very satisfactory two-reeler. Acts mostly all good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOU CAN BE HAD: Universal Comedies Series—A novelty comedy with a cast of monkeys. Very much different and good. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BY REQUEST: Melody Masters Series—Very good. This series is always good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHECK YOUR SOMBRERO: Armida, Tito Coral—Two reels of mighty good entertainment. Good dancing and music and in beautiful colors. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DOORMAN'S OPERA: Broadway Brevities—Well, well, at last a musical two-reeler from Vitagraph where they filled up both reels with entertainment. This one is more like what we used to get from these musicals. Lately the others have wasted the first reel.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DUBLIN IN BRASS: Morton Downey—An ideal St. Patrick's Day subject. Good for any time, nevertheless, especially where Morton Downey is liked. Very Irish in atmosphere.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JOHNNY GREEN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—Another Melody Master that clicked. This series is always a hit.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

JOLLY COBURN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—An excellent band act.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MISS GLORY: Merrie Melodies—Will get by, but not up to Warner standard.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OFF THE RECORD: Melody Masters—An exceptionally good band act. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PHIL SPITALNY ALL GIRL ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—The usual fine type of band act we can count on from this orchestra. The ladies are okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacock, N. H. General patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Broadway Brevities—The figures on a blue Dutch plate come to life and sing and dance to everyone's satisfaction. Color adds to it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

RHYTHM IN LIGHT: A very marvellous short which we played with "Madame Bovary." It was based on the idea when one hears the music he thinks of things. Well, it showed things one would think of as he heard music. Very different from the average short. Running time. eight minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

Trans Lux Washington House

Trans-Lux Theatres Corporation will erect a new short subjects and newsreel theatre in Washington, Percy N. Furber, president, declared in New York this week. The house will seat 600 and will be opened late in the Fall, Mr. Furber said.

"Barkers" Ordered Discontinued

Detroit authorities have ordered theatres to discontinue the use of "barkers" regardless of whether or not trade is directly solicited. This ruling follows the four recent convictions on charges of public nuisance and indecency against the Empress, burlesque house.

Dunphy Joins Paramount

Christopher Dunphy, formerly associated with the Wall Street companies on public relations, has joined Paramount to handle financial publicity.

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended April 25, 1936, from 116 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,168,472, a decrease of $60,278 from the total for the preceding week ended April 18, 1936, when 112 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,228,750.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We came down here to attend a meeting of the NIDEA association. But maybe you don't know what the NIDEA is. If you don't know you might get it confounded with the other alphabetical associations, but don't do that. This association is not religious, sectarian or political, and it does business on business principles without having to consult Tom, Dick or Harry or the Relief Director.

So that you may know just what the NIDEA really is, we inform you that it is the Nebraska-Iowa-Dakota Exhibitors Association, formed for the purpose of doing business on an equitable and fair basis both winter and summer, rain or shine or "when the moon comes over the mountain," etc., etc.

M. J. Chicoine, representing the United Press, and Omaha correspondent of the HERALD, and this Vagabond Colyumnist were present to do battle for a suffering public, with pencil and paper in hand, but the NIDEA passed a resolution requesting that we refrain from reporting the proceedings of the convention, and that's that, so we will let it go at that.

We might say, however, "without fear of successful contradiction" (to use a political expression), that the association is composed of a mighty fine bunch of fellows who aim to "do some good and not much hurt," as Doc Bixby used to say, and that the convention was orderly and harmonious and intelligent and sober. (We wish you would emphasize that "sober" part.) Charlie Williams presided in a very masterful manner and Walter Creel acted just like he was the secretary, and we presume he was; anyhow, he was a good one, whatever he was.

The attendance was much lighter than was expected because of a very severe storm which raged over Iowa and Nebraska and which was sent down here by John Piller of Valley City, North Dakota, and Sherm Fitch of Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Those boys always did have it in for Omaha for some reason. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

Among the delegation from Omaha, we were pleased to note Walter Creel, J. E. Kirk, Sam Epstein and Lawrence Grobeck. Those from Iowa were Ralph Brown, Dale Goldie, Dick Kerberg, J. D. Warnick and Mr. Friedman, and from "Our Home State" came Harold Schoonover, J. E. Holmsworth, H. F. Kennedy, Howard Kennedy, C. J. Riggs, A. Burrus, J. M. Reynolds, W. A. Shirwood, A. Beams, Jack McCarty, W. J. Seydlitz, Walter Bradley, Billy Youngclaus, M. Thompson, C. J. Kremer, Charles Prokop, H. E. Brookings, U. A. Brown, Walter Gunther, John Grabenstein and Glen Van Wey. The ladies present were Mrs. Georgia Racely, Mrs. Jennie Wickman and Mrs. Gunther. There might have been more exhibitors present, but we failed to get their names, and we hope they won't want to shoot us because of our weak memory. The chief objection to these conventions that we have noted is that there are not enough lady exhibitors represented. They add tone and dignity to the gathering.

We don't know whether it is true or not, but we have been told that in some localities they are paying teachers to teach the rising generation how to dance. Well, that's all right; if they can't learn anything else, they ought to be taught something, and if we should have another dry season out here in this agricultural section maybe we will want some instructions, too, but unfortunately they put the most of our brains in our heads.

Last night we went and saw a screening of GB's "Rhodes," with Walter Huston, Oscar Homolka, Basil Sidney, Peggy Ashcraft et al., and it's our opinion that those of you who are acquainted with the history of Rhodes' invasion of South Africa and the discovery of the Kimberly diamond mines and the gold fields will be very much interested in this picture, but we are in doubt about it pleasing the younger generation. It is very largely historical. Mr. Huston gave his usual very interesting performance, and Oscar Homolka as Kruger gives Mr. Huston a hot run for first honors. He is exceptionally good.

Then they screened Irvin S. Cobb in "Everybody's Old Man," a comedy drama with a lot of comedy and considerable drama. We've been told that Joe E. Brown once said if he ever met a homelier man than he is, he'd shoot him. We hope he never meets Irvin, for he's a doggone nice chap and he played very capably and the story was a very interesting one. Rochelle Hudson, Norman Foster and Johnny Downs were plenty good also. If you like comedy drama this one ought to please. It's a Twentieth Century-Fox production.

We are told that H. E. Brookings of Weeping Water, Neb., is going to remodel and refurnish his theatre and make it up to date. Somehow that boy keeps a little ahead of the procession all the while. Also, H. F. Kennedy of Broken Bow, Neb., is going to open a second-run house. These Nebraska boys can't be headed off with anything smaller than a .45 Colt.

Bob Ballantyne, of the Scott-Ballantyne Equipment Co., wants us to make a trip with him out to Gordon, Chadron and Alliance, Neb. We'll do it with the understanding that Bob doesn't drive over 95 miles an hour. Gus Harms says we needn't be afraid because 94 is all his Model T can make.

Ted Mendelhall of the Paramount exchange drove four of us back to our hotel from the Variety Club and when he backed out of the garage he backed off the approach and broke one of the springs to his car, and Ted was sober, too, just as he always is. That was what we call bad luck. If we were Ted we'd sue the city for damages, doggone if we wouldn't.

Max Winetraub of the Fontinelle exchange says when he was on the Coast recently he put a dollar in nickels in a slot machine and got back 95 cents. Then he put the 95 back and got back nothing.

Max, you know, is the fellow who went out to the Ak-Sar-Ben races and when the horses started he got up and yelled, "Come on, somebody; come on, somebody," and a fellow asked what he said that for and Max replied, " 'Cause I've got money on all of 'em."

We've got a good job for some radio love-song crooner. A farmer out here wants a crooner to croon for his cows while he milks 'em.

What a lot of exhibitors would like to see 'em do is to put Eddie Quillan in more pictures than they do.

We made out an order for some nursery stock to the Hamburg Nursery company of Hamburg, Iowa, and sent it to Howard Colon of the Colonial theatre at Hamburg with the request that he deliver it, and we have just received a letter from him stating he had done it. How's that for service? He also enclosed a check and asked us to have his subscription to the HERALD renewed. All right, Howard, we will do it, and we thank you very much. Whenever you want anything done, and done well, you can depend on these theatre boys every time.

We thought that spring was here to stay, but—

When the sun comes up in the morning
And starts melting the snow all away,
And the Plymouth Rocks cackle a warning
That they have laid eggs in the hay.

Then we hope that our nerves will be steady
When we hear the cook come in and say,
"Come, Colonel, your breakfast is ready,"
We'll stop writing this bull right away.

Only we haven't any Plymouth Rocks or hay.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"AND THEN WHAT?"

The assumptions and resolutions set down on this page few issues back as had to do with the necessity of job security for the manager brings comment from a visiting member. Gist of his contention was to the effect that while without question he backed the stand taken here, the subject calls for further finger-pointing.

"Security first and rightly so," said the brother, "and then what? How about the manager who has no reason to fear the loss of his job but who is concerned over the lack of opportunity to increase his salary?"

The Round Tabler quoted his situation as an instance. He is manager of a highly-held neighborhood circuit house and doing a very satisfactory job. His superiors are all nice folk, they like his work and say so, there is a conspicuous absence of any whipping tactics and things go along. But there doesn't seem to be much stirring in the way of advancement to a house that pays more money and the manager's repeated strivings for a shot at the Big Time have so far been unsuccessful.

Well, without any especial straining to write a brief for the complainant's superiors, this choking off of natural ambition is not the fault in every case of the top executives. The answer often is that there are more good men than there are available bigger opportunities and although a man may clearly show his ability to handle a better paying situation, there are unfortunately not enough of these better spots to go round.

So what to do?

The problem is in process of satisfactory solution by those smart exhibitors and exhibitor-executives who have inaugurated a percentage system of payment; who realize that a capable manager is a skilled salesman and that the best salesmen are those remunerated on a basis of how much extra business they bring in.

Giving your hard-hitting but dissatisfied theatreman a chance to dispel his financial worries by rewarding him for bringing in bigger grosses, at one stroke severs the Gordian knot that is strangling a lot of worthwhile initiative.

Because it is the soundest and most satisfactory method yet come to this desk, reference is again made to what amounts to a commission form of payment now in its second year of successful operation by Famous Players-Canadian.

The plan is simplicity itself for the manager shares in every dollar of increased yearly grosses at his theatre.

Thus in one move, the circuit is assured of powerful week-after-week showmanship in every situation and managers assured of both security on the job plus a fair exchange for their talents and labors—an equitable arrangement for all concerned.

And best of all, the ambitious theatreman yearning for greener financial pastures may well find the answer to "and then what?" by this incentive to dig deeper for pay dirt in his own "back yard."

NATURAL BUSINESS LEADERS

On a following page are the details reported by Round Tabler Bob Richardson of the annual "Citywide Sale" put on by the 5,000-community of Yorkton, up in Saskatchewan. And only recently was recounted in this section the story of Round Tabler Jack Nelson's promotion of a "Five-Star Sale" that obtained the cooperation of 90 per cent of the mercantile establishments in North Bay, Canada.

The above are just a few of the instances strengthening the belief that in many smaller situations your theatre manager in addition to being the laddie who operates the picture house is also looked upon as a natural leader of city business drives —which of course is not surprising.

For of necessity exploitation and advertising minded, the agile-brain theatreman is trained to conceive and develop ways and means of "bringing 'em in". And the impulses credited with boxoffice increases are often adaptable to a much larger canvass.

SHOW OF SHOWMANSHIP

The challenge for more powerful showmanship in the exhibition of pictures is to be answered again in Motion Picture Herald's second annual "Show of Showmanship", announced through Managers' Round Table Club to open in Rockefeller Center on May 19. This, the theatreman's own exhibition of advertising, exploitation and publicity is intended to convey what definite advances have been made in the field to round up the elusive boxoffice dollar.

Showmen and other visitors interested in the art of advertising as practiced in the theatre are invited to the "Show" in the expectation that what they see there will serve as an incentive to greater effort throughout the industry for yet more intensive showmanship and more practical recognition for the theatreman who so capably carries on.

Circuit President Rewards March Silver Plaque Winner

Leading theatre executives throughout the country express their appreciation of the Quigley Awards Competitions by rewarding managers who are voted Plaques or Mentions for their efforts. Among the circuit heads who so declare themselves is A. Manta, president, Indiana-Illinois Theatres, Inc., a unit of which is the Elkhart Amusement Co., of Elkhart, Ind., where at the Elco Theatre, Sid Holland put over the campaign that earned for him the March Silver. Writes Mr. Manta:

"Was very pleased upon learning that our Mr. Sid Holland, City Manager in Elkhart, Indiana, won the March Silver Plaque, through his efforts in exploiting 'Music Goes 'Round'.

"Wish to assure you that Mr. Holland, aside from having the honor of winning a Bronze Plaque and several other contests of a similar character, has been rewarded by our company each and every time, and this particular time, of course, will be no exception. You may forward the Plaque to the above address so that suitable presentation will be made.

"Thanking you and Motion Picture Herald for your efforts in making it possible for ambitious managers in our business to show what they can do and gain the recognition that such efforts are entitled to."

Holland has served the theatre successfully in various parts of the country. During his operations he has won high recognition in major contests and in addition to the March Silver was voted the Bronze Plaque in April, 1935. Holland has also taken down a number of Quigley Awards Sheepskin Certificate Mentions in Elkhart where he is City Manager of the Manta interests.

Standard Theatres Personnel Execute "Pasteur" Campaign

For advance date on "Louis Pasteur" at the Criterion, ace Standard Theatres house in Oklahoma City, Pat McGee, general manager, enlisted cooperation of all personnel attached to the ten local theatres of the circuit.

To convey the class atmosphere of the attraction, much of the conventional exploitation was avoided with a new type of sales drive instituted to strike directly at points not usually covered. Through this method speakers were sent to appear before civic, social, educational and church organizations. Society editor of local sheet was also employed to contact these associations directly.

By tieup with Board of Education, special student tickets were sold, blocks of tickets delivered to each school principal. In this instance age limit of children's tickets was raised to include pupils in junior high school classes. A second special ticket was made available for clubs, to encourage line parties.

Phone company erected three lines in outer theatre lobby booth with three operators engaged to communicate with housewives. Sign copy explained the idea. Ten days ahead invitation screening was held for selected audience requested to fill out comment cards to be quoted in advertising. Trailer before showing asked that all present tell friends about the picture.

For further buildup, McGee addressed personal letters of invitation to all local ministers and families stressing need of encouragement for this type of picture.

All the ten houses carried lobby displays on the Criterion date and also ran teaser trailers. Following the special screening, latter were replaced with one quoting patrons well known in the community. Newspaper ads followed Movie Reporter idea and publicity included editorials.

Eight-Page Section Tops Knevels' Exhibition

With the intense cooperation of 14 leading stores most successfully was put over a Merchants' Exhibition at the RKO Capitol, Ottawa, Can., by Manager Howard Knevels, in conjunction with "Petrified Forest," the special show plugged with an eight-page section in leading daily.

Front page of section was given over entirely to the show, the distinct layout topped with banner reading: "RKO Capitol Merchants' Exhibition in Canada's Most Beautiful Theatre." Photos of the theatre lobby, foyer and mezzanine were included as were names of cooperating merchants, who set up displays of goods at the theatre. Art drawing of Capitol front and current program filled rest of page.

All stores carried large cutouts in windows, together with stills and copy tying in exhibition with picture and added stage feature. Latter featured winners in a weekly radio discovery hour broadcast over Canadian coast-to-coast hookup. Further tieups were secured in over 30 prominently located stores, for added buildup on picture.

$1,000 Prizes Given In "City-Wide Sale"

Citywide tiein with local merchants with $1,000 in prize money given to purchasers, said to have been successful enough to keep a lot of stores open last year during the month of the campaign is reported by Manager Bob Richardson, Roxy, Yorkton, Canada. Richardson reports the stunt put on annually for a number of years and terms it a "honey" to help theatre grosses and store sales in general.

Idea is called a "City-Wide Sale" worked as follows:

October being the time in that sector when farmers have most leisure after crops are in, this month is picked for the drive. Last year the Big Sale started on September 27th and continued through October. With each 50-cent purchase in any of the cooperating stores, buyers were given a numbered coupon to be signed and deposited in boxes along the main street.

Each Wednesday afternoon a weekly draw was made with scrip money given to the winners to be exchanged for merchandise at any of the stores in on the drive. This provision was made to insure the prize money being spent locally and not taken out of town. At the end of the month, generally the last Wednesday or Saturday, drawing for the main prizes was made with thousands in town for this event.

Newspaper and broadcasting station gave a lot of aid with paper running page-one stories and full-page ads to put it over. Publicity was heavy in advance and during the entire month.

Yorkton is a community of 5,000, in the center of a good grain country. Farmers are said to spend money liberally and the slant behind the above tiein was to get as much of this money into the tills of the Yorkton merchants and Richardson's boxoffice.

Prize money coupons were sold to the merchants for $7.50 per thousand and the returns from this paid for the advertising and prizes.

Goetz Guarantees Date In Marquee Copy

Managers have run "personal guarantee" ads and other endorsements in print, but Manager Joe Goetz, RKO Paramount, Cincinnati, gave the slant a new twist by giving "If You Could Only Cook" a personal okay in the theatre marquee copy (see photo). Advance trailer, lobby setpieces, and special heralds distributed widely in stores also carried Goetz' personal plug.

Ushers, doormen and cashiers wore chef's uniforms with all the staff wearing imprinted celluloid buttons. Special tiein with Sears brought full windows in stores, broadcasts on the store program, stuffers in all outgoing packages and two special displays inside of store.

Easter Egg Hunt Staged by Eldridge

The first Easter stunt to be reported to the Club this year comes from Frank K. Eldridge, Capitol, Concord, N. H., who advertised a Shirley Temple Easter egg hunt in connection with "Captain January."

Colored eggs were hidden about Municipal Park and to youngster finding egg which contained photo of the starlet, cash prize was awarded. Promoted Easter baskets and tickets were given those finding largest number of eggs.

Merchants Tiein On Baby Contest

At an entire cost to the theatre of $30, Mel Morrison, Strand, Dover, N. H., put over a mighty successful baby contest with ten merchants cooperating and newspaper tieups arranged three weeks ahead. Each of these merchants made up full window displays and distributed heralds at stores and through mailing lists, bought radio time to plug the contest.

Votes were passed out on the terms of one cent's worth of purchase to one vote and baby photos were posted in lobby with ballot box. Photos were numbered instead of using names. Mel reports the merchants so well satisfied with contest they plan another for next year.

Attractive novelty blotters were placed on writing counters at downtown banks, hotels, post offices, etc., etc., with "Tale of Two Cities" copy by Al Reynolds, State, Austin, Texas. Professor of English from university was invited to opening and newspaper testimonial was received from him.

Letters were sent to all English teachers, librarians and school principals asking them to urge their students to see the picture, special ad layouts used in papers and special announcements over radio broadcasts.

For "Ceiling Zero," Al planted telescope gag in streets with copy "If you want to see real stars, see James Cagney and Pat O'Brien in," etc., etc. Cashier was dressed in air hostess uniform and whirlwind type of motor was displayed on platform of truck in parking zone.

Johnny Denman, Rialto, Denver, Colo., for "Dream" says one of the biggest aids to sell the picture was put on by the local Huffman Theatre employees, with prizes to those selling greatest number of tickets.

Libraries distributed bookmarks, and May Company store sponsored a children's matinee at special prices, kiddies purchasing their tickets at the store, which tied in with ads during run.

Cincinnati Found Particular In Choice of Picture Fare

Consistent and Continuous Advertising Necessary to Keep Up Grosses

by EDDIE MAYER
Cincinnati Correspondent

Liberal use of newspaper space distinguishes the high quality of display advertising created by theatre admen of Cincinnati, the city treated in this week's installment of the Showman's Travelogue series now current in Managers' Round Table.

Rated as a good show town, the Ohio metropolis boasts of a picture-minded public and interest is kept up by application of consistent showmanship sponsored by the various theatres. Though ballyhoo is not permitted, other fruitful angles are stressed with what are reported as usually gratifying results at the box-office.

—A-MIKE.

Cincinnati, southern Ohio metropolis with a population of 750,000, including the immediate suburbs, is a closed situation, being dominated by RKO through its subsidiary, the RKO Midwest Corporation, which operates the Albee, Palace, Capitol, Grand, Lyric and Family, downtown first runs, in addition to the Paramount and Orpheum, large neighborhood houses, the former being a deluxe operation. Isaac Libson, division manager in charge of Cincinnati and Dayton, also operates Keith's, downtown first run, besides several smaller subsequent runs in the downtown sector. Col. Arthur M. Frudenfeld is managing director for the RKO Cincinnati division.

The city is essentially a manufacturing center, noted internationally for the production of soaps and kindred commodities, cosmetics, watches, machine tools, shoes and sundry other articles. More recently it has regained its position as one of the most important centers of the beer and liquor industry, operating some of the largest breweries and distilleries in the world in the adjacent environs.

Excellent Territorial Draw

Geographically, Cincinnati might appropriately be called "The place where the south begins," for it is located just across the Ohio river, about three minutes' ride from Kentucky, in the northern section of which are located a number of sizable cities. These, together with an area of approximately 150 miles in Ohio and Indiana (at the western border of the city) provide an excellent territorial draw, especially since Cincinnati theatres have ample first run protection over the adjoining territory.

Transportation is provided from the territory by rail, interurban cars and bus lines, and week-end out-of-town theatre parties, plus combined theatre and shopping trips through the week are common occurrences.

LOBBY DISPLAY. J. N. Morgan, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Ga., created above display done with cutawl and airgun. Color scheme: green background lighted from rear with colored bulbs.

Downtown first runs are well attended by surburban patrons. Many use their own cars, although a large percentage ride the buses and street cars, which provide frequent service at 10-cent fares. Street parking in the downtown section presents a serious problem. In fact, movements have from time to time been agitated by city council to abolish parking in the business district to relieve traffic congestion. This is expected to eventually take place. However, within easy access of practically all downtown theatres are located public garages which cater especially to theatre patrons, particularly for evening attendance.

The parking situation is not nearly as acute in the suburban area, although quite a few exhibitors provide parking space for patrons without charge.

Cincinnati has a large German element, and in previous years was internationally famous for its German traditions. The population breakdown as to nationalities is 81.7 per cent white; 10.6 per cent foreign born and 1.7 per cent negroes. Exclusive of administrative and executive employees and persons engaged in professional pursuits, employment records show the percentage of semi-skilled and unskilled labor to be 59 per cent; skilled workers, 15 per cent and white-collar workers, 26 per cent.

The average admission charged at the first-run houses is 35 and 42 cents, inclusive of the three per cent state tax which exhibitors must pay on their grosses. The scales at neighborhoods and subsequent-run houses, both suburban and downtown, vary. For example, the RKO Paramount, subsequent run, has a matinee rate of 25 cents, with an evening scale of 25 and 35 cents for balcony and lower floor, while the RKO Orpheum, also subsequent, has a 15 and 25-cent scale for balcony and lower floor. Some independent subsequent runs charge 10 cents; others 15, 25 and 30 cents for any seat, any time.

From a standpoint of theatre operation, Cincinnati enjoys an enviable reputation. Managers are popular with the public, both through individual personal contact and participation in fraternal, social and civic functions, membership in various organizations being the manager's privilege. Theatre service is practically perfect in every detail. Patrons are handled with the utmost courtesy and consideration, every employee being thoroughly schooled in this respect.

Theatres are kept scrupulously clean and sanitary.

Every RKO manager, for instance, is required to fill out a weekly inspection report, blanks being provided for that purpose, which covers every detail of the house. These are signed and a copy sent to the division office.

Projectionists also are provided with blanks upon which are noted condition of all film when received. This prevents disputes when the film is in poor or mutilated condition when received and permits time for proper action to be taken before the film is shown. One copy of the report is sent to the assistant managing director, one copy to the house manager, and one copy retained by the projectionist; thus sound is kept to the highest possible state of efficiency.

Houses Advertise Heavily

Theatres, especially first runs, are heavily advertised, the newspaper advertisements dominating, if not entirely occupying the page at least once a week, usually on Thursdays, just prior to the Friday openings. At other times, very liberal advertising space is used. Large display ads, with generous amounts of original hand lettering and art are used. No mats are used, but only original stereotypes are furnished newspapers. The corps of artists in charge of E. V. Dinerman, RKO advertising and publicity director, handle some 60 ads per week for the Cincinnati and Dayton houses, as well as those in Louisville, Ky., and other nearby circuit towns. Each ad is drawn differently, so that there is very seldom, if ever, a duplication or even a marked similarity in the art or text.

Window and tack cards are used, as are also one-sheets, and in some cases 24-sheets on the more prominent billboards. No ballyhoo is permitted by the city, there being a very strict ordinance against it. Local newspapers cooperate with the theatres to the fullest extent in tieups, contests and similar tactics, besides running reviews under the reviewer's name, but never with the reviewer's likeness. The Cincinnati Enquirer, the only morning paper, and the only one with a Sunday edition, runs a Sunday theatre section the major portion of which is devoted to current pictures. A very consid-

ANNUAL ICE CARNIVAL CLICKS

Racing Program Started In 1935 By Harry Botwick Repeated This Year; Wide Cooperation Gained

Put on and with great success last year was a citywide Ice Carnival, sponsored by Manager Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Me., and the Portland Evening Express. So well was it received that this year under the same auspices the Carnival was repeated with 200 school children participating in the various races. City recreational department heads, the schools, libraries, important organizations and top merchants cooperated to make it bigger and better.

While of course the Carnival is pointed for the winter time, there is no reason why it cannot be adapted for spring and summer sports generally. Here is what was done and how.

General Procedure

Ice Carnival was open to all children of grammar and high school ages. Entry blanks were printed in the paper on seven separate days during the month in advance the event was publicized by the daily and at the theatre.

Skating events were in two classes, grammar and high school. For grammar school boys, there were the 100, 200 and 880-yard races, and for grammar school girls, the 100 and 220.

High school events included 220, 880, one mile, two mile for boys, and 220, 880 and one mile for girls.

No entrant could participate in more than one event and all blanks had to be mailed or delivered to the Carnival Committee, at the theatre, before the deadline, three days before the party. As entries were received, the theatre sent confirming post cards, and blanks stated that if entrant did not receive this confirmation within two days after mailing, the theatre was to be called. Contestants were given tags on which were listed individual events and which were to be worn conspicuously. Officials wore blue tags and contestants yellow.

If weather necessitated postponement, arrangements were made to have school bell rung and this was stressed in the publicity. To aid the progress and smooth handling, amplifying system was set up and man stationed at microphone during the entire Carnival with line-up of events.

Botwick's Ice Carnival Queen

Botwick stresses great importance to the success of the Carnival of proper choice of competent officials, starters, timers, judges, clerks of the course, messengers, etc. The Portland officials were brought together in advance of the Carnival to go over the procedure and Harry says this saved a lot of time, facilitated the answering of all questions, etc.

All contestants reported at the theatre in the morning where they were given instructions regarding conduct on the ice by prominent high school athletics director, who acted as Head Judge. Entrants were then paraded to the site of the races, which started at nine and were over at noon. In addition to the events listed, there was also a high school relay race and an impromptu potato race for laughs and to give the juniors a chance to win something.

Grand march by all contestants was also included in addition to the choosing of a Carnival Queen (see photo). Prizes were donated by Botwick, the paper, merchants, etc. These included hockey stick and shoe skates by the Boston Bruin hockey team and as the Carnival was put on just ahead of Botwick's date on "Milky Way" an engraved cup was presented by Lloyd. Martin Mullin, of M & P Theatres, of which the State is a unit, also presented a trophy. There were 24 prizes in all.

These two gifts were duly publicized in the Portland papers as were photos showing Lloyd holding the cup and Mr. Mullin turning his trophy over to Armand J. Moreau, Botwick's district manager. General publicity started a month ahead and concluded five days after the Carnival, topped on the evening of the races, by a layout of shots in the Evening News and front page two-column story. All in all, Harry reports over 350 inches of free publicity with space rates running around three dollars an inch.

Other publicity was secured by announcements in class rooms at all schools, posters on bulletin boards, bulletin and cards at public library, theatre trailers, lobby cards, lobby display of prizes and posters at rink where the events were held.

Carnival Helped Theatre

Although the Carnival idea was held to promote goodwill and institutional publicity, it also and definitely sold theatre tickets, Botwick says. The party was held in the middle of a no-school week and on the following day "Milky Way" opened at the State, booking arranged to capitalize upon these events.

The publicity obtained on the cup from Lloyd and repeated announcements of the picture before the thousands gathered to view the races helped greatly to spread the word. Opening day's business on the date was the greatest in many a month, says Botwick, and children's attendance immediately after the Carnival jumped to a new high.

Cincinnati Patrons Pick Picture Fare

erable amount of art is used for this. Merchants are keen for tieups and seldom, if ever, refuse to participate.

Only one house, the RKO Shubert, plays stage shows in addition to pictures, and does a good or fair business in proportion to the program offered.

Cincinnati is rated as a good show town, with picture houses well patronized for the better product, while the mediocre pictures do a comparatively light business. The natives are definitely picture-minded, but particular as to their movie fare; therefore, consistent and continuous advertising is necessary in order to keep the turnstiles clicking.

Theatre competition is especially keen in the summer through the medium of the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens and Coney Island, an up-the-river resort, as also Bryant's Show Boat, which anchors at a strategic wharf location in the Ohio river in the downtown section, and features old-time melodrama. Latonia race track, the Cincinnati Symphony and operatic presentations and industrial exhibits at Music Hall, with the largest auditorium in the city, also provide heavy competitive factors.

The inspection report covers the theatre premises under 21 distinct headings, further broken down to individual items under each of the heads which cover:

Box office, outer lobby, main lobby, orchestra foyer, orchestra, boxes, balcony, men's rooms, ladies' rooms, stage, basement, booth, ceiling, roof, downspouts, fire-escapes, outside passageways, outside walls and doors, signs and organ loft.

Under these are some hundred odd locations and furnishings, all of which are to be inspected and checked.

Moule Sells Ads for "Pink"

Ernie Moule, Capitol, Brantford, Canada, went to town on "Strike Me Pink," securing a four-page pink insert in daily paper which covers surrounding territory. Streamer headlines were on every page with "Pink" catch lines in 27 odd ads. Ernest personally sold the advertising and a neat job he did of it.

"JOFFEE'S IDEA WILL GET RETURNS"

—HOWARD WAUGH, MEMPHIS ZONE, WARNER BROS. THEATRES DISTRICT MANAGER

FAVORS THIS METHOD OF BOXOFFICE BUILDUP

Dear Mike:

There is nothing particularly new in Joffee's Tower Theatre idea and is a custom used as long back as I can remember, even dating to the 10-20-30 "rep days" "B. P." (Before Pictures). This is entirely separate from the much abused ducat idea which I am strictly against, being a firm believer that pass hounds are knockers.

There are millions of people who do not attend theatres, the reason being that their activities and interests have been directed along other channels of relaxation or amusement. If you could get them into a theatre once or twice to see something that appealed to them, you certainly have a splendid opportunity to bag them as a regular.

I think the idea is sound and as being handled by Joffee will get him direct returns. Tom Saxe used an elaborate house to house canvass idea fourteen or fifteen years ago. It was followed by a personal telephone call and secured marvelous results in several of his towns. I have used it since in smaller towns and traced direct results from it. Best regards.

—Howard Waugh, Memphis Zone Warner Theatres Dist. Mgr.

PASSES ARE MONEY, SAYS LOEW AD CHIEF

Dear Mike:

You ask me to comment on the free ticket stunt used by the Tower, Kansas City.

Far be it from me to try to tell Mr. Barney Joffee, of the Tower, Kansas City, what to do to build up his theatre. He probably knows what his theatre needs and he knows his Kansas City. An idea that would be fatal in one situation might turn out okay in another. By now Mr. Joffee knows definitely whether his free-ticket plan worked; whether the benefits were worth the cost.

However, generally speaking, I would not recommend the free ticket plan for any theatre I am handling. In the great majority of cases, I would say, it is bad psychology, bad business and just one of those "flash-in-the-pan" things that cost more than they are worth. I consider passes as real money. When it comes to pass-chiseling, I haven't as much confidence in the dear public as has Mr. Joffee. In most situations I know about, the pass seekers (despite their promise not to fib) would turn out to be at least 50 per cent our regular cash customers merely seeking a free show.

The basis of Mr. Joffee's idea, I assume, is the thought that a movie theatre can be "sampled." That might be true of a brand new theatre or one that has just been rejuvenated but for an established theatre over six months old, I can't see what we have to "sample." Each show is sold on its merits and few people see a picture twice no matter how good it is. It is true that comfort, service and courtesy mean something to the patron. But this "institutional" goodwill is of much less importance today than it was years ago when clean, comfortable theatres were not so common.

On the editorial page of this department, issue of April 18, was set down some thought anent Barney Joffee's invitation to Kansas City picturegoers to see a show at his Tower Theatre as guests of the management. Joffee's invite was announced in his papers in the form of an advertisement, reproduced on page 55, of the same issue.

Representative theatremen were asked to give us their reactions, pro and con, on this unusual manner of bringing public attention to the theatre and here are published some of the early replies.

A-MIKE VOGEL

Institutional advertising for movie theatres has some value—but hardly enough to pay any real money for it. The investment in a fine theatre and its comforts is your institutional advertising budget.

From there on you have your show to sell—and they can't be "sampled"—especially in a house that changes programs weekly or oftener. You don't even have time to benefit much by word-of-mouth praise from the pass-users. And free patrons are admitted to be our severest critics!

Probably the most institutionalized theatre in the history of our business has a weekly box office fluctuation from, say $30,000 to $130,000, depending on the show. True, there is an "institutional" minimum there—but not enough to meet the "nut."

We have used a variation of Mr. Joffee's idea but only in special situations. A new neighborhood theatre has been "sold" through house-to-house canvassers inviting housewives to see the new theatre as our guests. The same thing has been done when we took over a badly run-down neighborhood theatre—to show the folks that the roof didn't leak any more; that the air was now clean; that the new seats were comfortable. But to use this method on an established theatre would seem like bad business to us.

If you have a bang-up show the public wants and you advertise that—you don't need free tickets. If your show isn't what they want, then getting them into the theatre on passes won't help that show or your theatre any.

But I hope Mr. Joffee's experiment proved the exception to the rule.—Oscar A. Doob, Director Adv. and Pub., Loew's Theatres.

HAL IS "INDIAN GIVER" ON PASS DISTRIBUTION

Dear Mike:

Yes, sir, a pass is just as valuable to me as my good leg, and I am one of those who has even offered to pay a chiseler's admission out of my pocket, rather than have him think me an easy mark, and have him on my neck from then on. While doing so I impressed upon him just how much an Oakley was worth; just what I thought of "askers" in general, and that just because he knew me well enough to slap me on the back was no reason he could see the show for nothing. He refused the money, bought a ticket, and has been a regular ever since.

I find that those who get in for nothing are the biggest knockers; that alone should call for a second thought before giving away a free ticket. I find, too, that although the pass nuisance is still with us, and probably always will be, that the manager who gives passes with reluctance, gets just as far, has just as many friends, and gets his promotion just as speedily, as the fellow who puts them out like hand-bills. As a matter of fact, the manager who is "pass-tighty" will probably rate a heck of a lot more with the powers that be.

Of course, I give passes, but I'm an Indian giver. I give passes when I know darn well I'm getting my money's worth. I give passes to those who actually do something for the theatres, whether it be extra publicity, store space, errands, a money saving favor, or some such thing.

Kansas City no doubt is quite different than Miami, but to my notion the mere fact of giving away free tickets like snowballs is almost the same as admitting that there is something wrong with the machinery. But no matter the reason: it certainly is "doing it up brown." Now don't get me wrong, I have no bone to pick with Barney Joffee. I don't even know the gentleman; but I do think that if he or his organization just gave just as much thought to the wording and the arrangement of all his advertising as he, or they, did to the one about free tickets, that there would be a noticeable increase in business without resorting to the instigation of a pass riot.

—Hal Kopplin, Adv. Director, Wometco Theatres, Miami, Fla.

ADAMS CASHES IN ON PASS LIBERALITY

Dear Mike:

Apropos of your current discussion of the "pass evil," I have been shoving out ducats quite liberally of late, but I believe that I cash in on this liberality.

First, I knock off a thousand heralds twice a week on my printing press. Fifteen newsboys in Mason and neighboring towns put these handbills into every house and receive a pass for every distribution. An occasional check-up indicates that the bills really go into the homes and not the nearest sewer.

Second, during the current heating season I am accepting corn cobs for kid admissions, at the rate of two bushels of cobs for one kid Annie Oakley. To forestall any misapprehension I hasten to explain that the cobs are used solely for fuel, being mixed with soft coal slack and burned in one of my furnaces. I believe this is an absolutely original idea, but I can't claim credit for it as the kids suggested it themselves last winter.

These youngsters have little or no money for shows, but after hauling a wagon load of cobs half a mile from the elevator to the theatre both they and I feel that they have earned a pass. Also they are great boosters—I hear them on the street every day telling the world about my current and coming screen attractions.

Blair's Spinach Ad for "Pine"

Blair's Unusual Ads Click Big for "Pine"

The series was sprung after five days of newspaper buildup, the first ad run two days ahead and continued through the first four days of the date.

Initial display of the series carried photo of two operators at switchboard, one saying to the other: "There must be a swell show at the Saenger tomorrow." This head was followed by copy, "so say the downtown exchange operators. Everyone is calling the Saenger Theatre information number, Raymond 1964, inquiring what time the first showing," etc., etc., etc.

The "spinach" ad at bottom, left, was run on Saturday to attract the kids and the others illustrated are also self-explanatory. The sixth of the series showed photo of projectionist in booth watching screen, head reading: "Six Times a Day and Still He's Thrilled," with following copy: "Every day over and over he sees 'The Trail of the Lonesome Pine' and yet he is still gripped by its sweeping power . . . he is the projectionist at the Saenger Theatre here. This mighty Paramount hit of hits in natural color is making new records, etc., etc."

All ads were three-column on 100-lines and their effectiveness helped to hold the picture for an additional week, third to hold over in nine years, said Blair, in a five-column ad.

Bowser's Cent Admission Gag

With showing of "Professional Soldier" at the Harris-Warren Theatre, Warren, Ohio, Les Bowser advertised his show by offering adult admissions for 1922 Lincoln Penny. Les reports the stunt created interest, as some of the folks claimed that there were no such pennies issued that year. However, Bowser was prepared by display of six of the coveted coins that had been turned in at the box-office.

MODERN TIMES

ANIMATED DISPLAY. With a lifesize cow that moved its head, eyes, mouth, ears, body and tail and mooed besides, Joseph C. Dougherty, sold "Milky Way" at the Tower in Philadelphia.

Ingenious Displays For Jolson, Chaplin

Illustrated above are recent samples of handiwork in New York and Kansas City on the new Jolson and Chaplin pictures.

The piece de resistance on Strand theatre front was a seven-foot square transparent cutout caricature of the black-face Mammy singer. This centerpiece in the arch was designed of flittered black beaverboard against a frosted glass background set into a silver frame with strips of frosted glass around it. Behind this display was a battery of high-powered lights to bring out the strong transparent effect. The star's name was built of three-foot miniature bulb-studded letters.

The title of the picture along the bottom of the arch was of three-foot built up black flittered block letters. The rest of the featured names were of cutout letters set on metallic stars. On either end of the arch were two triangular shaped glass transparencies of Jolson and Jason in one and Cab Calloway and his band in the other. Two oval transparencies included one of the Four Yacht Club Boys and the other of Horton and Beverly Roberts.

The display frames in both front and returns were cutout enlargements of the stars and scenes from the picture on colored backgrounds. The ten-foot box office setpiece was constructed of frosted glass with the names of the songs hand-lettered in black on the glass in a triangle with an outer triangle of frosted glass hand-lettered with musical notes. Zeb Epstin, manager, and John Hemmer, house electrician, are credited for the design which is in keeping with the effective displays at this theatre.

McManus Goes "Screen"

The other illustration above is the unique window planted by Manager John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, on "Modern Times."

Display takes the form of a picture theatre with enlargement of one of the scene stills made up to represent screen, idea carried out with projector in rear. Figures in sportswear watching the show made up the audience. Credits and tiein copy were carried against black velvet background and McManus reports it a great attention-getter.

Mills Hands Out Millions For "Millions in the Air"

Novel stunt was used by Malcolm Mills, Rialto, Kingsville, Texas, for "Millions in the Air," for which he constructed a squirrel cage mounted on a box. Underneath was an ordinary buzz fan to blow "million dollar bills," printed especially for the occasion. Fan kept the bills in the air for three days and Mills reports that in proffering change his cashiers slipped in an extra million. Bills which were imprinted on reverse side were also distributed at leading cafes, hotels, etc.

Pollock "Coughs Up" Tickets On Cough Drop Tieup

Effecting a tieup with Listerine manufacturers, Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., distributed sample cough drops in envelopes with imprinted "Modern Times" copy and lucky numbers. Listerine retail outlets throughout the city aided in distribution and displayed banners in their windows. Announcements were also made on air broadcast.

Accompanying photo shows life size cutout of Chaplin standing beside lobby easel carrying lucky numbers and offer of prizes, which Les promoted from merchants.

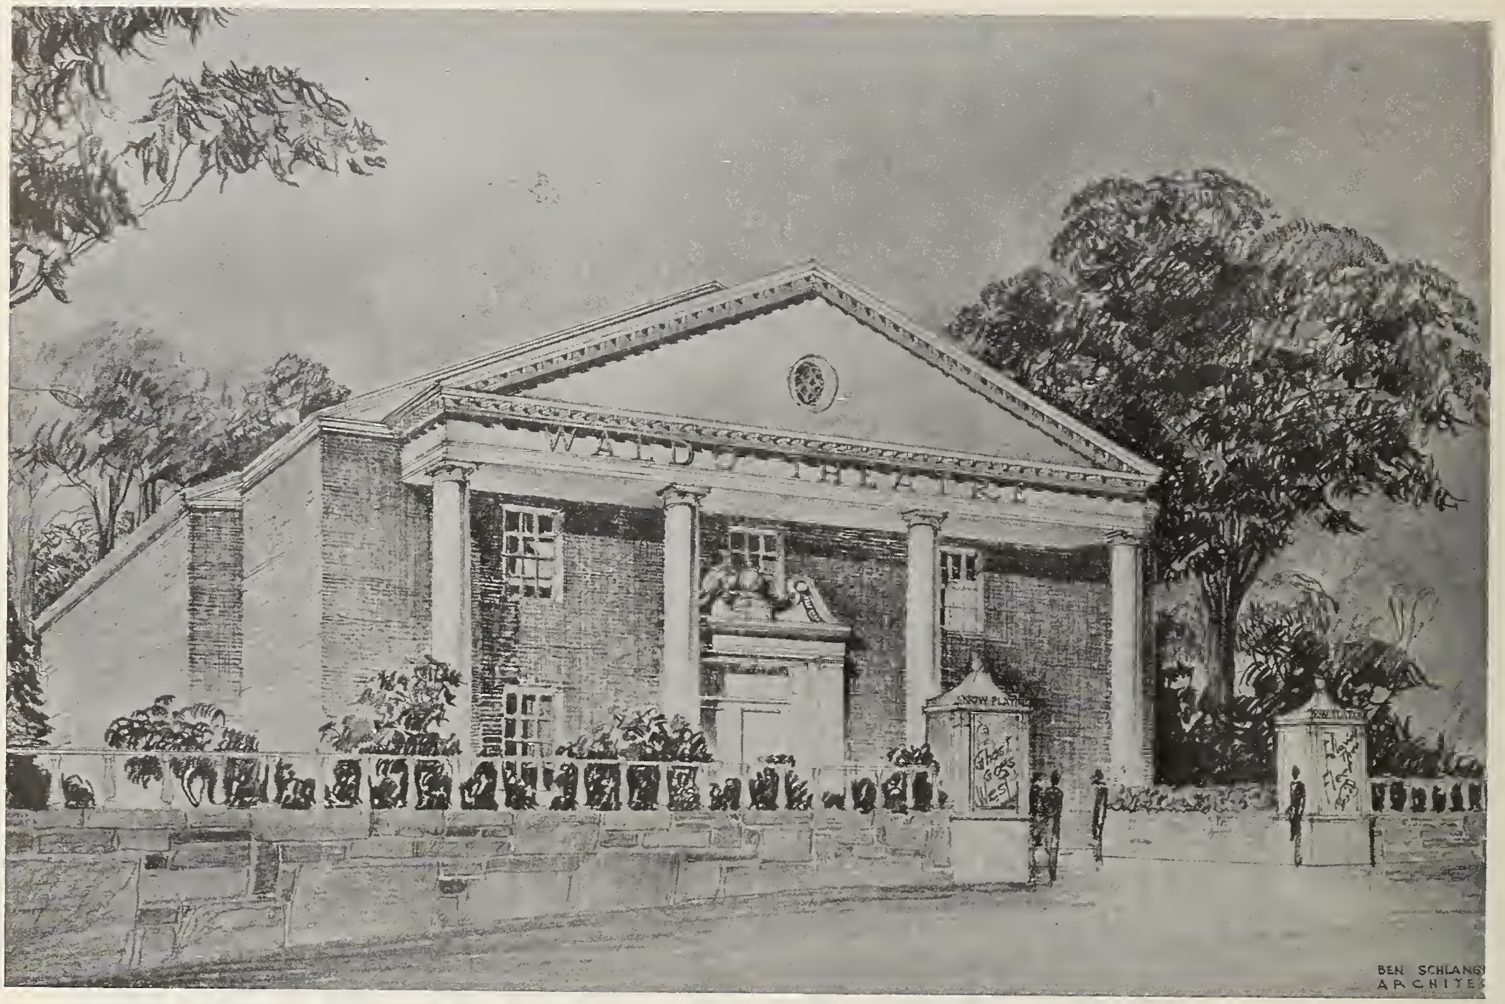
FOR BUILDING PURPOSES



EARLY AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE FOR A THEATRE IN MAINE

An adaptation of local and sectional architectural traditions is this design for a motion picture theatre building in Waldoboro, Maine. Like the Ute theatre in Colorado Springs, which revives an Indian culture native to its locality (it was described in the April 4th issue), the Waldoboro, in form and feeling, was suggested by its scene. It is reminiscent of a New England meeting house, which, indeed, it will be. The theatrical function of the structure will receive some emphasis from floodlights at the portico, which will cast white and colored light on the columns, pediment and entrance. Poster display frames will be mounted on pylons at the terrace gateway. The interior of the theatre is to have an architectural scheme more or less neutral—modern, perhaps, in its functionalism and simplicity, but offering no clash, through definite stylization, with the Early American character of the exterior. The seating capacity will be 500. Ben Schlanger of New York City, is the architect.

VOLUME 123 MAY 2, 1936 NUMBER FIVE

Building Code for All New England Proposed

REGULATIONS covering the plan and construction of buildings of all types, some containing entirely new provisions, others substantially limiting practices now permissible, particularly with respect to hazards, were discussed at the 23d annual convention of New England Building Officials in Boston the latter part of April. The regulations were incorporated in a comprehensive new code for the entire New England section, hence they take on an importance which may have national implications, since any regulating body is likely to look for guidance to a code covering so large an area and such a diversity of conditions. The proposals follow six years of study by Edward W. Roemer, building commissioner of Boston, by New England architects, engineers and technical schools.

The proposed code places theatres in Group A, obviously because of their relationship to public health and safety. Regulations specifically treating of theatres are relatively few, but of course theatre buildings would be affected by many of the general provisions. Theatre buildings would have to be constructed of incombustible materials. Their exterior walls and frames would be required to be of four-hour fire-resistive construction, while a three-hour minimum would be imposed upon floors and roofs. A portion of the stage, however, could be of wood.

While all other types of buildings are carefully regulated in the proposals as to height and capacity, theatres are not so provided for. However, in some instances this means that theatres are not exempt from requirements aimed at reduction of hazards, as other types of buildings are because of their small size.

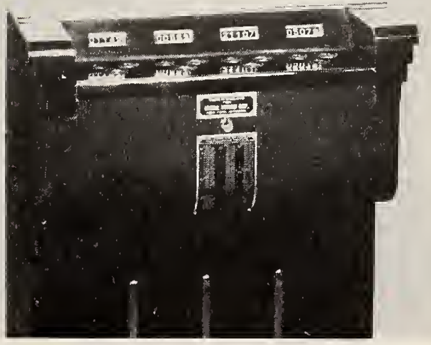
In the remodeling of existing theatres, alterations that cost in excess of 50% of the estimated value of the building would have to conform to the new code.

Consideration of the fact that theatres are sometimes housed in buildings having offices, apartments, stores, etc., has led to a provision exempting the theatre from regulations normally applying only to the commercial or residential portions if the theatre portion is suitably separated, structurally, from the other sections of the building.

While the building commissioners were considering these measures the Massachusetts Legislature voted negatively on bills which would have compelled the installation of sprinkler systems in theatres in which smoking was permitted, which would have increased ventilation requirements, which would have necessitated the installation in women's toilets, one water closet to every 150 seats; in men's, one water closet to every 300 seats, and one urinal to every 200 seats.

New Ticket Machines Include Self-Printer

TWO DISTINCTLY new models of ticket issuing machines for theatres have been added to the line of the General Register Corporation of New York. The mechanisms in general have been designed for more diversified service, more discouragement for those cashiers (if any there be) who suffer lapses from the moral code, increased speed in the issuance of the tickets in the desired number, and absolute prevention of error. The appearance, particularly of the keyboard and keys (the latter are broad buttons, almost flush with the board, instead of levers), conforms to the modern idea of streamlining.



One of the models, while including these advantages, adds the ability to print its own tickets. Only rolls of blank ticket tape are purchased. The machine, at the moment of issuing the ticket, prints desired legend upon it, including the date of sale and the number of the ticket. Adding the date in this manner considerably simplifies ticket-sale bookkeeping, of course. Another advantage of printing the ticket upon issuance is that there is no printed tickets to store in the theatre office, from which they may be stolen.

These machines are entirely of unit construction. That is to say, working parts which are most intimately related to each mechanically are constructed as a unit, so that if and when long hard usage has brought about the need of repair, the unit can be readily replaced without replacement of the rest of the machine, or removed for convenient repairing.

To cite a number of other or related features specifically: From three to five ticket issuing channels may be had, and if only three are wanted immediately, a case accommodating five may be installed against the time when one or two more may be needed, with the spare keys suitably covered. The case is so designed that the cashier sits squarely in front of the keyboard, with the knees beneath. The mechanism is provided with a Yale lock to prevent operation by unauthorized users. There can be no over registration of tickets, for just before the ticket supply runs out, the mechanism automatically locks. The motor is completely enclosed.

Yet another type of issuing machine, with registration provisions, that the General Register Corporation has brought out is one which suggests a method of conducting parking facilities that are free to patrons. This machine is small and light for suspension on a strap and it issues coupons, the duplicates of which remain on a roll inside for convenient totaling. The procedure could be this: When theatre patrons drive into the parking space, which is free only to theatre patrons, an attendant sells them the admissions, issuing coupons in token thereof. The patrons merely present the coupons at the box office and get their tickets. It may be a practicable method.

Dealer System Being Built by Motiograph, Inc.

AS A PART of its reorganization program, which was begun a few months ago with corporate changes and revision of production and sales policy, Motiograph, Inc., manufacturers of Motiograph projectors and sound systems, are arranging for a national distribution system through territorial dealers in every key city. In general, distribution is through members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, but in some situations this does not apply. New dealers are being added to the list of those authorized to represent Motiograph as territorial conditions are investigated. Motiograph dealers to date are as follows:

In Atlanta, Wil-Kin Theatre Supply Corporation, 154-156 Walton Street; Boston, New England Motion Picture Equipment Corporation, 112 Arlington Street; Baltimore, J. F. Complaint: Theatres Cause Parking Jam!

IN THE CITY of Des Moines, metropolis of Iowa, the traffic division of the police department has been inquiring about how come all those automobiles lined up at curbs at certain hours. They have found cause to blame the motion picture theatres. Workers of the WPA have collected the data.

A tax on theatre loading zones was proposed to the city council. However, on further inquiry it was found (though not by the WPA workers) that the budget was $50,000 over, hence instead of more money, the city needed to spend some in order to balance its budget. The tax idea was dropped.

Installations of Hearing Aids Gain

THE ACQUISITION by more and more theatres of hearing aids continues to be reported by companies manufacturing equipment for these facilities. Dictograph Products Company, Inc., manufacturers of Acousticon equipment, has just completed installation of ten-outlet systems in all of the houses of the Horowitz group of theatres in Texas, has since then added installations in two other Texas theatres—the Tivoli in Fort Worth, and the Delman in Houston—besides the Riviera in Syracuse, the Ritz in Greenville, S. Car., and the St. George in Framingham, Mass.

Figures for the number of deafened persons in the United States, placing the number of those deafened to some degree at 15,000,000, and of those requiring hearing aids at 5,000,000, were borne out by a survey just disclosed in New York, where investigators working in connection with a WPA project, found that out of 763,000 school children examined, 80,000 had impaired hearing. This number amounts to about 9% of the total, as does the often quoted figure, 15,000,000, of the total population of the country.

Exterior Lighting to Be Feature of Chicago Theatre

PLANS HAVE been drawn by Rapp & Rapp, Chicago architects, for a new Warner theatre to be constructed at 79th Street and Rhodes Avenue in Chicago this summer. It will be relatively a large house—1,600 seats—and the cost is said to be in the neighborhood of $250,000. It will be modern in style, with a seating on the stadium plan.

One of the interesting features of the design is the setting back of the exterior walls, to provide for indirect lighting of the front. In addition, the exterior will be illuminated by neon bands in several colors extending around the building.

New Model Rectifier Designed for Suprex

ANOTHER RECTIFIER has been brought out by the Good-All Electric Manufacturing Company of Ogallala, Neb., designed especially for operation with the suprex projection arc. A short time ago this company marketed its Model 30, which is smaller. The new model is the S-60. Like the Model 30, it is of Tungar tube type.

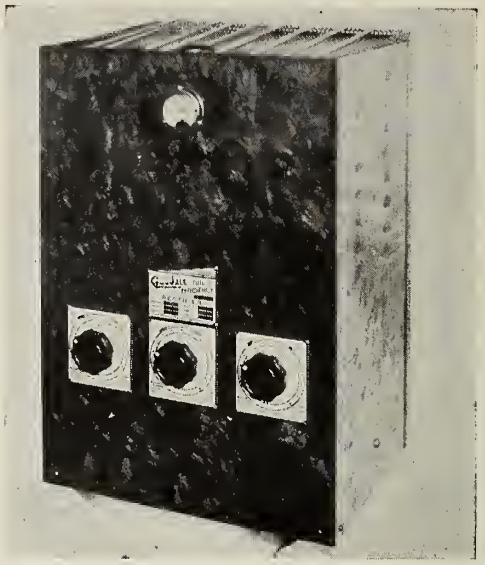
Better Theatres (with which is combined "The Showman") is published by the Quigley Publishing Company, Rockefeller Center, New York, every fourth week as Section Two of Motion Picture Herald. Contents copyrighted 1936. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief. George Schutz, editor. Colvin Brown, advertising manager. Ray Gallo, Eastern advertising manager. C. B. O'Neill, Western advertising manager, 624 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago. Hollywood Bureau: Postal Union Life Building; Boone Mancall, manager. London Bureau: Remo House, 310 Regent Street, W.1; Bruce Allan, manager. Other Quigley publications: Motion Picture Daily, Motion Picture Almanac, The Box Office Check-Up.

It has over-all dimensions of 13x18x22 inches. It employs no rheostat for controlling voltage and amperage; this is done by regulation of a switch. The switches are mounted in a special box on the side of the rectifier and are all externally operated. All incoming connections are likewise made on the outside by means of special boxes with removable lids.



The top of the case is made of perforated steel sheeting, which forms a tray which man be used to hold a supply of carbons. Here the carbons are kept dry as well as handy.

This model is designed to operate on a 220-volt, 3-phase circuit. It is equipped with three special chokes so arranged as to deliver constantly balanced 3-phase current.

Polaroid Brings New Three-Dimension Scheme

THE SEARCH for the means of producing the effect of three dimensions in the projected motion picture continues—it probably never will cease. Now with the invention of Polaroid—one-way glass, to identify it briefly, though inaccurately—a new method is advanced. Inquiry brings this response, which is submitted without comment:

A new reflector has been developed and pattented, by young Harvard scientists, that may be placed in front of Polaroid lens so that one projector will do the work of two. This makes it possible to use double-frame film. The reflector is such, in addition, that each frame is given a full opening. Thus one projector furnishes the left and right eye views of the motion picture scenes creating stereoscopy.

Dead spaces in the theatre will not be increased by the addition of a third dimension to films, say the inventors, Edwin H. Land and George W. Wheelwright, III, of Boston. The seating range will remain the same as present where side seats now afford a distorted view of regular pictures, this same distortion will be present with three-dimensional projection.

Urges Small Town Theatre Betterment

A LETTER from an exhibitor in Montana, which he states he hopes will find its way to the attention of many in the industry, expresses deep faith in the benefits which the industry would derive from substantial extension of better-class motion picture exhibition to the little towns. The writer of it is Mr. Ted Stump, who operates an Elted theatre in Absarokee, and another in Columbus, both in Montana.

Mr. Stump has found reason for his faith in these very little towns, which, when he found them a few years ago, were without a regular means of enjoying motion picture entertainment. But his own words state the case adequately:

"Herewith," he writes, "is a suggestion which I believe merits consideration. It is an established fact that there are innumerable small town situations, running one change of program a week to mediocre business, where if a little investment and ingenuity were added, could run three changes a week to good business.

"Such a condition is not only unfair to the owner and his patrons, but also to the entire motion picture industry.

"I believe it would be a smart move on the part of the combined interests in the motion picture industry to hire a few selected men to go into these smaller situations and spend a month, or more if necessary, in selling the local theatre owner the idea of remodeling, installing new equipment, and suggest and demonstrate methods of increasing attendance. Every salesman, and every exchange knows of many small situations which have and are failing to run as many changes as they could, where the advertising consists of one window card nailed to the front door, where the roof leaks and the building hasn't been painted for 50 years, where antiquated sound and projection and uncomfortable seats are keeping patrons away. It's a familiar story and certainly it is not necessary for me to go into any further details.

"For example, before I came here [Absarokee] this entire county was represented by one theatre which ran one change a week in a 'made-over' store building—yes, the roof leaked, the projectors were very badly worn and the sound was seven years old and had never been overhauled. That theatre was in the county seat. That was a little over a year ago. I started a theatre in a neighboring town and recently bought the theatre in the county seat, and both theatres are now operating three changes weekly. Thus the industry is now receiving 312 feature bookings compared to 52. Allied industries have profited through the purchase of two sound and projection installations, and of seats, curtains, supplies, etc. Every business connected directly or indirectly with the Motion picture industry has profited.

"Now, I'm just an ordinary person and what has been done here could be duplicated and even bettered in most situations, as I was badly handicapped by lack of finances, and these two small towns, one of 250 population and the other of 880, are counterparts of any small towns anywhere.

"The changes here have increased the film rentals over $4,000 annually. In other words, if such men as the industry chose, only were successful in rejuvenating one situation a year, which is improbable, they would pay for their keep and show a profit of $4,000 to the industry each year for each situation. And that does not take into consideration the extra business of at least $4,000 worth of equipment!

"It is the nature of most small town exhibitors to put off alterations and improvements until business gets better, and business will not get better until they improve their theatres! I believe that selected men could sell most of these exhibitors the idea, for most of them are just in a rut and know they must modernize, but just 'ain't got around to it.'"

Efficient Colored Light Is Developed

A NEW KIND of lamp, developed in the research laboratories of the Westinghouse Lamp Company here, changes invisible ultraviolet radiations into visible light of all the rainbow colors and from 50 to 120 times more plentiful than by present-day methods. The phenomenon of fluorescence, by which invisible radiations of short wavelength are transformed into visible light, is the secret of this new invention.

Research into this new method of light production to date has been confined to the lumiline shape of bulb, the long, slender tube which is sealed at each end by a disc-like base. However, engineers envision widespread use of this type of colored light for decorative purposes when it finally emerges from the laboratory. They say that it will probably be bent into various shapes to form luminous designs for interior decorations.

Dr. Roy D. Hall, Westinghouse engineer, pointing to standard 60-watt Lumiline lamp. Above it is the fluorescent lamp, of 15 watts, but brighter.

Like the present lumiline lamp, it will probably enjoy widest use placed end to end to form a continuous line of light. Producing light entirely by fluorescence, it is not to be confused with the various types of filamentless lamps used in advertising signs and generally classified as "neon."

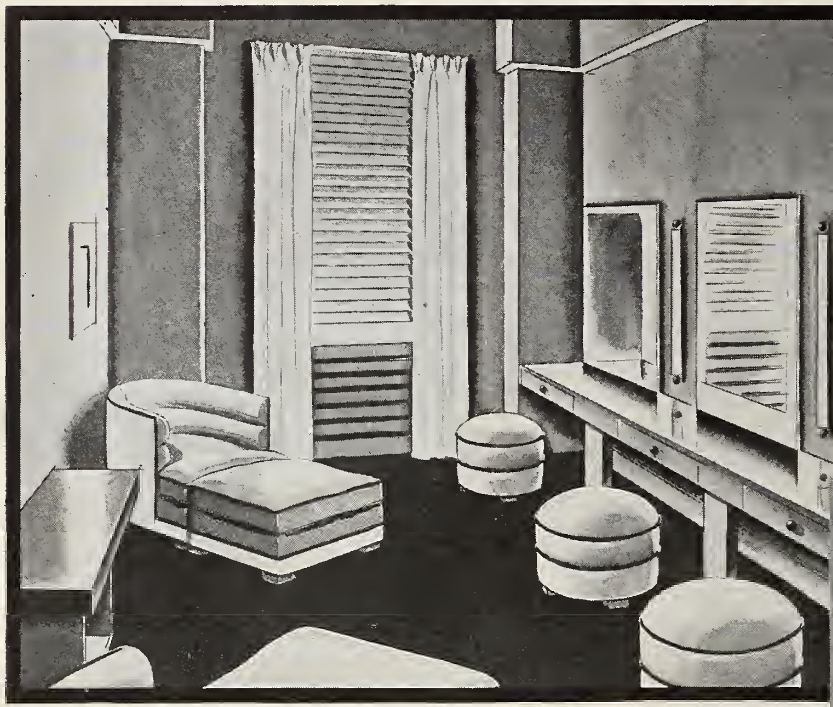
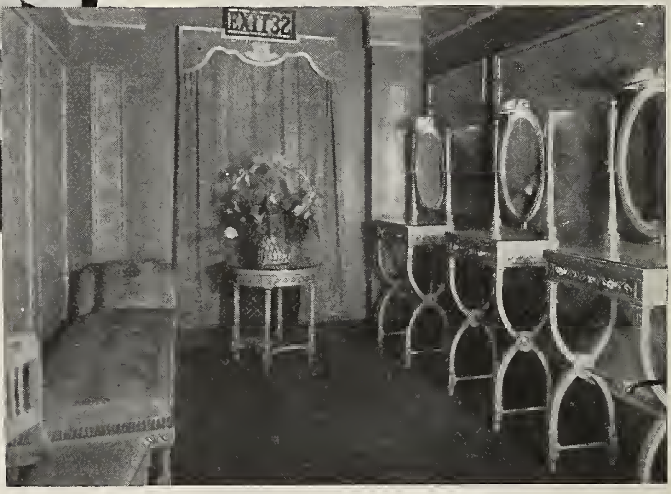
Modernizing the Obsolete Interior



[DRAWING BY DESIGN DEPARTMENT, MODERNAGE, INC., NEW YORK]



The sketch at the top shows a transformation of the women's cosmetic room pictured below it, which is of the vintage of, say, 1924. The change in the appearance is obvious—what was actually done is described in detail in the text of the article.

● And when modernizing, the author advises, be sure that the result will be truly modern—not modernistic

By MADAME MAJESKA

CHANGE THE package to increase the sales—for the last few years this has been the motto of some of the most successful merchandisers in the country. There have been new packages for cereals, for soaps, for cosmetics—sometimes merely wrapping the carton in cellophane has increased sales phenomenally.

But what does packaging have to do with the theatre? Only this: Your house is the package in which you are delivering what you have to sell to your consumer, the theatre patron. No cereal inside of course, but a true commodity nevertheless, since motion picture entertainment has become a commodity through widespread dependence upon it for much of our necessary emotional stimulation. The theatre itself should be kept attuned to the development and maintenance of the motion picture theatre-going habit.

It is safe to assume, I think, that the majority of exhibitors realize today that they must soon start to repair the ravages of time and keep in step with their competitors, and also with the increasing good taste of the public, by well planned modernization. Modernization carries through many departments of the theatre, of course, and touches upon many phases of operation. Here we are concerned with the creation of an environment suitable to the motion picture theatre—specifically, the principles and methods of modern theatre interior treatment.

First questions arising are: How much will it cost? (I hasten to say that it will cost much less than the amount you probably have guessed). How shall it be done? What is this good taste of the public?

GENERAL TREATMENT

One thing must be borne in mind at the outset, which is that modernization of the interior does not mean modernistic (a confusion of angles, shiny metals out of place, etc.). True modern means simple lines, the original and dramatic application of color, judicious use of the new materials which modern science and industrial art have developed and which are now available at prices making good decoration possible, without falsification, at reasonable cost.

It is not possible within the limits of a single article, of course, to consider all possible conditions. It is not possible, moreover, to lay down a fixed formula. Before you begin to plan what to modernize, and how to do it, determine as definitely as possible what your theatre needs with respect to the kind of a community it is in, and your specific merchandising problem.

Is your theatre a first-run house in an important business section? Then give your patrons gayety, vibrating colors, mirrors, an impression of magnificence. Let the ticket be a ticket of admission to a place of sophistication.

But, to select a contrasting example, if your theatre is located in a residential area, stay away, say I, from too much glitter. Use soothing, soft colors that are analagous to the quiet refinement that people like to associate with the home, that represent something quite different from the environment in which Mr. Businessman and Miss Businesswoman have been all day.

Yet another type of theatre which has a distinctive merchandising problem is the small house in an area of much larger first- and second-run theatres, and showing subsequent-run pictures or special types of product (like foreign films). In a theatre of this class there can well be an air of sophistication, but the whole treatment should suggest intimacy; emphasize comfort, give the theatre a distinguishing charm. The interior should be expressive of leisureliness—the first impression upon the patron should be that here there is no pushing, no hurrying, no interference at any time.

So much for a few general principles of modern interior treatments. I proceed to a demonstration of these principles with respect to two areas of the theatre which, since the auditorium is almost continuously darkened, are most instrumental in striking the environmental note of the theatre, in giving it the desired atmosphere. These areas are the foyer and the lounge.

The demonstration consists in the revision, in sketches, of a foyer and a women's lounge in actual theatres (there would be no point in naming them here), and accompanying the sketches are reproductions of photographs of the rooms thus hypothetically modernized.

A MODERN FOYER

Without changing the architectural features of this foyer, a complete transformation has been made. The proper use of color is the important note in our new scheme. No longer is there an assortment of all the colors of the rainbow, including a lot that were never even there, to give a theatrical effect, but the judicious use of two or three colors and their tones to give real accent and dramatic appeal.

With the aid of inexpensive construction we have hidden, without removing the plaster work, the fancy pilasters, which definitely date the theatre as being built in the age of ostentation. Sheetrock or wood panel stock is built up around the plaster, and the corners are hidden in the same manner, thus achieving a sound architectural treatment. All the mouldings have been removed from the wall, making it possible to give a feeling of gayety by the proper use of color.

The sketch above exhibits a transformation of the "period" foyer (it was swell many, many years ago) pictured to the left. The simplicity of the changes are better appreciated when the cost is counted up. What was done is detailed in the text.

The mirror is squared off to conform with the clean line of the rest of the lobby. For the purpose of illustration we also show an interesting wall window treatment. Sheets of opalescent glass are set on an angle in a frame behind which may be placed reflectors, affording a play of color which man be controlled to whatever degre of softness is desired.

The doors have been made flush simply by screwing panel boards to them. These may be covered either with linoleum or fabricoid.

The mezzanine rail carving has been treated in the same manner as the corner carving—built up to straight lines. The solid rail makes an excellent background for the mezzanine furniture and also gives a feeling of stability to people on there.

The major operation in this arrangement is the lighting. Ceiling fixtures are completely eliminated. In their place we use indirect lighting along the cornice, and modern side brackets on the pilasters.

We have removed the heavily carved, funereal antique furniture of no known period, removed the brass Persian torches and the heavy velvet drapes with heavy gilt tassels. In their place we have put well built furniture of simple lines (if your patron wants to sit down, please let him be comfortable). The arms are sturdy enough so that if a patron happens to sit on one, nothing serious would happen.

Care must be taken in the proper selection of fabrics so that suitable long-wearing ones may be used. All tables should have micarta or formica tops for the impatient one who uses a table top for an ashtray (and supply plenty of ash stands and sand urns, since your carpet is too valuable to be burnt and scarred). Some pattern is necessary in the carpet for purposes of maintenance, but extreme care should be

Modern Cinema Architecture in Spain's Capital

● Long associated with the motion picture is the castle in Spain, and this theatre in Madrid, though severely modern, disturbs no illusions

BUILT TO conform to the aesthetic and artistic ideals and exactions of one of Europe's proudest capitals, Cine Capitol, a Loew house in the heart of Madrid impresses at once by its tone of subdued elegance, its spaciousness and its thoroughly up-to-date standards of comfort and convenience for the patron. Indeed, the Cine Capitol is not without its resemblance to the super-luxurious theatres of the United States in that it occupies the street level, as well as the basement areas of a "skyscraper" type of building of distinctly advanced construction principle. Both in the approach to its charming interior and in the architectural detail, decorative scheme and appointments of its auditorium proper, and the ultra-modern effectiveness of its projection, sound-recording and screen functioning, it compares most favorably with some of the deluxe cinema theatres of the first cities of the Western Hemisphere.

Situated on the Gran Via, Madrid's shopping and business thoroughfare of greatest importance and densest traffic, and with ample parking facilities in the Calle Jacometrezo, directly in the rear of the auditorium proper and upon which several of the exits give at the close of the performance, it is equally popular with both motor and pedestrian patrons.

The ground area of the building, known as the Edificio Carrion and named for the Marquis de Carrion, and which is a combination office, apartment and studio building, totals 17,200 square feet. Seventy-five percent of this plot is occupied by the theatre. Construction is of mixed metal and re-inforced concrete, the latter being the distinguishing construction principle of the theatre, and of the building roof. The architects of both building and theatre were Luís Martínez Feduchi and Vicente Eced of Madrid.

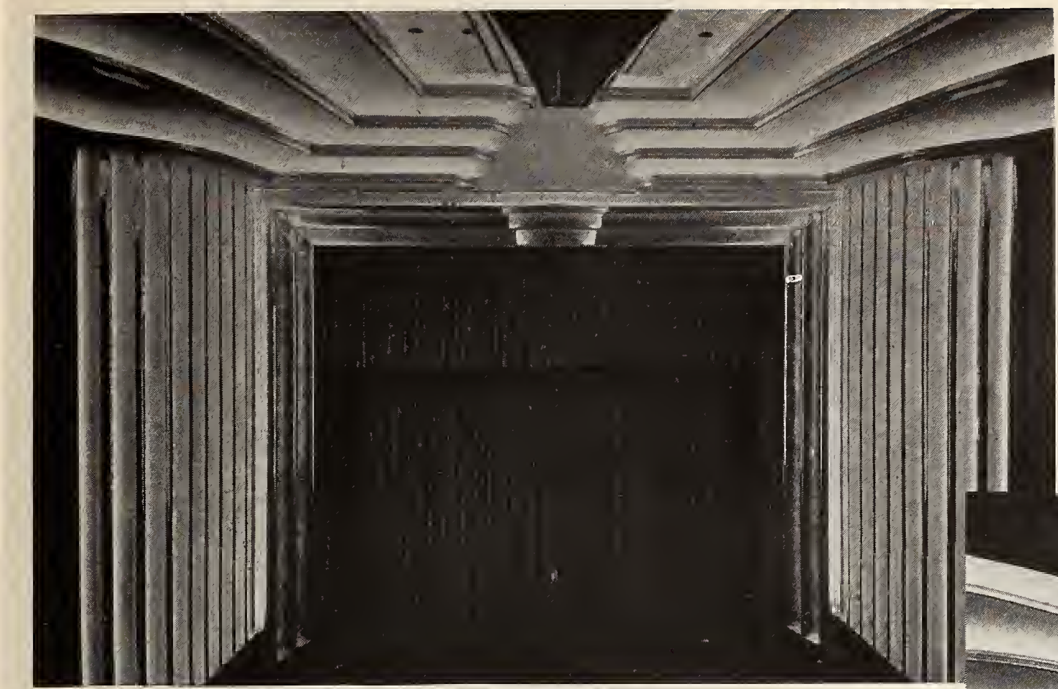
The auditorium proper has a seating capacity of 1,836, of which 964 are in the "patio," corresponding to the parquet or orchestra of American playhouses, 361 "club" seats, 42 "club" front seats, 10 "club" box seats, and 407 are in the "miradors," or mezzanine-balcony and upper balcony, with 42 front seats and 10 box-seats. Despite the great numbers of spectators that can be accommodated, the theatre may be emptied within a few moments by six doors directly leading to the street, in addition to the main entrance.

The seating scheme, designed to insure the best screen vision and at the same time quickest and most convenient access to and egress from locations, provides two aisles on either side of the central block of the auditorium and one at each side wall. A like system is followed for the 459 seats in the mezzanine and upper galleries.

The façade of the theatre, of re-inforced concrete, boasts the hugest girders at present in position in Europe, the four principal beams, of the "Vierendale" type, measuring 93 feet in length by 9 feet, 30 inches in width and weighing each 70 tons. There also are 42-foot beams, each of 15 tons, and still others of lesser dimensions re-inforcing the structural front.

Passing beneath the marquée with announcements in neon lighting, one enters a spacious lobby with a decorative scheme of marble and ebony. On the upper part of the entrance doors three posters are placed, and another is directly over a sofa, while the club lobby, a distinctive feature of the auditorium entrance, has still another poster. No other advertising media or show windows are in evidence.

From the farthest rear "patio" seat to the screen-line of the stage there is a distance of 78 feet; from the farthest "mirador" seat, a distance of 90 feet. The stage, of shallow depth, and having no provision or equipment for stage performances, has a gutta-percha screen, perforated and glassed, measuring 21x36 feet. The image is 24x18 feet.

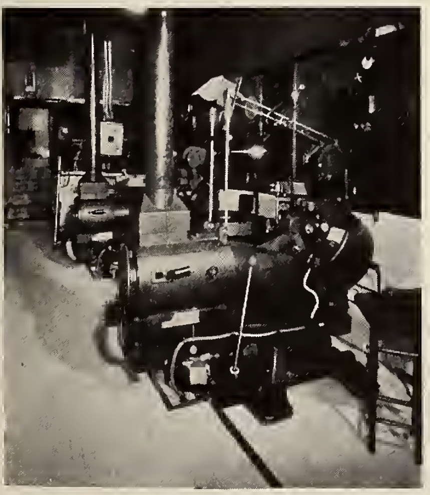


Three views of the auditorium, emphasizing the proscenium and ceiling illumination.

Projection and sound equipment consist in two projectors and a Klangfilm reproduction system.

For heating there are four pans, low pressure type, with four burners and two compressors, operated by two motors. Refrigeration for the summer months is provided by two compressors of four cylinders, with two condensers, using ammonia as the refrigerant. The motor pumps are composed of three units for re-circulation of water. Ventilation is effected by ducts carrying 100,000 cubic meters of air per hour. An exhaust system withdraws 80,000 cubic meters of air per hour.

In the selection and training of the personnel of the theatre proper the utmost care is exercised. For example, the tipping evil, bane of the theatre patron in Spain and a factor in lowering the morale of ushers, is strictly taboo and one has only to contrast the smooth, efficient and orderly performance by the Madrid Capitol ushers at their tasks with the "hold-up" system still prevailing in many native-managed cinemas of Madrid and Barcelona to realize the nature of the "achievement."



The Cine Capitol projection room.

The Capitol ushers receive a wage of 7.50 pesetas daily (approximately $1 at current exchange), a standard compensation for that class of labor in this country, where living costs are much lower than in the United States. Thus at the Capitol one does not witness the sorry spectacle of a flashlight aimed constantly at a patron who has failed to "come across" with a 10-centimo or 15-centimo "regalo," or another, a "habitual offender," with the lady he is escorting, ousted from his seat in the middle of a film due to an "error" in seating.

Administering to the comfort and convenience of the patrons while aiding the management in the prompt segregation and seating of the crowds arriving for each performance is a staff headed by one chief of personnel, one attendant for opening the doors of arriving motor-cars and directing to parking-spaces, three porters, one doorkeeper, fourteen ushers, three cloak-room girls, two elevator-boys manning the cars to the mezzanine and upper galleries and club rooms, and four maids in the women's lounge.

The color scheme of the imposing entrance and lobby is carried into the auditorium interior, the walls of which are paneled in velvet and ebony, with a color combination of beige, crimson and ivory, which the lighting system tones and softens to an ensemble at once restful and attractive to the eye. The ceilings are in a prevailing gold. A dull crimson curtain greets the spectator arriving before the picture is projected.

Insuring the audience thus comfortably and artistically environed, against the peril of a fire disaster such as several years ago razed and gutted one of Madrid's largest theatres, the Teatro de Novedades, resulting in an appalling casualty list, is a fire-prevention system of 29 extinguishers and a control apparatus by which from tank storage on the roof the auditorium may be flooded with thousands of gallons of water, while the numerous exits provide immediate egress for a capacity audience.

Among the refreshment and entertainment facilities provided for the Capitol patrons before and following each performance and during the lengthy intermissions characteristic of all cinemas in Spain, is an American bar, a cafe and a restaurant, with direct entrance from the theatre proper to the bar and café. These are under separate management. Club-rooms adjacent to the auditorium add to the club-lobby and assembling salons and the special club seat and box locations on two levels of the theatre for member patrons.

—Harry Chapin Plummer.

A CHAT WITH AN INTERESTING PERSON OF THE THEATRE WORLD

LUDWIG SUSSMAN, who says:

It's Wise to "Sell" Your Theatre, Too

LUDWIG SUSSMAN studied us for a moment. "I'm the kind of a fellow," he said finally, "who never has a pot to cook in. The reason is that I'm never satisfied. I put every dollar I make back into the business."

Mr. Sussman is the owner and manager of the Adelphi theatre in Rogers Park, somewhat fashionable residential district in Chicago. Nine years ago, Sussman bought the Adelphi theatre, a house that had always been a white elephant—it was so even during the days when the late S. J. Rothafel ("Roxy") operated it. Sussman modernized the house and inaugurated a policy of operation that he felt would meet with the needs of his community.

"My experience has been," he told the writer, "that it is profitable to give your customers the best. When a salesman comes to me and shows me that what he has to sell is better for my theatre that that which I now have, I get it. If I can't be first with the best, then I'll quit and do something else where I can be first with the best."

To show just what he means, and that he means let us cite a few of the many inaugurations he has made. The Adelphi was:

The first theatre in Illinois to provide earphones for the deafened. This was done six years ago. The larger houses in Chicago have done this just in the past year.

The first theatre in Chicago, and one of the first in the country, to install extended frequency range sound reproducing equipment.

The first theatre in Chicago to improve the illumination of the screen by installation of projection arc equipment employing the Suprex carbon.

Others things which Sussman has done, most of them since he started his $25,000 modernization plan in November, 1934, are the building of a new lobby, foyer, stainless steel marquee, and a women's lounge of extraordinary luxury for a 1,200-seat house. All of these improvements have been of the most modern design and they make the Adelphi theatre one of the outstanding neighborhood theatres of the world.

If the Adelphi theatre had the pick of the pictures for first-run, it would be more or less simple to figure out a way to pay for all this new equipment. But when one considers that the Adelphi theatre plays pictures from 13 to 15 weeks after they have been released in Chicago's Loop, it takes an accurate appraisal of local values and a high degree of consistent showmanship to turn the trick with admission prices of 15c and 25c.

But here is the way the Sussman Idea works out. He "sells" his theatre. He has the outstanding theatre in his community. No other theatre can offer more conveniences or comforts. The prices make his shows accessible to all—frequently. A man can bring his whole family at a cost which makes it possible to take them to the Adelphi at least once or twice a week.

Having gained his community's confidence, Mr. Sussman takes advantage of those pictures which provide good entertainment but which have seemed to lack in box-office appeal from a production standpoint. Perhaps the name of the picture or the players in it have failed to attract patrons to the first-run houses, but the story qualities are really there. Then it is that Mr. Sussman goes to work. He advertises, page or half-page ads if necessary, and tells his patrons that he has a swell show for them. Knowing that Ludwig Sussman is a man of his word, they come and find out for themselves.

Such success with "failures" indicates the importance of Mr. Sussman's standing in his community. He's a great mixer. He has donated hundreds of dollars to those in distress and never asked for recognition. It is this fine spirit of helpfulness to his fellow citizens that have made them take pride in the theatre Sussman has given them. They show visitors about his theatre as if they owned part of it. Where, they ask, can you find a finer theatre in an outlying community? They know about each new development that is going on as Sussman tells them what he is doing.

For example, when he installed his new projection equipment he placed it in the lobby a week before installing it. The patrons stopped to ask questions about it, and they were intelligently answered.

That Sussman policy, "Give your customers the best," had an early beginning and a successful one. Years ago he took a small delicatessen shop with an average weekly trade of $170 and converted it into the most popular store of its kind in the city. When he sold out, the business was running into sales of thousands weekly.

He used showmanship then, too. He had a sign in the window which read, "$25 to anyone who finds more than 10 flies in this store." Sussman never paid the $25. All during the hot summer months this sign stayed in the window, but no one ever found enough flies to collect.

Today Ludwig Sussman employs the same brand of showmanship for the same purpose: To sell the shop. Not only the goods, the picture, but the theatre. There are flowers for the ladies at Easter, candy for the youngsters on holidays. And there's always something doing at the Adelphi to impress it on the community mind as a good place to go for entertainment.—WILLIAM F. CROUCH.

How I Built Myself a Theatre Business in a Hamlet of 400

[Elsewhere in this issue we quote from a letter written by Ted Stump of Montana who is convinced that this industry still has a frontier—hundreds of hamlets now with poor theatres. He believes, too, that by the extension of its privileges to these little towns, the industry would benefit. However that may be, Stump himself already has found profit for himself on that frontier, and so also has William G. Cooke of Garberville, Cal. Like the story Mr. Stump of Montana has to tell us (and may, in a subsequent issue), Mr. Cooke's is one of interesting individual enterprise and resourcefulness, which is still to be appreciated, while it also offers counsel to others who may have similar inclinations. We asked Mr. Cooke to tell us what he did. The following article is his own account.—THE EDITOR.]

Two views of the auditorium, and one of the front, of Mr. Cooke's playhouse.

TWO YEARS AGO I and the man who was then my partner—Mr. C. W. Davies—scouted all of northern California for small towns which would be the best spots for a circuit of one-night stands, the idea being to show motion pictures in each town regularly, in the evening of the same day, each week. We had very little capital, but finally a circuit of five towns was established. The towns ranged in population from 150 to 500. They were Booneville, Cloverdale, Garberville, Weott and Covlo.

With portable projection equipment and a truck, we began giving shows in these towns each week, from Wednesday through Sunday. All of these places are located in the redwood country of northern California, and we gave our shows outdoors in groves of redwoods. This worked surprisingly well for a time. Towns that did not pan out very well, after trying them three times, were dropped for new ones. Garberville proved to be the best of all—during the winter wonths, it held up better than any of the others. We finally played Garberville twice a week, with change of program, while continuing with single weekly shows in the other towns.

We had our troubles, of course. Some of the difficulties that arose were due to the poor current supplied by small independent power companies. Sometimes this was d.c., and we had to use a converter to supply the amplifier. But truck trouble was the worst, for it usually happened at exactly the wrong time. Repairs and new tires took much of our hard-earned profits.

After a year and a half of this grief—rushing from town to town, which meant covering about 800 miles a week, setting up the equipment, putting up advertising, knocking down the equipment, always keeping the ball rolling—we decided to check up on the accounts of the various towns to see if one of them could not support a theatre. Our checking showed Garberville to be a likely spot.

GETTING THEATRE STARTED

This town has a population of only 400, and no industrial payroll. However, it is located in the heart of the redwood country and on the principal highway leading to it. Being 200 miles north of San Francisco, it is a natural stop-over for tourists, and has four modern hotels and three up-to-date restaurants. It was 75 miles from the nearest town with a theatre and we we found that within a radius of 25 miles there were twelve postoffice points in addition to the farms.

We decided to go ahead with the theatre scheme in Garberville. In June 1935 we leased a garage in the center of town, across the street from "Knapp's Good Food Restaurant," which the tourists have made famous from Mexico to Canada. Pre-

EQUIPMENT and OPERATION

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL MAINTENANCE AND OPERATING SERVICE

● ● CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR. ●

The Intelligent Selection Of Air-Conditioning Equipment

● Examining the present type of proposals, and offering a questionnaire designed to obtain for the theatre operator the information that he needs

WE HAVE repeatedly pointed out to exhibitors the weakness and the superficialities of the great majority of proposals, even by the larger and more experienced companies, for air-conditioning. I have been called upon during the past six months to pass on or make recommendations on literally dozens of air-conditioning jobs, and I still want to emphasize that four out of every five proposals are useless to an engineer for checking purposes. We are going to continue to get a large percentage of unsatisfactory installations just as long as we accept incomplete and general specifications for machinery instead of a complete air-conditioning plant. Some of the larger companies are adamant in their attitude towards changing their form of proposal, and the motion picture exhibitors of the country, who represent a very real market for air-conditioning equipment running beyond the million dollar mark for the next few years, should be determined in demands for specific and exact proposals from all seeking the contract.

So far this has been almost a single-handed fight, but it is slowly bringing results, in better and more satisfactory installations, to the mutual benefit of the theatre operator and the air-conditioning contractors. Because of the delays and red tape resulting from trying to get air-conditioning companies to alter their form of proposal, I have given up insisting upon it, and in place I have compiled a questionnaire which goes with the invitation for them to bid on a job. This questionnaire cannot be correctly filled out unless the job has actually been calculated and engineered. Furthermore, the air-conditioning companies have absolutely no excuse for not submitting this questionnaire with their proposal, a buyer certainly has the right to ask questions, either verbally or in writing.

PURPOSE AND FORM OF QUESTIONNAIRE

THIS QUESTIONNAIRE when completely filled out serves two very important purposes. First, it will be found invaluable, even for one not versed in the technical aspects of air-conditioning to compare a number of proposals and determine wherein those proposals differ. Second, the proposal and the questionnaire, together, will contain enough data to permit an engineer (even without having ever visited the proposed location of the installation) to check the calculations and the engineering and to advise or constructively criticize the job.

It would be to the advantage of the theatre operator if he used such a questionnaire in calling for bids on air-conditioning installations. The text of the questionnaire follows:

Every contractor or vendor bidding or presenting proposals on air-conditioning the .... theatre in .... must comply with this questionnaire, presenting the answers to questions in the order in which they are asked. This is mandatory regardless of whether or not the information requested may appear elsewhere in your proposal. All of the attachments requested are necessary and must accompany this questionnaire, completely filled out at the time the bid is submitted.

1. State definitely the outside design conditions, dry bulb, wet bulb and relative humidity.
2. State definitely the inside design conditions, dry bulb, wet bulb and relative humidity.
3. How many cubic feet of fresh air per minute per person will be taken into the theatre by this contemplated system.
4. How many cubic feet of air per minute per person will be recirculated by this contemplated system.
5. State exactly the computed heat gain under the following headings:
    a. Total sensible heat transmission for surfaces not exposed to the sun.
    b. Total sensible heat transmitted through roof, attic space and ceiling including the sun effect. State the over all transmission coefficient used for roof, attic space, and ceiling.
    c. How many tons of refrigeration could be deducted if the roof or ceiling were insulated with 4 inches rock wool.
    d. Total sensible heat gain from fresh air introduced by the system.
    e. Total latent heat gain from fresh air introduced by the system.
    f. Total sensible heat gain from the occupants of the auditorium.
    g. Total latent heat gain from the occupants of the auditorium.
6. What is your guarantee covering any disturbing noise from this proposed installation.
7. What is your guarantee covering any disturbing vibration from this installation.
8. Give a detailed breakdown of the complete operating cost of this system.
9. State definitely who manufactures the following items of equipment if included as part of this installation:
    a. Compressors
    b. Compressor motors
    c. Expansion coils
    d. Condensers
    e. Expansion valves
    f. Controls
    g. Blower
    h. Blower motors
10. Are we to expect fulfillment of mechanical guarantees on this equipment by you or must we press any claims that might develop with the manufacturer?
11. Are you prepared to render an inspection of this installation without further cost to us at each change of season during the life of the mechanical guarantee?
12. If this contract should be awarded to you what items or classifications of work involved do you contemplate subletting.
13. Of the various items of equipment included under this contract state definitely those for which you are a direct factory representative, or licensed dealer and those items purchased on the open market.
14. Submit attached to this questionnaire an engineering data sheet on each of the major items of equipment specified in this contract.
15. Submit a drawing or drawings showing the location of equipment, the duct lay-out, the duct sizes, the velocities and quantities of air at each outlet.
16. Outline a practical test which may be carried out after the completion of this contemplated installation which would be accepted by an unbiased engineering authority as substantiating your performance guarantee.

PAINTING ECONOMY—If there were some way of getting at facts and computing the amount of money wasted each year in the theatres of this country on paint, the figure would be absolutely staggering. I am prepared to hazard the statement that 80% of the painting done in theatres by ushers and handymen(?) is absolutely a total failure. Further, I will state that 60% of a paint job is preparing the surface, 30% manual skill, and 10% paint quality. The average home done paint job is applied over a surface that has not even been brushed, it is applied by some one who is not skilled, and frequently it is done with second- or third-grade paints—hence my estimate of an 80% loss.

Painting over rust on the fire escapes is not stopping the rusting process, and painting over a dirty wall is a waste of effort and money. Painting over water color or calcimine is just plain stupid, yet all of these things are repeatedly done. One of the amusing things about these home-done jobs is that if you figure the cost of material, the labor at, say, 50c per hour, and the mess created and the spoilage of brushes, you will find that for a very poor job, as much money has been spent as there would have been had a real painter been called in to do the work. Most managers think that they have saved the labor time. This is a fallacy because when they finally are forced to call in a real painter and do the job, it is going to cost them from four to six cents per square foot to strip the surface before the good painter can start applying paint.

PROPERTY MANAGEMENT—I, for one, have regarded the theatre manager as an unappreciated, overworked individual. However, many managers have not developed as they should have as property managers. Depreciation of his building and equipment is going on right under many a manager's nose at an alarming rate, and yet the manager, who once each week will put on old clothes and pry into every corner of his theatre from the top of the house tank to the basement, is very much the exception these days.

The theatre operators of this country are awake to the fact that the majority of theatres are not properly cared for and are wondering how they can drive some knowledge and sense of responsibility into their men. The theatre operators are ready to have their men really become truly managers.

It does not take an engineering education to inspect a theatre and detect 90% of the bad conditions that exist, but it can't be done from a dish, it can't be done by telling George to do it. The method of planned inspections has been covered in rather elaborate detail in BETTER THEATRES, and it is urged that managers review those articles and start now a program of real property management.

ROOFING FELT—Felt is a word frequently heard when people talk about roofs. Common roofing felts are made by saturating common dry felts with coal-tar pitch. Roofing felt is generally made in weight of 12, 15 and 20 pounds to the square (an area 10'x10' or 100 square feet). Nothing lighter than a 12-pound felt should be used for any roof, and 20-pound felt is strongly recommended for theatre roofs.

Roofing felts are sold by weight. Felt known as asphalt felt is also made by the same process, except that the common felt is treated with asphalt. Roofs are referred to as 2-ply, 3-ply or 4 ply, which means so many layers of felt. Each layer of felt should be applied on a freshly mopped surface, and should receive a mopping of hot tar after application.

You will, of course, be called on by sales or engineering representatives and be forced to listen to lengthy arguments as to the absurdity of the questionnaire, you will be told that it's unnecessary, etc. etc., but stick to your guns and insist upon it. When you have finally decided upon the proposal most acceptable, then before signing insist that the questionnaire with all its answers be incorporated and made a part of the contract. I assure you that if you let your future jobs this way you will be in a very much stronger position than if you accept one of the usual incomplete proposals.

Finally, you will receive this questionnaire from some companies without a murmur until they get down to Item 16. This they will tell you can't be done. My retort to this is that if they really believe that this can't be done, then why in heaven's name have they been making any guarantee at all?

OPERATING TESTS ON EQUIPMENT

METHODS of testing air-conditioning equipment and systems obviously fall into two clauses. First, reproduce the actual design load conditions, or simulate those conditions; and second, bring out prominently the important aspects of performance which would lead an impartial and qualified person to state without a reasonable doubt that the plant had been properly designed and installed.

The first method of creating artificially the design load conditions is quite obviously impractical in any theatre, and the chances of experiencing in normal operation within one year of installation, an exact repetition of the design conditions as to atmospheric load and occupancy load is indeed remote. Consequently, we must discard the first approach to making this test, and the second method must be used.

Under accurate field tests and computation, it is possible to compare specific characteristics of the various units comprising the system to see if they have been assembled properly and to study the effects of stipulated variables upon the field determined characteristics of the system. It is admitted that the following field tests and computations can be improved upon, and it is possible that standard methods could quickly be established with the co-operation of the air-conditioning industry and engineering profession. It will be argued that these field tests will mean nothing to the exhibitor. I contend that they will, and especially will they be of value to an engineer. It will be argued that such field tests will cost money; this is to be expected, but air-conditioning will cost anywhere from thirteen to fifteen dollars per seat, and as insurance that the proper installation has been made it is certainly worth another 25c or 50c per seat. The air-conditioning industry and profession would profit by the development of an acceptable method of making field tests, and certainly the exhibitor will, and it's quite obvious that the pressure toward this objective has got to be applied from our side.

Following is the outline of the field tests and calculations:

The following data and actual test must be computed and made within 60 days after the completion of the air conditioning system to be installed in .... THEATRE in .... (Town).

The company installing the air-conditioning system will provide all necessary instruments and two qualified engineers to make the computations and carry out the test. Such computations and tests will be made at a time mutually agreed upon and shall not interrupt the regular operation of the theatre.

It is our purpose to forward a copy of such computations and tests to a committee of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, who we expect, from such computations and tests, will adjudge the adequacy of the air-conditioning installation.

All tests and computations will be made in the presence of any members of our organization whom we may designate to be present or any other engineer whom we may employ to observe. We are to be provided with three complete sets of reports covering the tests and computations in all details.

The data, computations and tests will be covered in four classifications:

First Classification—Design Data.

a. A detailed description of the type of construction of all heat transmitting areas or surfaces.

b. The coefficient of transmission used or the method calculated and the over all coefficient of any combinations of materials as listed under heading "a," this classification.

c. Design outside conditions, and design inside conditions, direction and velocity of the prevailing wind, the location of the theatre with reference to sun orientation.

d. Occupancy load, the electric light load, the mechanical load, C.F.M. fresh air, C.F.M. recirculated air.

Second Classification—Heat Gain.

a. A complete heat gain calculation showing all details of calculations and formulae used and the authority for the use of the formulae.

Third Classification—Air quantity and air distribution.

a. The fan system will be put in maximum operation and the following checks will be made. (Note—all readings in ducts or at grill openings with either ammometers, manometers or Kata-Thermometers will wherever possible be taken by the traverse method). All points in ducts or at grills where readings are taken will be indicated on a blue print of the layout by code numbers or letters so that chart records can be readily identified as to exact location of readings.

b. Pressure readings will be made at not less than three points in each of the main ducts the idea being that by these readings some very definite opinion can be gained of the duct resistances as compared with the pressure characteristics of the fan or fans operated on the system.

c. Velocity readings will be taken at each delivery grill and at each return grill, and at the fresh air intake,—air quantities will be calculated from these readings and compared with the air quantities of the original proposal.

d. For each grill, delivery, recirculating and the fresh air intake the following will be tabulated: Average air velocity. Gross area of grill. Net area of grill. Percentage of free area of grill. Velocity coefficient of each grill.

e. By use of a Kata-Thermometer, the air velocities at the breathing line will be taken at a point in every 400 square foot area of seating capacity in the auditorium. Such points and velocities will be platted on the print of the auditorium.

f. At least three tests of the air delivery and distribution system will be made with chemical smoke. The reaction from visual observation will be noted on the print and the time recorded from the moment the smoke is released till the smoke has been removed or driven from the theatre.

Fourth Classification—Practical Equipment Ratings.

a. Fans—at full speed record the following data: 1. R. P. M. 2. Top speed. 3. Pressure characteristics. 4. Compare with manufacturers rating tables.

b. Fan motors—1. Horse power. 2. Voltage. 3. Amperage. 4. R. P. M. 5. Does the above compare with fan rating tables?

c. Pumps—1. Pressure reading. 2. Rated Head. 3. Gallons per minute. 4. Percentage actual pressure to rated head. 5. R. P. M. 6. Voltage. 7. Amperage. 8. Does the above readings check with pump manufacturers' rating?

d. Compressors and motors (Note—If necessary disconnect the thermostatic controls so that compressors may operate at their full capacity)—1. R. P. M. 2. Condenser temperature and pressure. 3. Suction temperature and pressure. 4. Condenser water temperature in and out. 5. In case of evaporative condensers liquor temperatures, in and out of condenser. 6. Compute the volumetric efficiency of the compressor. 7. What is the compression ratio? 8. Compute the pounds of refrigerant per ton. 9. Compute the cubic feet of refrigerant per ton. 10. Compute the actual tonnage capacity of the compressor. 11. Record the voltage and amperage of the compressor motor. 12. State the rated horse power of the motor. 13. State the horse power per ton. 14. Compare the actual tonnage capacity with the rated tonnage of the compressor.

Fifth Classification—Current consumption.

a. Give reading on each motor or other power equipment and compute the per ton hour operating costs.

Summary: Give the total time or duration of tests, the date and the hour of the day. Give outside atmospheric conditions during test. Give inside atmospheric conditions during test. Make a statement comparing the data taken during the above field tests with the calculated heat gain load for which the plant was designed and make a definite commitment as to whether or not in your opinion the field tests have substantiated the basic original computation upon which the installation was sold and bought. Do the field tests indicate that the installation can remove the combined sensible and latent heat gain as computed originally, and now practically?

Finally get the engineering data sheets on the whole series of freon compressors as turned out by any one of the manufacturers, and examine them. You will discover, we will say, that the specifications for the 20-ton unit is exactly the same in every detail as those for the 30-ton unit, and that the only difference is that the 20-ton unit operates at 325 revolutions per minute, and the 30-ton unit operates at 400 revolutions per minute. In brief, the compressor is exactly the same; the condenser for the 30-ton unit is larger than the condenser for the 20-ton unit; and the motor for the 30-ton is larger (of greater horse power) than the motor on the 20-ton. Yet when you buy the 20-ton compressor you pay a lower per ton price for the compressor than when you buy the 30-ton machine, and the difference is invariably greater than that represented by the increased cost of the larger condenser and the larger motor It is generally conceded that the higher the speed of a reciprocating machine, the shorter the life and the higher the maintenance cost. Consequently, we pay a higher unit price for a piece of equipment that basically has cost no more to manufacture, and will wear out sooner and cost more to keep in operation.

I also believe that it is excellent protection for the theatre to have the reserve tonnage capacity available by installing the lower speed machines; then, by the purchase of a new motor and an enlarged condenser, the additional capacity will be available. Who knows when the "powers that be" are going to create a couple of stores off the lobby that must be air-conditioned, or add office space?

We have to live with our plants a long time. Vigilance and tenacity at the time of installation may save many headaches later on.—J. T. K.

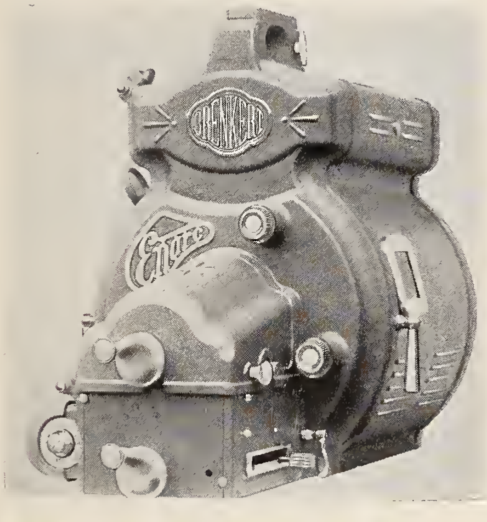
A Suprex Arc Projection Lamp Of Recent Design

A LATE EXAMPLE of projection arc lamp engineering resulting from the introduction in this country of the copper-coated non-rotating positive carbon, enabling all theatres at last to have superior high-intensity projection illumination, is the current model of the Brenkert Enarc lamp. It is illustrated in an accompanying photograph as installed recently in the Orpheum theatre in Seattle, Wash., and also in two shop views indicating its design and construction.



Brenkert Enarc lamp, enclosed. See text.

One of the latter two views shows the lamp housing opened to disclose the mechanism and various operating features. To begin at the top: The vent flue is placed directly over the arc to allow free escape of the ash which rises directly above the arc. Beneath is an arc-imager glass screen which shows, from any part of the projection room, the burning of the arc. Connected at the vent flue is an air channel between the lamphouse plate and reflector, with a dust panel at top.

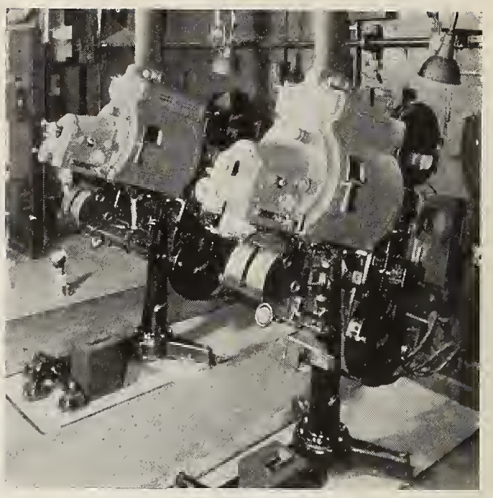
the reflector of proper position following adjustment. The adjoining arc stabilizer is of magnetic type, actuated by the arc voltage.

The negative carbon assembly is outside the lamphouse, permitting removal or trimming of the carbon outside the housing, and cleaning of the reflector without interference from the carbon. The negative carbon jaw accommodates carbons of 6, 7 and 8 millimeters without change. Positive hand-feed handle actuating the screw feed is operated from the right, the left or at the rear of the lamp. The carbon guide automatically centers the burning end of the positive carbon with the carbon jaw. A double ash tray extends the full length of the lamphouse.

The arc striker handle located at bottom just to the rear of the lamp housing, moves the positive carbon forward for striking the arc and automatically returns the carbon to its previous position—when the arc gap is once set, striking of the arc does not change the gap.

The dowsing arrangement provides double blades for the purpose of affording protection to the reflector when striking the arc, and they move completely away from the smoke and ash of the arc when in operating position, promoting lamphouse and mirror cleanliness. Two dowser control handles (upper front end of housing) operate from either right or left of the lamp and can be used as changeovers when necessary.

The only moving element in the combustion chamber is the positive carbon feed screw, which is at the base and entirely covered. The positive carbon holder, which is removable as a unit, accommodates carbons of 7, 8 and 9 millimeters without change.



A recent installation of Brenkert Enarc lamps in the Orpheum theatre, Seattle, Wash.

The lamphouse is provided with fully opening doors on each side swung horizontally on inside hinges. They are readily detachable.

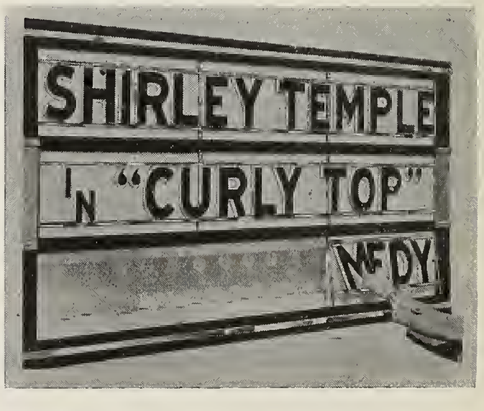
To provide for the air draft factor characteristic of the suprex arc, the combustion chamber is provided with full-length openings at the base to permit air to enter where a baffle deflects it to the side walls and above the arc for exhaustion through the flue vent at the top.

All electrical units, including motor control potentiometers, motor fuses and meter shunt, are mounted in a small housing on the left rear side, accessible by the removal of a cover. An ammeter, placed on the right rear side, can be added.

Black Attraction Board Letters on Luminous Ground

THE SILHOUTTE metallic attraction board letter, because of its clarity and the smaller amount of total wattage which it requires, has gone a long way toward supplanting the long established glass block letter and similar forms. Original designs for attraction board lettering at the Nela Park laboratories of the General Electric Company included the use of an opaque black letter against a white illuminated background for the purpose of reducing wattage requirements to a minimum and providing for long-distance clarity (many of these designs, applied hypothetically in sketches of theatre fronts, appeared at the time in several issues of BETTER THEATRES).

This method of attraction board lettering has been adopted by the Adler Sign Letter Company of Chicago, with sectional channel frames and background illumination by either single or double rows of 25 watt lamps (see accompanying photographic demonstration). The Adler system was developed by Ben F. Adler, president of the company, with the co-operation of Nela Park engineers.



Photographic demonstration of Adler silhouette letter insertion and illumination.

Letters are made of cast aluminum with flanges fitting readily into the channel frames. The channel frame sections are 30 inches in length and adjustable to any size of marquee. The background glass is in sections of the same length, with provision for sealing of the joints so that no light is emitted except through the glass itself. The result, on installation (see accompanying photograph of the Capitol theatre in Chicago), is a solid white (brightly illuminated) background, with the black letters sharply defined against it, the steel channel frames being obscured by the flood of light.

taken in the selection of it. The wrong floor covering can throw out your whole decorative scheme.

The color treatment of this layout is as follows: The lower part of the wall is a rich shade of blue, this gradually getting lighter in tone toward the ceiling, which is white. The return of the cornices and plaster are executed in silver. The wall light brackets have golden Lumiline bulbs. The drapes are a metallic combination of blue and gold. The top rail of the balcony is chrome. Console tables are light blonde maple. The furniture is upholstered in reds and silver. The floor covering is a combination of blue shot with red and gold.

The women's lounge, of course, was changed radically. The old fashioned French cosmetic tables have been removed and in their place a real sensible type of vanity. The chaise-longue is formed of a deep comfortable chair with an ottoman pushed in front. This ottoman may be used as a seat when not used in front of the chair. The small hassocks used in front of the vanity are also used as seats.

The exit (which is not really an exit, as evidenced by the radiator grill) has been transformed into a simulated window by the use of venetian blinds and drapes. All mouldings have been removed and the room is treated in the following colors: The walls are soft yellow. The furniture is green lacquer, except for the vanity which is white lacquered. The fabrics are soft, luxurious materials in yellow and gold. The white venetian blinds with yellow tapes have rich off-white drapes.

V-Shape Unit Marquee Design and Illumination

THE V-SHAPE marquee brought out by the Artkraft Sign Company of Lima, Ohio, under the trade name, "Zephyr," presents an interesting study in modern theatre marquee and sign development. Constructed as a composite whole at the factory, with flashers, fuse blocks and fuses installed for the entire display, the marquee is shipped in four to six units, depending on the design, to permit quick, economical assembly with minimum labor on location.

Although the component units are standard to fit any size of front of a width of 18 feet or more, a variety of lighting effects is available. The theatre owner has a choice of either painted or illuminated effects. For example, the theatre name can be arranged in incandescent lamps or neon, single- or double-neon tubing in various color combinations above and below the attraction board, or for traveling borders, vertical or horizontal incandescents or neon in the wings, if wings are specified. A vertical display also can be built in connection with the marquee, if wanted.

CONSTRUCTION

Standard specifications call for (1) overall width across front of building, 20 feet; (2) overall height where sign rests against building, 5 feet, 3⅛ inches; (3) overall distance from building toward street, 10 feet; (4) overall height of changeable letter section, 4 feet, 4¾ inches; (5) overall height of ornamental post at outer end, 5 feet, 10 inches; (6) length of openings for changeable letters, 9 feet, 8¾ inches.

Total space for changeable letters measures 29 feet, 2¼ inches on each side. The letters are 8 inches high, of the flat silhouette type with modern faces, and are finished in Duco. Two hundred letters are furnished with each sign as standard equipment. The changeable letter capacity is from 15 to 17 letters per line.

The V-shape traveling flashing strip-light, containing 103 lamps, is wired to travel out over the top of the ornamental post, then down to the bottom and back to the building, centering on the most important point—the boxoffice. The ornamental post has four rows of neon tubing for decorative purposes.

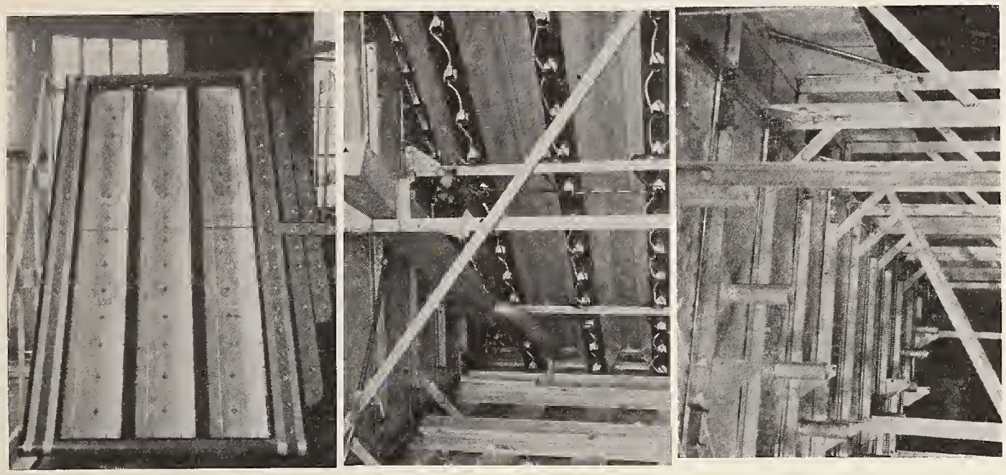
The marquee is as simple to install as a vertical sign which comes in sections. Section one (See accompanying diagrams) is bolted to the building. Section two is then bolted to section one, with an overhead to the building. Section three is then bolted to section one and section two, with another overhead to the building. Then section four is put on the front and across the bottom, which finishes off the marquee and closes up the joint between sections two and three. Where the name is used, that constitutes sections five and six, which are bolted to on the top sections two and three.

ILLUMINATION

The lamps are placed in porcelain-enameled reflectors directly behind the letters. The enamel reflector surface requires only occasional wiping with a damp cloth to remove dust, etc., not painting.

The soffit is made of 24-gauge galvanealed copper-bearing steel, finished in white lacquer and equipped with 60 receptacles wired for 40-watt lamps. The galvanealed material is rust-proof. The roof is of 20-gauge galvanized sheet steel.

Although the marquee is wired for 40-watt lamps to take care of overload capacity, 15- or 25-watt lamps (15 watts are enough) are recommended. Six-watt lamps are used for the borders, as this size has been found to be just as efficient as the 10-watt.



An Artkraft "Zephyr" marquee unit ready for shipment. See text.

The V-shape marquee provides letter and attraction board space which may readily be seen from any point along the streets because of the triangular front element.

There are three Artkraft plants in Lima, one other in Clyde, Ohio, and one in Connersville, Ind. The company has 130 branch offices and distributors, and more than 200 salesmen covering all national territories. Morton L. Clark is vice president and sales manager, while P. J. Ramers is vice president and general manager.

The method of shipment of the Artkraft "Zephyr" marquee is illustrated in three accompanying photographs, which also indicate further its sectional construction.

The first (lefthand) view is of a section crated for shipment. The name plate has not been attached, and a lamp cap has been substituted. Clearly shown are the stainless steel rods on which the letters hang, also the porcelain reflectors in back of the letters (white opal translucent glass goes in front of the reflectors, which, being of porcelain, do not require repainting).

The middle picture is of the same section, as crated, at the rear, showing the rugged steel frame work, pipe for drainage from the roof, and the wiring on the back of the letter track (porcelain reflectors, as shown in the first view).

The third photograph gives a general view inside the marquee, showing the steel framework, galvanized roof and heavy gusset plates.

Metal Furniture: Its Place In the Modern Theatre

THE USE of metals for the complete construction of furniture for living rooms, bedrooms, lobbies, lounges and other rooms, private, public and semi-public, has developed logically from the central idea expressed in modernism. There has been a great deal of confusion as to what modernism really is, and even today its terms are frequently applied to methods and effects which are not a whit more modern than a candlestick. But at any rate this technique loosely called modernism is enduring, and its falsities are being sifted out with time and extended application to our needs.

With respect to furniture, the metals are not intended to supplant the woods, but the modernist does say that modern metallurgy and chemistry and mechanics have given us metallic materials out of which furniture can be made which for certain purposes has specific advantages over that constructed of wood. The application of metal to furniture is thus parallel, in principle, to the use of glass and phenolics for building materials, of chemicals for clothing. Greater efficiency and economy, with comparable aesthetic values, through the use of materials that modern science has given us, is the essential aim of modernism.

Today most theatres represent the ideas advanced in modernism, at least to an important degree. Some may express these ideas more or less falsely, but at any rate there is a widespread attempt to create an effect of modernism. Few, therefore, are the newer theatres and those which have been remodeled during the last two or three years, which do not lend themselves to the use of metal furniture in foyers, lounges and offices.

Furniture in theatre foyers and lounges of course receives harsh treatment. The public is no respecter of other people's property. Metal furniture has an advantage here in its durability. Such material does not require the gluing and nailing together of many sections. Chromium and stainless steel are not susceptible to injury from knocks, sharp objects and fluids.

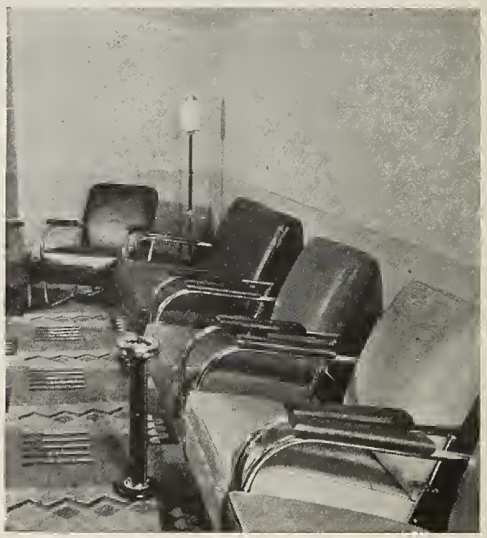
Are You Going to Remodel Your Theatre This Summer?

. . . if so, you may find the Planning the Theatre department of Better Theatres helpful. This department is conducted by an experienced theatre architect, Peter M. Hulsken, and he will give your inquiries his personal attention. There is no fee . . . and no "trade tie-ups." Only unbiased advice as to construction, decorative treatment, materials, costs, etc. Merely write:

BETTER THEATRES, ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

Simplified, unit-type, welded construction can "take it" from both public and employes. Because of these characteristics—and resistance to the action of atmospheric changes should be added—metal furniture is admirably adapted to the rooms of a semi-public building like a theatre.

The design of most metal furniture is peculiar to this type because of structural advantages with respect to durability, economy and comfort, rather than because of a desire to create a bizarre "modernistic" shape. The tensile character of the metal employed permits the adaptation of a simplified unit construction to natural posture and other comfort factors, and the piece of furniture takes its form logically from this adaptation.



A recent installation of modern metal furniture in the Neptune theatre, Seattle, Wash., consisting in chairs and sofas with coverings of contrasting colors selected to harmonize with the new decorative treatment of this remodeled house. The furniture is by the Royal Metal Manufacturing Company of Chicago, while the installation was made by the Seattle branch of the National Theatre Supply Company.

Many of the designs also provide for changes in coverings, or replacement of springs and upholstering, without replacement of the entire piece of furniture, or without the usual process of reupholstering, since construction is of unit type.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

● Mr. Hulskin is a member of the American Institute of Architects and has long specialized in theatre designing. In this department he will be glad to answer questions pertaining to preliminary considerations involved in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. Working plans and designs can not be supplied, however, since this department may not assume the functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

The Question:

ENCLOSED PLEASE find a blueprint and a snapshot of the front of our theatre. This theatre is not running at the present time, but we have in mind to rebuild it according to your American theatre system, with two small stores at both sides—say, one is good for soda fountain, and one for cigar store, with the one story (above) for dancing.

We would like to ask you to advise as to the building plan for around 800 seating capacity. For ground measurement kindly see the blueprint.—M. B. B.

The Answer:

AFTER GIVING your plans study I submit to you the following suggestions to transform your present theatre into a modern plan, with a seating capacity of 800 seats: Your blueprint indicates that the present theatre is of the stadium type; and, if possible, I suggest that you change this into one-floor plan. I am sorry that you did not send a longitudinal section of the building so that I could give you a more comprehensive description, but I will assume that this floor level can be changed.

The entrance is about 16 feet, 6 inches wide, which is sufficient for 800 seats. If the step-up arch in the center of the building could be removed, it will improve the entrance. Place corner poster frames on face of piers on each side of entrance, plan for a box office 3 feet back of the inside of the entrance arch, place three sets of entrance doors with glass panels about 5 feet back of the box office, cover the side walls with poster frames. This will form the outside lobby.

Three other sets of doors with solid panels should be placed in the wall dividing the front part of the building from the theatre proper. This will necessitate removal of part of the wall. Place illuminated shadow boxes along side walls. This will form the inside lobby.

Behind the division wall, plan for a 14-foot foyer with men's and women's rooms on each end. The toilet rooms should be so planned that one enters, first, into an ante- or rest-room before entering into toilet rooms proper. This will give the required privacy. There will be required in the men's toilet, two water closets, three urinals and one lavatory; in the women's toilet, three water closets and two lavatories. Provide for drinking fountains in the foyer.

As the width of the auditorium is approximately 52 feet, 8 inches, I suggest that you place the seats as follows: Plan for a center bank of thirteen seats across with a 4-foot aisle on each side and two wall banks of six seats across. This will give 25 seats across the width of the auditorium. To obtain a seating capacity of 800 you will require 32 rows of seats. Provide at least 25 feet between the first row of seats and the projection screen. Your plans show that the building is large enough to space the seats at least 2 feet, 8 inches from back to back. Two exits should be placed near the stage, and two near the wall between the foyer and the auditorium.

Block up all present windows and provide for a cooling and ventilating system. For inexpensive acoustical correction you could use acoustic plaster at the ceiling and rear wall, with fabric panels on the side walls, separated by or enclosing bracket lighting fixtures.

Place as many plate glass openings in the wall between the foyer and the auditorium as possible. This is for the benefit of patrons waiting for seats, so that they can watch the picture while standing. The bottom of these plate glass openings should be 4 feet above the floor.

The Question:

WITH A GREAT deal of interest, I have followed for several years your department, "Planning the Theatre," in BETTER THEATRES, and I sincerely feel that you have given very valuable information to theatre owners who intended to remodel their theatres. Now I have an opportunity to take advantage of the services given by your department, and kindly request you to give me your suggestions.

I am building a new theatre, which is now practically under the roof, and I am now taking up the matter of interior decorating. I cannot make up my mind how to treat the walls in the auditorium. I have spent a great deal of time looking over the photographs in several issues of BETTER THEATRES and find that some interiors show plain wall decorating, some of them have the walls covered with wood, and others show fabrics for covering. It is very difficult for me to make a selection as I am afraid that I may make a mistake, and I need some advice so that I will have no regrets afterwards for a too hasty decision.

I am afraid if I use a scheme of painted walls that the wall surface will be too plain and too monotonous and that the walls will soil too easily. I like the wood veneer covering with metal strips the best of any scheme, especially where draped panels are used, but I am afraid that the cost of such an installation will be beyond my means.

It seems to me that fabric-covered walls are very pleasing to the eye, but I am afraid that it will be difficult to keep them clean and that they can be easily destroyed by destructive persons.

I wish you would give me some idea of the cost, durability and upkeep of these different coverings.—A. D. C.

The Answer:

IN ANSWERING your inquiry, first I wish to state that the selection of wall covering depends a great deal on individual taste. Painted walls can be executed with very effective results, especially when the proper colors are selected and shaded in various hues. To break the monotony, which you fear will result, a stenciled surface could be executed; or if these walls are very long, draped panels at certain intervals could be placed on the wall surface.

You understand, of course, that a darker color scheme will not soil as easily as lighter shades. In most cases, the soiling appears mostly above any radiators, and this can be partly prevented by the installation of shields or covers, and by frequently cleaning the radiators. If the soiling is prevalent above the grilles of a ventilating system, the installation of filters will prevent most of this trouble.

The cost of a decorative paint covering varies from 50 cents to $1 or more per yard, according to the amount of stenciling and designs.

Use of wood veneer, which you seem to like, is really the least expensive method, because it does not require plastering the walls.

The material used in most cases is a wood-grained wall board applied on furring strips and held in place by chromium snap-on strips, so that no nails are driven through the boards. The material costs between 8c and 10c per square foot, and the chromium stripping about 25c per running foot.

The cost of this material itself and application of it equals about the cost of plastering. There is no wear on these boards and the surface is easily cleaned by wiping with a clean cloth.

The fabric wall covering is also very effective, but I believe that this will be the most expensive method of the three schemes. I doubt if this material can be installed for less than $3 per yard. Of course, this is all according to what kind of fabric you select. There may be something in the fear you have of destruction, but on the other hand, if some vandal wants to mar or destroy something in a theatre, he can destroy almost any materials used. This fabric covering can be easily cleaned with a vacuum cleaner.

You will have no regrets later if you decide on any of the three schemes.

Lobby Treatment

VERY FREQUENTLY of late I have received inquiries about improving lobbies, and in the majority of cases, the inquirer insists upon the renovation to be done at the lowest cost possible. In most cases where such a remodeling is to be done, the box office is generally located inside of the lobby. For a very effective transformation at low cost, I suggest the following:

Build a new box office at the center of entrance—preferably between entrance doors. If entrance doors have plate glass panels (as they should have), and the glass is in good condition, have a glass man treat the glass with 3/8-inch sandblasted lines in a modern design.

Place along the side wall of the lobby, large shadow boxes covering the entire length of the wall. The shadow boxes should be provided with Lumiline lamps set in reflectors and placed in square boxes, which should be covered with flashed opal glass at right angles to the back of the shadow box. Be sure to construct the boxes so that the glass can be easily removed, so that the lamps can be replaced. This can be done with the use of snap-on metal strips.

The spaces between the floor and the bottom of the boxes, also the space from top to ceiling, can be covered with a hard or pressed wood, so that the effect will be that of a recessed shadow box. The joints of this hard or pressed wood should be covered with chromium strips, and the surfaces of the wood painted.

Provide a small wood cornice in the angle of wall and ceiling.

The doors between the lobby and foyer are generally badly worn, so cover both sides with one sheet of pressed wood with vertical or horizontal chromium strips—this wood to be painted. The result will be that the doors are just as good as new ones and at a lower cost.

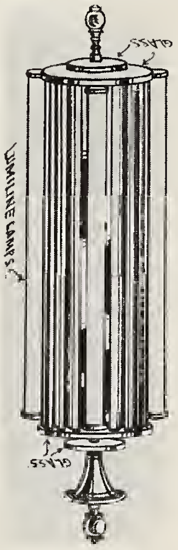
If the floor is badly worn, install rubber mats, carpets or linoleum.

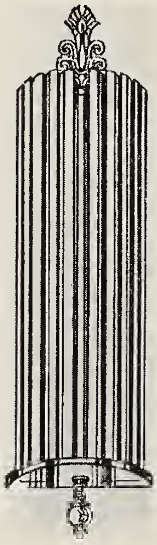
By painting the ceiling and installing new light fixtures, the result will be a modern lobby at a minimum cost.

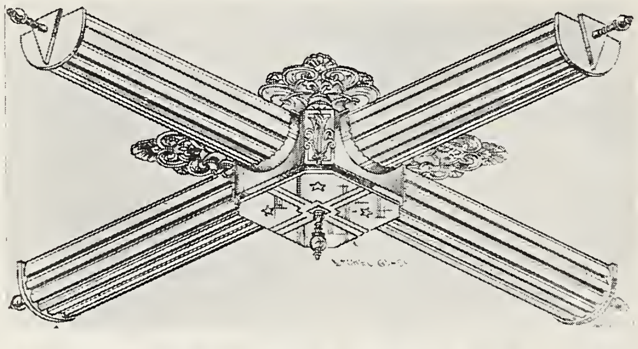
In the above I have made definite suggestions for sake of clarity. It is to be understood, of course, that modern materials permit a great variety of treatments without going beyond sound economy.

Lighting Fixtures for Modern Interiors

Not only the light, but the source of the light, if suitably designed, has a rightful place in the modern interior scheme. Coves and troughs and so on do not by any means cover the range of possibilities in modern theatre illumination. The ornamental fixture is indeed often needed to supply, with modern restraint, a deft touch of elegance. At some points, especially in foyers and lounges, it can provide most of the answer to the decoration problem. The designs shown here have been selected for their varied adaptability, and all are strictly in the modern manner, functionally as well as in pattern. The bracket lights at the right, for example, have the appearance, when lighted, of glass tubes. The nearest one is equipped with an all-metal, fluted half-cylinder with scientifically curved louvres for the emission of light. It is trimmed with a plate glass diffusing disc at the bottom, and finished in iridescent pearl tones with touches of chrome and gold. It is wired with six standard base sockets which may be used on single switch control circuits, or on a two-switch control permitting color changes. It is 27 inches in length and 6 inches in diameter. The further bracket fixture is similar in construction, but has three Lumiline lamps mounted outside the cylinder.







The ceiling fixture above supplies a decorative means of indirect color lighting. It is constructed of metal, except for the cylinder ends and the bottom of the center section, which elements are of engraved glass. Due to the indirect reflection of light rays through cylinder louvres, this fixture also has the appearance, when lighted, of glass tubes. The louvres are so fashioned that a subtle blending of colors is achieved. The body of the fixture is finished in satin and polished chrome, embossed with metal castings, and may be cleaned readily merely by wiping. It is wired with 50 standard base sockets and is adaptable to two-, three- or four-switch control circuits.

At right is a wall fixture of many uses, but particularly adaptable to lobbies of vertical lines, and to auditoriums. It presents a simple fluted pattern which relies almost entirely upon the action of the light for its beauty. It is constructed entirely of metal, with louvres along the flutings and concealed lamps in a ring toward the bottom, from both of which sources the light is reflected, in a blending of colors, against the flutings, which are finished in pearl tones with touches of stain chrome, black and gold. This fixture is 40 inches long, has an overall diameter of 11 inches, and extends 6½ inches from the wall. It is wired with 18 standard base sockets, while circuits may be arranged for two or three switches. A vari-colored effect is also obtainable with operation on a single switch.

Troubles in Extended Frequency Reproduction

• Describing a group of faults in sound caused or exaggerated by the extension of the frequency band, with emphasis on flutter and its remedies

By H. C. ROLLS

IN ADDITION to the troubles peculiar to itself, theatre equipment for extended frequency reproduction presents exaggerated forms of problems that are present in all sound apparatus. Focus of the exciting light is one example. It must be sharp in all theatre equipment. Reproduction of the upper frequencies, however, requires an accuracy of focus that is difficult to obtain with the means formerly in use, and justifies the use of special tools—in this case, a "buzz track" or loop of single-frequency sound (9,000 cycles is often chosen, as representing the upper limit to which the system should respond).

With this buzz track in operation, the exciter lamp is adjusted until the maximum volume is obtained. The greatest accuracy is secured, of course, by means of a volume indicator or output meter. The judgment of the ear can be used, instead of the meter, if the person making the test is thoroughly familiar with previous results obtained from the same projector. Ear judgment is more reliable, however, when the results can be compared with those of the other projector, if that is known to be in focus.

It is still difficult, in many theatres, to test for focus while the show is in progress, using either the ear or the output meter; hence, some of the latest apparatus, incorporating dual amplifying channels, is equipped with switches by means of which the monitor speaker, output meter, or both, can be applied to one projector, while the stage speakers are reproducing the film that is being run on the other. Such facilities are helpful in focusing exciter lamps, during the show, to obtain the maximum results from an extended frequency installation. Where they do not exist, sufficient overtime must be allowed to prepare a proper supply of pre-focus exciter lamps to be available for instant insertion.

FLUTTER

The illusion of true sound that is created by the more modern types of theatre equipment has led also to extensive investigation of flutter, as one of the most important single causes of distortion capable of destroying that illusion. Flutter arises out of mechanical imperfection in the reproducing equipment, many of which are so slight that adjustment creates no improvement that is instantly audible. In consequence, such defects remain undetected by ordinary methods of investigation, but while singly they do no apparent harm, a number of them, present simultaneously, definitely spoil the sound. Until recently the only reliable remedy has been the shotgun method of "a general overhauling."

Inasmuch as flutter is, essentially, a periodic change in the speed with which the sound track passes through the exciting light, its action upon the system is to produce a corresponding change in the frequency of the sound currents created by the photocell. Methods of measuring this change have recently been evolved, by means of which minute defects in a sprocket, or trifling improvements in the tension of a film shoe, are readily observed, and the equipment can be gone over and flutter removed systematically.

Measurement of flutter in recording and printing machines has resulted in substantially complete elimination of recorded or printed forms of this trouble in most of the late pictures, leaving the theatre assured of relatively distortionless sound if corresponding measures are applied to the reproducing apparatus, consistently, in time to eliminate causes.

A flutter-less constant-frequency buzz track is used in association with the fluttermeter. That test equipment includes, among other apparatus, an electrical filter network which offers a specific impedance to one frequency only. If the output of the sound system, when the buzz track is played, were totally free from flutter, the frequency applied to the filter network would not vary, and the output current drawn from that network would be constant in volume. The indicating meter used would show no response. The presence of flutter, however, varies the frequency applied to the filter, and the current drawn from that filter alters in volume accordingly. The indicating meter responds to these changes in current. Its scale is calibrated to show flutter in terms of percentage of the true frequency.

Considerations of design make it undesirable to use the filter network directly on the frequencies produced by flutter. Therefore those frequencies, in the test equipment now under consideration, are heterodyned against (mixed with) a constant frequency created by an oscillator tube included in the same test unit. It is the difference-frequency thus producer that is applied to the filter.

Apparatus operating on a somewhat different principle, but intended to produce the same result, is in process of development by another manufacturer. Details of its design are not, at this writing, available.

Flutter is particularly undesirable in extended frequency sound because the naturalness of the illusion makes it more noticeable. The reproduction of the human voice, in the best of modern theatre equipment, is very close to absolute accuracy. Where sound is unnatural at best, flutter is merely one more defect the audience must labor to forget. Where it is substantially the only defect, its presence is glaringly obvious.

The mechanical causes of flutter are many, almost innumerable. A few may be suggested: Wear, defect or lack of lubrication in motor bearings, resulting in irregular motor action. Worn or imperfectly meshed driving gears. Worn or stretched driving belt. Worn or defective driving chain. Unbalanced flywheel. Undercut or imperfect sprocket. Improper tension of any idler or pad in the sound assembly. Insufficient loop between projector intermittent sprocket and sound sprockets. Enlarged sprocket holes in film. Worn or improperly lubricated takeup. And so on, ad infinitum.

The troubles thus far considered are among those which are exaggerated in their effect upon the sound by the existence of extended frequency reproduction. That type of reproduction, however, includes troubles of its own which are not present at all restricted-frequency apparatus.

SPEAKER TROUBLES

As many as three different types of speakers, or baffles, or both, may be used in an extended-frequency installation, each group reproducing its own section of the total sound. Obviously, the volume output must be correctly proportioned, as between these different groups of speakers, and this is done at the time the installation is made. A distinct class of troubles refers to changes that take place subsequently, and upset the original balance.

Of these, the simplest is the outage of a speaker, which will not always be obvious. The tweeter or high frequency speakers, particularly, are pointed to supply different portions of the auditorium. They add crispness and clarity to the sound, but comparatively little volume. If a tweeter stops working, the sound observer will not be aware of the fact unless it is the one that supplies the portion of the theatre in which he happens to be at the time. The total change in volume will be very small, even though a large section of seats may have lost the benefit of extended frequency sound. Only periodic visits to all parts of the house will detect the presence of this fault.

A more serious difficulty, affecting the entire theatre, is a change in the proportionate volume delivered by the different groups of speakers, which may amount to serious distortion. The sound current delivered to all speakers is derived from a common ampliying system, but the field exciting current is often drawn from more than one source, particularly in theatres in which extended frequency apparatus has been added to existing equipment. In such theatres, and sometimes in others, different groups of speakers may have separate field supply rectifiers, and aging tubes (or a burnt-out tube) in one rectifier, may reduce the volume of sound from its associated speakers without influencing the volume obtained from the others. The overall result may be tinny or barrel sound, depending upon which group of speakers is affected.

MONITOR LIMITATIONS

This is one of the types of trouble which, particularly in extended frequency systems, cannot be detected in the projection room. The monitor speaker was never a reliable guide to trouble, partly because of the noise always present in the projection room, and partly because it never duplicated the full character of the screen speakers. In the case of extended frequency reproduction, however, practically the only use of the monitor is to determine whether sound is on or off. Its quality does not remotely approach that which is heard in the auditorium, many of the frequencies heard with the newer systems find the monitor totally unresponsive, and the use of an outside sound observer is indispensable if the benefits of the new equipment are to be realized.

NON-SYNC FLAWS

Some of the frequencies to which the monitor does not respond may contain disturbing noises that the projectionist will never hear. One such disturbance is high-frequency needle scratch, likely to be present if phonograph records are used for incidental music. The degree of scratch reproduced by the older systems, which cut off at about 5,000 cycles, was very much less than that which will be heard with equipment going to 7,000 and higher. The more recent commercial phonograph records carry extended frequency sound, suited to use in a modern theatre, but require special precautions against scratch. A counter-balanced tone arm will be found helpful, and so will the new crystal phonograph reproducers, which impose a needle pressure of only about about half an ounce. The best phonograph sound, of course, will be obtained by installing modern vertical-cut equipment and using vertical-cut records, but this procedure is, unfortunately, still somewhat expensive.

It consists of two operating sections, one acting above, the other below the projector mechanism, stopping the fire from continuing to the magazines. At each point there is a fusible link and a blade. When the film is ignited, the film slot, either in the top or bottom device or both, depending on direction of the flame, is sealed by the knife, which at the same time has severed the film.

AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD ON PROJECTION MEN AND METHODS

BY THE TIME these words are duly recorded in printer's ink, I will be in Chicago, attending the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. But a lot has happened since I and Friend Daughter let the home fires temporarily go out, for I have been addressing a large number of projectionists in person, en route to Chicago in the gas buggy, at meetings called by local unions in a number of cities.

NEW HAVEN

Our first official stop was New Haven, Conn., where I had been invited to address Local 273, and guests from Bridgeport (Local 277), New London (Local 439), Norwalk (Local No. 479), Norwich (Local 459), and Waterbury (Local 304). However, the weather man got out his squirt gun and started to deluge the country, with the result that only Norwalk and Norwich men came over. Leo Cimikoski and Charles Oldham drove 75 miles through the rain to attend the meeting. Norwalk was represented by George Brazil, president; Wilford Tarlor, business representative; Carleton Hunt, secretary; and George Frank. Mr. Brazil also came as representative of the Connecticut State organization, of which he is vice president.

Such conversation as was had with theatre managers developed the fact that New Haven theatre business is now on the upgrade—after the slump caused by the recent floods. As one manager expressed it, "business is now good and getting better."

The Bijou, which is managed by W. H. Elder, assisted by Jack Sidney, was one of the theatres visited. A. Cassella, J. Stein, J. Huisman and L. Biasucci form the projection staff.

At the Paramount Assistant Manager G. Reising evinced pardonable pride in both the theatre and its equipment. The projection room is manned by Brothers Maurice Morriarit, Theodore Haenssler, Fred Warner, and Marshall Jones, who are justly proud of the new 36-volt arc, 62-ampere Brenkert lamp recently installed. I am sorry I was unable to visit more New Haven theatres.

A. Nelson Frazier is president of Local 273. Frank Perry is vice president, Edwin Boppert, treasurer; A. Basilicato, recording secretary, and the business representative is Mathew Kennedy.

Stopping off at Ansonia, Conn., we called upon our old friend John Griffith, and his stalwart son—John, Jr. It was John Griffith who pointed the way in the highly important and very difficult subject of projection optics. The son follows in his father's footsteps. They are both members of the New Haven local and have worked opposite shifts in a large Ansonia theatre for many years.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

After New Haven came Springfield, Mass., and on our way we saw some of the effects of the flood in the Connecticut River valley—houses perched at all angles, many smashed to kindling wood, boats out in the middle of fields.

In Springfield we found Arthur Payette, secretary of Local 186, awaiting our arrival. A little later Benjamin Hull, president of the local, came in. President Hull is a charter member of the local, which was formed 26 years ago. It has 53 members working in 17 theatres in Springfield and several surrounding cities and towns. John F. Gatelee is business representative. He is also IA representative for New England.

Springfield suffered terribly from the flood. All theatres except two were closed down for lack of power. Eight of the theatres were flooded, some of them severely.

The meeting was held in a beautiful assembly room in the Hotel Bridgeway. Attending were not only all members of the Springfield union, but also a good representation from Local 486, Hartford, Conn., Local 382, and Local 596 of Greenfield, Mass.

When I had closed my talk, Mr. Gatelee spoke briefly, commending my address to the members, but advising me that the New England district was in opposition to the 2,000-foot reel.

UTICA, N. Y.

After a 200-mile run from Springfield, we were very comfortably parked in one of Utica's swank inns, guests of Local 337. This union has 44 members. Brother Charles Skinner is its chief executive officer, Louis Tennis is vice president, our old friend Glen Humphrey is business agent, while Dean Wallace is secretary.

In Utica the admission price to theatres is, it seems to me, absurdly low, especially when we consider that all theatres, except one, the Stanley, run double feature shows. The Stanley admission price is 40 cents. One house operates on a flat 10-cent basis. Several charge 15 cents. In conversations with me, managers voiced strong objection to the double feature, but, they said, to cut it out requires the unanimous action of all theatres.

At midnight a banquet was held, attended by more than fifty projectionists of the Utica local, of Local 474, (Rome-Oneida), and Local 609 (Little Falls). Glen Humphrey was toastmaster.

(Friend Daughter says she wants to come to Utica again. They fed her two steaks in one evening!)

SYRACUSE

After a short run from Utica we arrived at the lively, up-to-date city of Syracuse where Projectionists Raymond Roe and George Raaflaub took us under their wings, showing us interesting spots of the surrounding country. Later in the evening Friend Daughter was escorted to several theatres by Projectionist Walter Scarfe. This is her report:

"At Loew's State theatre I found an unusually clean, well planned projection room in which William P. Meany rules as chief, assisted by Louis R. Boyd, Walter Scarfe and Howard Kennar. George Raaflaub is there, too, while waiting for another theatre, which recently was damaged by fire, to be reopened. H. Rose is acting manager.

"At Keith's, another of Syracuse's fine houses, Chief Projectionist Jack Seeley was working with his mouth clamped shut while a broken jaw healed. His brother workers are Kenneth Wilcox, Lawrence Sherman, Robert Poulson, John Eccles and Linn Goff. Again I saw a decidedly clean house. If these two projection rooms are fair examples of what Syracuse has, the boys should be complimented upon their efficiency and cleanliness. I saw two Hall & Connolly HC2's which have been in use for the past eight years without any major repairing. A visit with G. Lampe, the manager, and J. Golden, acting manager, who aids him, was also enjoyed. Both dislike double features, but consider them necessary in Syracuse."

Most of the members of Local 376, and also seven men from Local 272, Courtland, N. Y., which is about 35 miles distant, attended the midnight meeting. After the meeting, the Courtland men asked me to visit them some time next fall.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Arriving in Rochester, which has some very special connections with the motion picture industry, we were met by our old friend Louis M. Townsend, president of Local 253. This body has 70 members, most of whom are working regularly. Those who are not, are assured of $25 a week for relief work until better times arrive.

It is interesting to note that downtown theatres in Rochester are doing 90 per cent of their 1929 business, and most of the others about 80 per cent. Time was limited, but visits to a couple of theatres were managed.

The RKO Palace is a 3,000-seat house, and from the appearance of the well ventilated, well equipped projection room, reproduction of motion pictures gets proper attention. This observation was confirmed by Manager Risley, who stated, in precise terms, that he realized that aside from an attractive, comfortable place to sit in for two or three hours, he had nothing to offer his public except what comes from the projection room.

"Unless everything is okay in projection matters," he said, "I am eventually going to lose money at the box office."

Three cheers for Manager Risley!

William Holmes is chief projectionist at the Palace, and Floyd Spencer, Carl Redfern, Calvin Bornkessel and Jesse Seadeek complete the staff.

Another theatre visited was the Rochester. This house seats 4,000. The projection room was well lighted and clean, but it is a safe guess that the boys get pretty warm up there in the summertime. The projectionists at the Rochester are Frank Britt, Paul Kuntz, Frank Gates, Walter Sein and Al Florack. These men have contrived something interesting for the projection port. Instead of projecting through glass, they have installed a cone-shaped tube, made of sheet metal, between the port and the projector mechanism, which shuts out noise from the auditorium without the use of a glass port cover.

One poor practice which I observed in Rochester—and elsewhere, for that matter—is to locate the motor-generator sets in the basement. In some of the flooded cities exhibitors must have had good reason to regret this.

BUFFALO

Buffalo, the Queen City of the Lakes, welcomed us with open arms—and a heavy snow storm. Shortly after arrival, the welcoming hand of A. Ryde was extended, as well as those of W. Webster and David Hunter. We were loaded into Brother Ryde's car and taken to the home of George H. Signor. We were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Signor at dinner. Afterwards Mr. Signor invited me upstairs to examine his library, in which I found at least 50 volumes dealing with motion picture sound and projection, radio work and other subjects relating thereto. Brother Signor has all the transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers bound very beautifully and substantially. It was indeed the finest piece of book binding I have ever looked on. Moreover, he has had his older editions of the Bluebook of Projection rebound in the same manner. In the basement of his home, Mr. Signor has an exceptionally well equipped shop for the repair of projectors and related mechanisms.

In the evening, with Thomas H. Sacher as escort, mentor and guide, Friend Daughter, defying the storm, visited, first, Shea's Bailey theatre, where our old friend, K. R. Caldwell, with the assistance of Herbert A. Shipley, shoots forth shadows from a scrupulously clean projection room. The results, both in visual and sound, are reported to be good, and Manager E. Miller reports steadily increasing business.

In Shea's 2,100-seat Seneca theatre, a most interesting chat with Kenneth Cooley, the manager, was enjoyed. Manager Cooley has found that working with women's clubs, which are very active in Buffalo, increases his business considerably. At the time of Friend Daughter's visit the S.R.O. sign was needed.

The Seneca projection room was spotless. Both men were where they belonged—at the projectors. The room itself is 20x40 feet. Russell Cooke, Alfred Botham, Joe Smith and Kennety Cooley are the projectionists.

At Shea's Buffalo theatre Friend Daughter thought she was going to heaven. She and her guide climbed up and up in a lovely theatre much resembling the Paramount in New York City. The entire theatre conveyed the impression that it is very well managed. Everything was clean and in good condition and all attendants on their toes. It is one of the few houses in Buffalo that does not run double features. Manager William Brett asserts there is no real necessity for it, provided care be used in selecting short subjects and features. In fact, he asserted that his audiences prefer a good and shorter show. His business shows a steady upward trend.

After the breath-taking climb Friend Daughter talked with Projectionists Paul H. Graf and George Austin. The other shifts are worked by Thomas Sacher, Antony Christiano, Cecil Franklin, George O'Brien and David Hunter.

The union had taken over the Variety Club rooms for the evening. By midnight well over one hundred exhibitors, theatre managers, exchange managers and projectionists, who had gathered at the club, adjourned next door to one of Buffalo's popular restaurants, where they listened to the discussion of projection matters as set forth by the writer until 3 o'clock a. m. The meeting was presided over by F. C. Taylor, who has charge of projection in all the Buffalo schools. The Niagara Falls men were there in force, and some from other places.

In closing I wish to remark that everywhere our reception has been enthusiastic. Where some proportion of the membership has failed to appear, such absence was to be at least partly charged against terrible weather conditions. It is indeed encouraging that in almost every instance, notwithstanding rain, sleet and snow, projectionists have driven from 40 to 75 miles to attend the meetings. This certainly tends to show that at least a goodly percentage of the men have deep interest in their profession and are eager to do what they can to advance its interests.

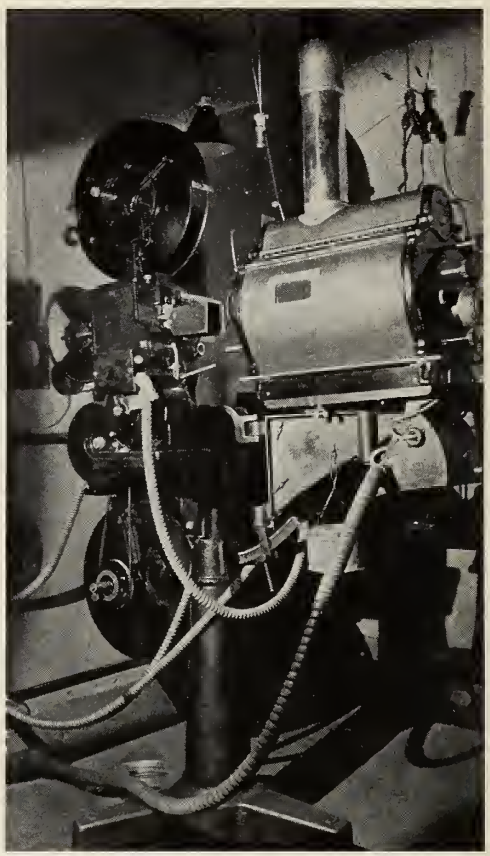
A QUESTIONABLE REMEDY BUT HE SAYS IT WORKS

IN COMMENTING upon La Point's statement on page 40 of the April 4th issue, that he cured a flickering arc by wiping off the end of the carbons after each reel, I said I thought that while that might effect a temporary cure, surely the trouble would return as quickly as the granules of carbon built up again on the carbon, which should be within 300 foot of the beginning of the reel. La Point now comes back:

"The remedy of wiping off the carbon ends after each reel was evolved in desperation after five years of flicker trouble. As a matter of fact, it really works. Here are the facts:

"The generator is a Roth 25-25. Ballast resistors are 110-volt, according to name plates. Generator voltage normally 70, but is operated at 75 volts. Ammeter reads 20 amperes. Both meters rock steady. Commutator shows no sparking at all at capacity. Arc voltage reads 45 at normal operating temperature of equipment. Arc voltage feed is erratic, requiring frequent adjustment. When the carbon (positive) is not wiped off after each reel, the trouble (flickering arc due to particles of carbon flying up into the arc stream) returns. Wiping off the carbon enables us to avoid this trouble for at least a 20-minute run."

Well, that is that, though I can see no reason why the carbon granules should not build up again quickly. But if it works, it works. I would appreciate reports from other projectionists on such troubles.



A snapshot from August Patirchevich, projectionist of the Pastime theatre in Barberton, Ohio, submitted in response to the request for projection room pictures in the April 4th issue. This shows one of the two Simplex projectors, which are equipped with Strong, Jr., low-intensity lamps. The sound system is RCA Photophone. What really is wanted, however, is pictures of entire projection rooms, showing as much of the whole layout as possible. But Patirchevich has obtained a very clear picture, and he has thoughtfully described his procedure in taking it. He used Eastman Super-Sensitive panchromatic film. Exposure time was 100 seconds with f/22 stop. Source of light was the lamp of the other projector, also projection room lights, except those causing glare.

A LITTLE LESSON IN LENS MAKING

WHILE IN THE city of Rochester, N. Y., recently, I visited the plant of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, where, through the courtesy of J. C. Kurtz, one of the directors of the corporation—a man who has spent 38 years of his young life in the science of optics, I was shown through what now seems to me like a land of magic.

Years ago I went through the Bausch & Lomb factory, but I am afraid they held out on me, for I did not see some of the marvelous things we looked at this time. For example, into a furnace, the interior of which was white hot, extended a long iron rod, on the inner, apparently white-hot end of which was a stirrer, a clay dingus that stirs the white-hot glass.

I nearly jumped out of my skin and balked when Mr. Kurtz asked me to touch it; however, after he had done so.

I very cautiously did likewise and found that the rod was actually, not merely cool, but cold. The rod transmits a strong current of cold water, and some chemical deposit, plus the light, makes it appear red hot.

Bausch & Lomb is now turning out about a million lenses a month. In their production is used $27,000 worth of glass, amounting, in cubic measurement, to twenty million feet.

We were taken to where they make the huge clay pots in which the glass is melted. It takes from six to eight months to complete one of these pots, though each is only about 3 feet high by the same diameter. These pots must be built up with clay slowly, a little each day. I saw furnace walls apparently of solid red brick, yet I could run my knife blade clear into the shank without the least trouble or any damage to the sharp blade.

I saw an 8-inch Peerless condenser lens made, and it is an astonishing process. In a little furnace, a chap takes a rough lump of glass, not a plate, but a lump. He manipulates it as it gets hot—not white-hot, but heated until it is plastic. He then dumps the thing into a mold, slaps it under a press, and out comes a condenser lens, though, of course, it must afterwards be annealed and ground.

At one point we saw men cutting glass that was from ¼-inch to ⅛-inch trick. Whackity-whack they went, almost as fast as you could count, yet every cut broke true, and when I asked to look at one of the diamonds, it proved to be nothing but an ordinary glass cutter.

I saw blocks of optical glass as much as 2 inches thick by 6 inches, in lateral dimensions, and when I looked edgewise through that block at an object, and looked at the object along either side of the glass, there was no appreciable difference. It is amazing that glass can be made to provide for such perfect transmission of light.

ADJUSTMENTS FOLLOWING CHANGE IN CURRENT

DICK ALLAIR of the Theatre Victoria in Quebec, asks several questions, as follows: "Am using two Powers 6B projectors, each equipped with a Sunbeam automatic arc system. I believe it is called the Universal in the United States. Use 8x12 National carbons and 15 amperes of current. Projection distance 57 feet. Screen image 13 feet wide, approximately. The power company changed our current from 30 to 60 cycles last fall. Our Garver rectifier is a 30-cycle one. Am using it on the 30-cycle current now and get only 15 amperes on the 30-cycle contact. How could the rectifier be altered to a 60-cycle one? If so, would it render as good service as before the change? Would it alter the steadiness of the output?

"What is the best size lens for these requirements? My hall is a theatre specially built for stage shows years ago. Has 350 seats on the main floor, 160 in balcony, also loges. Due, however, to the balcony floor, the sound is hard to control at the rear of the main floor. We now have it fairly well balanced, however.

"We use Wright-DeCoster speakers with their special horns; also a Racon speaker which is installed in the center of a baffle board 5 feet square by 0.5 of an inch thick. This speaker is in the center of the screen, with the two others connected, one at either side of the screen. These loudspeakers are supplied by a Webster 30-57 amplifier, using two 227's, two 250's and two 281's. This amplifier is antique and I want to change it. It is supplied by the pre-amplifiers, one for each projector, which are marked Sunbeam. Each pre-amplifier uses two 112-A tubes. Both of these tubes and the exciter lamp (7.5-volt) are supplied by two A-batteries of 6-volts each.

"Would it, in your judgment, be worthwhile to discard these pre-amplifiers and install the d. c. exciter lamp supply system advertised in BETTER THEATRES December 14, 1935 issues, keeping the remaining equipment?"

With regard to the carbon matter, you have not advised as to just what particular kind of National carbons you are using and it makes a difference. If you have the sixth edition of my Bluebook you will find in it full information as to amperage limits for all national carbons used for projection. However, I am requesting the National Carbon Company to send you their new booklet, from which you may obtain full data.

Your 30-cycle rectifier will pass only one cycle of 60-cycle current. If you will correspond with the Garver Electric Company, Union City, Ind., the maker of your device, they will advise you as to what can be done to remedy the situation.

As to your lenses, presumably you are asking as to diameters. If you will remove any shield there may be between aperture and lens, project white light as in normal projection and blow smoke into the beam, you may see whether or not all the light enters the lens. If it does the lens of course is of sufficient diameter. If it does not, then you need a new lens of sufficient diameter.

As to the sound equipment, after consultation with Aaron Nadell, who collaborated with me on portions of the Bluebook, it is decided that the following is all the advice that can be offered concerning the sound equipment with the information supplied. In the first place, in order to give intelligent advice on the speakers it will be necessary that I have a rough sketch of the auditorium, with the dimensions thereof.

The amplifier is definitely out of date. A good, modern amplifier should be installed, but unfortunately I can not make recommendations as to different makes. I believe those advertised in BETTER THEATRES will be found to be good equipment.

It is quite permissible to continue to operate the exciter lamps from storage batteries, if desired. B-batteries for the photocell, however, are quite unnecessary if a modern amplifier be installed since it will provide photocell voltage. Many modern amplifiers also provide a. c. for the exciter lamps, though there is advantage in quality if d. c. can be conveniently used.

Rectifiers to supply current (d. c.) for the exciter lamps are also available.

I am glad to give all the help possible in matters of this kind, but in order to answer questions with certainty I must have all the information available, and that is something but very few supply. When asking questions, send every bit of information that can by any possibility apply to the problem.

TECHNICAL EFFORTS NEED CO-ORDINATION

FOR SOME WHILE my good friend, P. A. McGuire, of the International Projector Corporation, has been urging greater co-ordination among the technical agencies of the industry. It is his view that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in particular, and the industry as a whole, should conduct research and experimentation in such a way as to eliminate interference and increase practical results.

Mr. McGuire is 100% correct in this matter. In the past he has done very valuable work, not only for his company, but for the industry in general. At no time, however, has he sprung an idea of larger basic value than the one above set forth. There is too much of one element pulling haw, another pulling gee, still another backing up, and a fourth standing still, when, if properly directed by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, all could pull together.

CALCULATING PROPER WIRE DIAMETER

J. L. MCGUIRE of East St. Louis, Ill., writes, "Can you explain to me the meaning of the terms lamp-foot and ampere-foot? Also, can you give me some reliable formula for calculating proper size of wire for a motor circuit? I have been a silent 'Bluebook School' student for years and believe you me (as you often say) it has taught me a lot."

The term lamp-foot is one at times used by electricians for designing or laying out circuits. It means the use of the current necessary for one 16-c. p. lamp for 1 foot of distance. A circuit feeding, say, ten 16-c. p. lamps at a center 40 feet from the fuse block would be said to have 40x10 or 400 lamp-feet.

An ampere-foot refers to 1 ampere for 1 foot of distance. It is sometimes employed in laying out motor circuits or circuits designed to carry a mixed load.

Concerning a formula for calculating wires for a motor circuit, the following is taken from Volume 3 of Hawkens Electrical guide:

$$\text{Circular mils } \frac{H.P. \times 746 \times D \times 21.6}{E \times L \times K}$$

In which H. P. equals the horsepower of motor, 746 equals watts per h. p., D equals length of circuit fuse block to motor, 21.6 equals ohms resistance per foot (wire all being of one diameter), E equals voltage at motor, L equals drop in percentage of voltage at motor, K equals efficiency of motor expressed as a decimal.

But why go to all that bother? The manufacturer or the motor name plate can advise you as to the amperage it will use. You know the length of the circuit, and using your Bluebook, you can easily calculate exactly the wire diameter that will provide efficient operation.

VISUAL ELEMENTS NEED INSPECTION, TOO!

IN VISITING various theatres I find sound equipment inspected by engineers at stated and often frequent intervals, but that there is seldom any regular inspection of the projection equipment. In fact, some seem to have the idea that if any such inspection be necessary, it should be done by the sound engineer.

Save in theatres where projection is in charge of a highly expert projectionist, a detailed inspection of the projection equipment should be made at least once each month by a projection engineer. Secondly, save in possibly an occasional instance, sound engineers, however expert on sound, are wholly incapable of making proper inspection of the visual elements. True, they could check up on the condition of switches, transformers, etc., but when it comes to projector optical systems, correct lens and mirror diameters, distances, etc., they would fail completely. How would such an engineer proceed to ascertain whether or not the projector gear train was worn too much?

I have many times gone into theatre projection rooms, looked quietly around and observed one or more things needing correction. To cite an example: Some while ago I was in a large New York City theatre in which a man of considerable prominence in projection affairs was in charge. When he cut off projector No. 2, I thought I saw something wrong. Casually I stepped over, took hold of the main or table switch of that projector. To my astonishment the handle cross bar holding the blade ends was so very loose that the switch top wabbled at least a quarter of an inch, which indicated not only loose screws, but a very loose connection at the lower end of the blades. Calling the man, I showed him the switch. He said, "Yes, F. H., that is pretty loose. I meant to tighten it two or three days ago, but forgot it." And that switch must have been used by him and all the other men of the two shifts several times during that time. A good system of reports on equipments and parts has value, but it of course does not and can not possibly reveal things such as this to the director of projection.

Considering the large investment in the average modern projection installation and the large amount of electrical energy consumed, I think such an inspection of visual elements would effect far more than sufficient improvement than it would cost. But the inspector must know his business very thoroughly and must be obliged to make a detailed report on each piece of equipment (other than sound) in the installation, as for example the condition of lenses

ON SELECTING GOOD SOUNDHEADS

FROM THE OWNER of the Delano theatre in Delano, Minn., comes a letter saying, "I intend to buy new soundheads for my theatre, which same is 34 x 70 feet in size. Please advise as to what soundheads you would recommend of the various independent companies; also, what should a good reliable soundhead possess?"

What a good soundhead should possess would depend upon the general design of the head itself in considerable degree. In general I would say it must have a reliable method of insuring the passage of the film sound track in proper position and at an absolutely even, unchanging speed, it should be constructed to require the least amount of maintenance, and, together with the amplification system and speakers, it should be sensitive to the whole frequency range now represented by the sound track.

As to the type of soundhead to buy, there are several independent ones on the market that have very real merit. But obviously it is not possible for me to make recommendations as between different manufactures of equipment. As elsewhere in business today, one is pretty sure of getting what he pays for when he selects consistently advertised equipment. I suggest looking through the advertising columns of, say, the last six issues of BETTER THEATRES and writing the soundhead advertisers therein.

A WAGE POLICY OF QUESTIONABLE SOUNDNESS

SOME YEARS AGO some misguided individual out in Grand Rapids, Mich., during labor trouble, undertook to "put the fear of God" into exhibitors by blowing up some theatres. Whether or not the outrage was ever definitely associated with the union, I do not know, but anyhow the union got credit, with the result that since then all but ten of the 26 theatres in Grand Rapids have refused to employ union men and have pounded down wages and raised hours of labor until, in at least one case, the "projectionist" now works, I am advised, for five dollars a week—plus his board and room! Whether he is required to do the janitor work and post bills in his idle time I cannot say.

Before the trouble and aforesaid outrage, wages averaged $35 per week in Grand Rapids, which might be called fair and decent under the conditions. I am not sure all these houses refuse to employ a man merely because he belongs to the union, but whole sixteen of them refuse to recognize or have any dealings with the union, the net result being that the wage in the larger houses averages $20 per week, with no overtime for the many extra-length shows or for holidays. The hours of duty average from 45 to 50 per week.

Now it is not in my province to discuss wages, except insofar as they are concerned with the welfare of the motion picture industry as a whole.

Unions are a necessity so long as there is no other agency to serve their function. Occasionally some misguided individuals commit an outrage such as occurred in Grand Rapids eight years ago, but such acts cannot justly be blamed upon an entire body of men, and an arbitrary stand against all be maintained for years.

In Grand Rapids is being paid a sum for projection labor that is far below what can reasonably be expected to make the men eager to do the best possible work. In the very nature of things, men working from 45 to 50 hours a week at such work as motion picture projection can not possibly deliver anything but mediocre results, and mediocre results in projection hit in two directions. It tends to reduce the effectiveness of the show, and that in turn tends to reduce patronage. In addition, projectionists are in charge of costly equipment and of an operating process which represents a large portion of the overhead. Lack of skill and conscientiousness can more than nullify any savings in wages.

CONCERNING DRY CELLS AND SHORTS

S. T. LEWENTHALL of Galveston, Tex., writes, "I have had an argument and it is agreed that we turn to you for the right answer. My opponent says that if the terminals of a dry battery be connected by means of a copper wire, such connection will constitute a dead short and the current flow will be unlimited until the battery runs down. I say this is not true. Who is right? Be darned careful, Pop, for we've a bet and I don't want to lose."

You are correct so far as the "short" is concerned, but considerable depends upon the exact meaning of that term. Under the ordinary conception of it, a dead short would result. Under a strict technical interpretation, it would not. In order that I may not be flooded with letters containing arguments pro and con, I shall quote directly from page 41 of "Principles of Radio," by Keith Henney, which volume is considered authoritative:

"Internal Resistance—One might think that an unlimited current would be secured from a battery if it were short-circuited. Such is not the case. A very low-resistance ammeter placed across a dry cell gives a definite reading—it is not unlimited. Something must be in the circuit which has a resistance greater than that of the ammeter or the connections. For example, a new dry cell will deliver about 30 amperes through wires of very low resistance.

"This something which restricts the current is the internal resistance of the cell, which depends upon the construction of the cell, its electrode and electrolyte material, the distance apart of the electrodes and the condition of the cell—whether new or old. The older the cell, the smaller the area of electrode in contact with the electrolyte and the greater the resistance. The current delivered by a cell is equal to its voltage divided by the sum of the external resistance and the internal resistance of the cell."

IS STEEL PLATE FLOOR PERMISSIBLE?

CAL GILLETT, projectionist of the Lyric theatre in Lapeer, Mich., writes, "I find the new Bluebook very helpful and interesting. Have been projecting motion pictures for six years. Take great interest in the work. Just installed new Peerless Magnarc lamps and Simplex rear shutters. Am now in need of advice.

"Due to changes in the balcony, soon to be made, it will be necessary to raise the projectors about 18 inches. The contractor does not wish to use cement because of its weight. He proposes to have a constructional steel company build a frame covered with steel plates, but I fear this will result in vibration. I am therefore applying to you for advice."

There is no reason why a steel frame can not be made perfectly rigid so far as the frame itself is concerned. However, I most decidedly would not care to take the chance of setting the projectors on the plates. If such a frame is made I would advise the constructors to be sure it is sufficiently rigid so that no vibration whatever will be present, and to place under each projector two substantial I-beams extending from front to rear end beam. What depth they must be would depend upon their length. Vibration of even so little as 1/100-inch might result very seriously if it happened to be such as would tend to rock the projector mechanism forward and back.

All that, however, can be taken care of, but there is another matter I am not at all certain of, even after consulting several sound engineers. This is the possibility of oscillation that may affect the sound. I think Friend Gillett would do well to consult with the makers of the sound equipment he is using before approving those steel plates. One sound engineer of high ability is skeptical, another is not. I am.

SCREEN TYPES AND GOOD VISION

WILLIAM P. WILSON, president and general manager of the Lycoming Amusement Company, Williamsport, Pa., writes, "Your various articles are read with a great deal of interest. to have your opinion as to whether we should purchase a plain white, a silver or a gold screen, and any other information you think we should have."

Mr. Wilson has done very well, but like so many others, makes the mistake of not telling the dimensions of the seating space. However, in this case the mistake is not very serious. It is only that if there are aisles along each wall, as presumably there are, it cuts down the length of the front rows by from 6 to a possible 8 feet. The auditorium dimensions have nothing to do with the screen surface. It is wholly a matter of viewing angles.

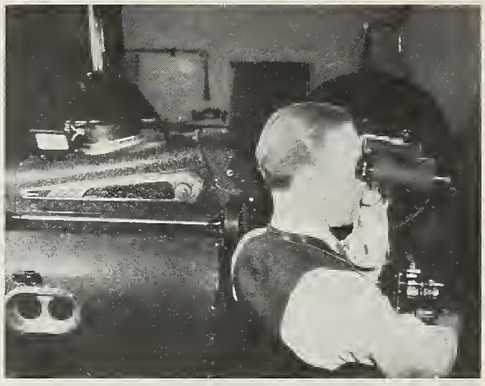
Now, Mr. Wilson, first of all I ask you to do this. As soon as you receive this letter, go to the front row of seats, which are 12 feet away from that huge picture—you say the screen is 26 feet wide, but I presume you mean the screen image is that width. Go down there, stand in the center aisle and walk backward, facing the screen. looking constantly at the screen image. Notice how terribly coarse and dead it looks from front row center. Note how your eyes move around to follow the action of the pictures. Note how it all sharpens up as you walk backward, until finally it becomes a fine picture when you get back 30 or 40 feet from the screen. This should show you that placing the screen at the proscenium arch when you might locate it closer to the rear wall lessens the value of the seats in the front half of your auditorium.

Now, having completed that experiment, go down front and walk to the front end seat on either side. Sit down and examine your screen image. Note the distortion. It is bad enough in the center, but at the farther side it is terrible (yet, I venture the assertion that you make no reduction in price for those seats).

What I would do is this: I would first of all examine Table No. 6, page 150 of my Bluebook of Projection, which would give me basic information as to the reflective characteristics of various standard reflection surfaces, though not of the many more or less specular screens on the market. Next I would examine and study Figure 48, page 151, and its accompanying text, then turn to page 155, examine the drawing thereon with reference to the front end seats. Then, having studied the whole screen subject (pages 146 to 166) and using Figure 49, page 154, I could decide just what the auditorium should have with respect to screen surface.

Considering the balcony and width of seating space, you will need a wide distribution of light. For obvious reasons I can not advise you what make of screen to purchase, but it should be a surface giving wide diffusion.

As to the selection of a screen that will clean well, you will have to use your own judgment. But don't let any salesman tell you that any screen surface, no matter what, can be so cleaned that its reflection powers can be fully restored. That can not be done with anything but glass, and even the glass bead surface is not all glass. Screens may be recoated, and if the job be expertly done, the result should be excellent, though in the process the perforations will inevitably be somewhat reduced; also, recoating is rather costly when the results obtainable are considered.



Checking the definition of the screen image with binoculars—something I have recommended many times. The theatre where the picture was taken is in Los Angeles, but its name, and that of the projectionist, was not included in the information accompanying the photograph. The binoculars are Bausch & Lomb 10x50-mm. Navy glasses, and the projectionist is shown viewing the screen with them while adjusting the focus on the screen.—F.H.R.

Every screen surface should be either cleaned thoroughly or recoated at least once every six months. If you doubt that statement, hang a piece of polished plate glass up in your auditorium for six months, then examine it and I think you will be convinced.

And now, as to size. First, I would locate that screen as far back as possible on the stage. I would reduce the picture size to 20 feet wide. Under no imaginable condition would I have the width more than 22 feet. Twenty feet is plenty. With the smaller size you will be confining the available light to less space and therefore will have a brighter screen, so that the picture details will be just as visible from the rear seats as they now are—perhaps more so—and from the front half of the auditorium the whole thing will be very measurably improved. However, if you make this change, be very certain that your projectionist makes the necessary and right changes in the whole projector optical system.

DRY-SHAPED FILM SPLICE

ALLAN E. HARVEY of Newman, Calif., discusses dry scraping in splicing in a letter recently received. He says:

"In making film splices, a dry scrape is superior to the older method of dampening the emulsion to loosen it from the film base. It now is standard practice in film laboratories and exchanges where splicing machines are used. Special equipment is required, however, for making dry scraped splices; also, a very precise adjustment and manipulation of the scraping tool and some skill is required. The dry scrape is probably unsatisfactory when practiced with a common splicing block unless the one making the splice is very careful.

"However, an improved dry, scraping splicing method can be used in connection with at least one film splicing machine I know of—the Griswold—by altering it somewhat for this purpose. By using the standard 1/10-inch blade in place of the wider blade, and adjusting the two swinging members with washers so that the pins which hold the film are properly spaced and placed with respect to the lower shear blade, an equivalent to the laboratory made SMPE Standard Splice can be made very quickly. The various upper shear blades, cement guard and pressure springs must be refitted by filing out the screw holes to allow them to be moved toward the lower shear blade.

"The splicer should be warmed for quick results either by using the incidental heat from an electric lamp or coiling the heating unit from a household heating pad in the open base of the splicer. The standard scraping blade can be used, but a superior blade can be cut from flat clock-spring stock with snips and inserted in the scraping blade holder.

"In practice, with such a splicer the film is held in the machine as with the standard type, but the splice occurs between the sprocket hole perforations, where it can be scraped dry with the blade without any difficulty. The stub end should not be sheared off before scraping, but the end to be cut away folded down so that it lies between the lower shear blade and the scraper while the emulsion is being removed. After the cement has been applied, the whole left hand assembly is brought down, shearing off the stub and completing the splice. When heated as suggested, such a splicer will set a sound splice in from 10 to 15 seconds, the whole splicing operation taking only about 30 seconds. Of course, no lacquer need be applied, as a 1/64 over-lap allowed by adjusting the cement guard makes the splice noise-proof.

"As required, the scraping blade can be resharpened by grinding or honing on a flat stone for a square edge similarly to sharpening a flat wood scraper."

Friend Harvey has not said he is a projectionist, though I suspect he is one. If so, he apparently studies and goes deeply into matters pertaining to the profession. However, while thanking him cordially for his able discussion of dry scraping, I regret that I must take issue with him on his conclusion that dry scraping may be successfully used in theatre projection rooms. Freely granting it to be superior in every way to the wet scraped splice when properly done, there is the rub. We have a number of projectionists who could and would make perfect dry-scraped splices, but unfortunately we still have a number who do not make even a wet scrape splice any too well. If they were obliged to make dry scraped splices, it would be just too bad, for both the splice itself and general results. The method suggested and well described by Friend Harvey would be an improvement in the hands of careful, very skillful projectionists, but because of the situation as it exists in general, I would fear to recommend it to my readers for general adoption.

viously, we had given our shows in Garberville in a dance hall—flat floor, hard chairs, poor booth, etc. Now we wanted a theatre with a sloping floor, lobby, foyer and everything that goes with it.

RECONSTRUCTION

On borrowed money we went to work constructing a theatre out of the garage building. This was of frame and corrugated iron construction, measuring 36x 65 feet. Of course we had to use the strictest economy, but we finally built a theatre along the lines of what we wanted, with an auditorium having 300 seats.

The floor of the garage building was removed and the ground excavated to permit a sloping floor. We also added 12 feet to the rear of the building, for a stage and a furnace room. We made the stage 24x12 feet and supplied it with a nice curtain, valance, etc.

On the walls and ceiling we put on 6,000 square feet of Firtex (similar to Celotex) treating the auditorium, foyer and rest rooms with the same material. Under the stage we installed a drum stove with a blower in a room built from the sheet metal of the former garage door, and added ducts leading into the theatre.

THE THEATRE IN OPERATION

We opened in August with performances four days a week—one program for Friday and Saturday, another for Sunday and Monday. Before long, however, we went to three changes. Last December we returned to two changes, but in April we went to three again. I do the managing and handle the projection.

The total amount of money required to get the Garberville theatre underway was $4,000. Since then we have added improvements out of receipts (the "we" now refers to me and my mother, Mrs. H. B. Cooke of Palo Alto, who has become my silent partner in the business). The enterprise was known as a big joke among the natives before we proved to them it could be done.

For the seats, we purchased in San Francisco some of the chairs that had been used in the Rialto there, which was then being reseated. We installed 260 spring-edge chairs in the main seating, and 40 reed chairs for loges, which are on a built-up platform. In the aisles, and also in the foyer, we covered the floor with cocoa matting. A small rest room is at each end of the foyer, and an office, 9x12 feet, is at each side of the lobby. The offices were built for renting.

The front of the building was stuccoed. The marquee is of wood, built so that changeable sign letters (which we sawed out of three-ply board) fit into place across the front and sides.

We installed the Syncrofilm portable sound-projectors which we had used for our circuit of one-night stands. They were in good shape, for they had always been handled by yours-truly, who had babied them from the start. However, we purchased a new Clough-Brengle amplifier and a Rola speaker. We now have what we think is very good sound. The projection light is mazda (1,000-watt) and we get fine light with a 70-foot throw.

I found that the most discouraging thing was to have all the people around saying, "It can't be done here."

But at least in Garberville, they were wrong—and I think they now are glad they were.—WILLIAM G. COOKE.

The Application of Rock Wool for Insulation

Three methods for applying rock wool to theatre structures for the purpose of protecting the interior from outside weather conditions, thus reducing plant load in both heating and cooling, are illustrated in these photographs. The value of insulation in general with respect to heating and cooling costs was comprehensively discussed in this department in the April 4th issue.

The picture identified as Figure 1, shows the application of rock wool on the under side of a concrete deck. The wool bats are confined between the roof and a piece of very heavy water-proof paper, and all this is held in place by wire secured to the roof.

In Figure 2 is shown the application of rock wool between the wooden joists of a wooden roof. In principle this is the same as the application to concrete. Naturally it is cheaper with wood.

MAY 11, 1936–Fourth Anniversary of High Fidelity

For four years RCA High Fidelity Sound Equipment has been building box office for theater owners. No date in the entire history of sound motion pictures is of greater importance to you—to pictures themselves—than May 11, 1932, which marks the birth of the most natural, realistic reproduction the theater has ever heard—RCA Photophone High Fidelity Sound.

Amazing sound—made possible with vastly superior equipment, which records and reproduces fundamental tones and practically all overtones as well. These overtones make the different instruments and voices easily distinguishable to your audiences, giving astounding naturalness. Such is the result of improving and coordinating every unit through which sound passes in its course from studio to screen.

This tremendous sound advance is of vital importance to the movies. Not only is perfect tone reproduced, but volume in the theater duplicates volume of the original recording. The loudest tones give no distortion, and background interference has been so reduced that the softest tones are beautifully clear.

Such perfection makes all pictures more lifelike, more thrilling to your audiences—and means greater box office than ever before for users of RCA Photophone High Fidelity Equipment.

THE SWEET BUY & BUY

THE season of the great annual title hunt is upon us. In secret huddles in sales departments in New York and production offices in Hollywood earnest, perplexed and inventive showmen are chewing lead pencils and consulting defunct release lists for inspiration. The product announcements for the new season are in the making and titles, selling handles, for the contemplated output must be had in keeping with the ancient custom of the industry's distribution machinery.

Presently each distributor will emerge with the document issued to salesmen and presented in turn to the exhibitor, known as "the work sheet," which presents in all solemn dignity of type a great hypothesis—the entertaining assumption that, as of the date of issue, everything that the picture makers and distributors are to do and deliver to the exhibitors' screen has been ordained for a year in advance—titles, stories, stars and even supporting casts.

AS every showman knows, on the basis of twenty-odd years of picture buying, titles and stories will become obsolete, outmoded, irrelevant, stars of the day will wane and fade and new stars will arise, in that unending process by which the screen keeps abreast of trends and the whims of public taste, starting even while the work sheets are on the press.

Never-the-less on the basis of the great annual hypothesis deals will be closed and contracts made, in that curious process which is known as selling film. Of course, everyone knows it is not that at all—for what the exhibitor wants and buys is a promise to deliver to him a certain number of units of entertainment of about such and such quality and character in about a certain period or season, which he is led to hope and anticipate will in that period induce quite a number of persons to come and sit in his theatre.

Aside from a decidedly small number of pictures, all of that future product exists nowhere in more tangible form than the title announcements and the raw material of plays, books and stories, about which the producers are holding an anticipatory state of mind—states of mind are subject to change, and have to be if they are minds—plus the array of available talent in contracted writers, producers and players—also subject to every element of change that affects the human relation—plus also the producer's performance record and repute.

OUT of this the exhibitor making season contracts can hope to buy an assured supply of box office material with vastly more certainty than specific pictures, labeled and packaged. In practical effect the operation much more resembles a July deal in September wheat than it does the purchase of a bag of flour or a loaf of bread in its cellophane wrapping.

But the existence of the contract, with its work sheet specifications, as the best instrument for the purpose that distribution has yet evolved in practice, exerts a variety of hampering pressures upon both the buyer and the seller. The picture maker is under compulsion to make the pictures specified, or at least under the titles specified, with the players indicated, regardless of what may have come about affecting box office values in the weeks or months between sale and delivery, and by the same pressure there is compulsion upon the exhibitor to take the specified picture so manufactured regardless of whether the idea so beloved in May looks good in December or not. Performance is always approximate.

OUT of that grows a preponderance of the griefs of film buying and distribution, arguments, "substitution" rows, arbitrations and lawsuits. The situation is a condition of the evolutionary process by which the motion picture has come up from the nickelodeon to dominance of world amusement. It was ever so much simpler when people just went to the movies and the exhibitor just bought film service. Now with the customers buying not movies but shows, with the studios making not programs but productions, both sides of the film buying process are confronted with the problem of a relation that sets up firm assurance and yet permits elasticity to meet the unforeseen and unforeseeable developments of the season.

THE well-being of the whole industry requires that the exhibitor be assured of a continuing supply of screen merchandise of adequate quality. It also requires that in some manner all parties at interest shall be able to take the profits that derive from the exceptional hits and from being able to follow the course of developing trends, inspirations and opportunities, let them arise when and where they may.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Both Win

The Screen Writers Guild and the Motion Picture Producers Association in Hollywood both are congratulating themselves on a "victory;" the Guild, because its members Saturday voted in principle for closed shop proposals, the major producers because many fewer than half the Guild's membership of about 900 voted on the question and because a final decision on amalgamation with the Authors League of America has been deferred for at least three months.

The expected explosion failed to materialize. The Hollywood hullabaloo is reported on page 60.

Giannini-RKO

Dr. A. H. Giannini's Bank of America National Association acquired from the Consolidated Film Industries on Tuesday $975,000 of RKO secured gold notes, constituting a lien on the principal assets of RKO including stock of subsidiary companies. The transaction represents a reduction of the interest rate from 6 per cent to 4 per cent and is in compliance with the reiterated suggestion of Federal Judge William Bondy since early in the RKO receivership proceedings. The notes represent the unpaid balance of an original issue of $6,000,000 given to the Commercial Investment Trust and Chemical Bank and Trust Company July 1, 1931.

New Difficulties

The law's arm this week tightened its grip on theatre lotteries, but regardless, Bank Night distributors the country over started preparations to hold a national convention at Denver in June.

Long Island's Nassau County theatres were notified by District Attorney Martin W. Littleton that Bank Night operations and such are illegal.

Gus Bouzis, of the Rosedale, and Frank Valente, of the Boro theatre, in New York's Bronx County, were arrested and parolled for trial for allegedly conducting lotteries. Leon Schusterman, of the United States theatre, also in the Bronx, pleaded not guilty in another case, and June 2nd was set for his trial, Bronx Magistrate Klapp dismissed a lottery case against Felix Mayer, of the Harris theatre in the Bronx. All of which reflected the extent of District Attorney Foley's campaign to end theatre lotteries.

The Massachusetts legislative proposal to abolish Beano was put over until the next session, while in Lexington, Kentucky, County Judge W. E. Nichols set a court inquiry for this week to determine if frauds have been perpetrated in the awarding of prizes in Bank Night drawings at Lexington theatres. The complaint was made by John E. Elliott, president of the Phoenix Amusement Company, who charged that the name of a winner was known to some of the public as early as 11 a.m. on the morning of the award. There were charges of "fixing" hurled, in which Mrs. J. C. Carrier, the winner of $500, is said to have told the state's attorneys that she was informed the night before that she would be given the prize if she agreed to turn back all but $50.

Double Bill Poll

The fate of the double bill was this week placed in the hands of 80,000,000 American theatregoers, who were asked by Warner Brothers, in a national newspaper poll, to decide the question one way or another for all time. See page 70.

British Studio Costs

That the Departmental Committee on the Cinematograph Films Act in England is going right down to the bottom of things in its study of the business for solution of Quota problem was indicated this week when the Board of Trade asked every studio for details of activities and plans, under a wide variety of data classifications, to provide information for comparisons of conditions before and since the Quota.

Another matter assuming special importance at this time has to do with production costs. Julius Hagen of Twickenham Film Studios came out with a proposal of a three-months' shutdown of all British studios "in order to get sanity into the salary and wage schedule." To which the Association of Cine Technicians retorted that such action would be a declaration of war between producers and employees. The Association suggested that "inflated" costs due to night and Sunday work could be reduced by taking uneconomic phases out of time schedules.

These and other current developments in Great Britain and the Dominions are reviewed by Bruce Allan of the HERALD's London office in the article starting on page 81.

Child Films

While the League of Nation's child welfare committee at Geneva was hearing Dr. Edgar Dale of the Payne Fund pleading for national subsidies to produce and exhibit children's films, thus creating competition to the film industry, Columbia Pictures Corporation was launching a plan designed to meet the demand for youngsters' screen entertainment.

"Happy Hour" is the name Columbia has given a series of short subject units, selected or endorsed by parent and teacher organizations. Forty such programs are offered exhibitors.

Thus Columbia provides an answer for Dr. Dale. What the eminent doctor told the League, and what Columbia is doing, are detailed in the stories starting on page 57.

Plaque Award

To Sid Holland, manager of the Elco theatre at Elkhart, Ind., the Quigley Silver Plaque for outstanding exploitation in March was presented Wednesday by Corbin Patrick, motion picture critic of the Indianapolis Star, at the second annual "Booster Meeting" of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana in Indianapolis. Details will appear next week in the Managers' Round Table.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

The Mailman

Just at the moment when it seems certain that there is nothing new under the sun to engage the attention of Hollywood, a new idea turns up.

This time it is the postal service that has engaged the attention and intrigued the imagination of producers to the extent that a new cycle seems to be under way. Three studios, Columbia, Radio and Universal, have announced stories with postal service backgrounds. In addition, Paramount is making "Wells Fargo," a tale dealing with the romantic days of the pony express.

The blue clad figure bearing the leathern sack of mail down the block twice a day is not a strikingly dramatic figure, at first glance, but behind the postman is an immense organization and a tradition of service that provides plenty of material for screen fare.

Not only is there unusual opportunity for interest and drama in the background; there is an unexcelled opportunity for exploitation, for tales dealing with this department of government will have to win the approval of Postmaster General Farley on technical details. Thus, automatically, the gentleman in charge of selling stamps in local post offices all over the country is available for comment with the attendant publicity so valuable to films of this character.

Booth Problems

Stiffening of the projectionists' licensing system and re-examination of New York City's estimated 5,000 operators is sought by Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, IATSE, while the New York World-Telegram, long watchful of Local 306 affairs, demands that Mayor F. H. LaGuardia take definite action.

City department heads disagree, however, and Commissioner Maurice P. Davidson, whose department has charge of the licensing, pointed out the situation has improved since the last administration.

The New York situation is said to differ only in degree from that in other large cities. The problem, and the remedies proposed, are detailed in the story starting on page 50.

Labor "War"

Throwing the gauge of battle to Allied and Empire State motion picture operators' unions, Local 306, affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, this week broke off merger negotiations and declared the inter-union peace pact at an end. The war is on. See page 51.

New Inquiry

The Sabath Congressional committee will agree on a program of further procedure in its study of the Paramount and RKO reorganization proceedings with the return from Chicago to New York this week of Max D. Steuer, special attorney for the committee, it has been reported.

The committee has been examining principals in the reorganization of both companies under the direction of Murray W. Garsson, director of investigation, who returned from Washington late last week after conferences with Representative A. J. Sabath of Illinois, chairman of the committee. Herbert J. Yates of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., which owns slightly more than $1,000,000 of RKO gold notes secured by the principal assets of the company, was to have testified at a closed hearing late last week, but the hearing was postponed a week because of Mr. Yates' absence from New York.

U Directors

Nine directors of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., were elected at the annual meeting of stockholders in Wilmington, Del., early this week in the offices of the Corporation Trust Company. The first preferred stockholders elected J. Meyer Schine and Willard S. McKay, the second preferred holders elected Robert H. Cochrane, and the common stockholders chose J. Cheever Cowdin, William Freiday, Charles R. Rogers, Budd Rogers, Paul G. Brown and P. D. Cochrane.

Mr. Schine was elected to the board of directors as a preferred stockholders' representative and successor to Simon Klee, who resigned recently as a preferred representative. Other routine business was transacted at the meeting.

The new board will meet shortly for the election of officers.

Salaries

The Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington this week again made public the salaries paid executives of large corporations and among the published list those of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc. The report showed that Herbert J. Yates, president, received a compensation of $75,200 last year, while M. H. Levenstein got $39,180 for legal services and R. I. Puucner, vice-president, was paid $19,986.

Independents

Harry Brandt was reelected president of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of New York City at a meeting Tuesday. Other officers chosen were: First vice-president, Bernard S. Barr; second vice-president, George Rudnick; treasurer, Leon Rosenblatt; secretary, Maurice Brown; sergeant-at-arms, David Schneider; finance committee, L. Myers, John Benas, Al Cooper.

Of 18 nominations for the board of directors, the following 15 were elected: M. L. Fleischman, Hyman Rachmil, S. Rhonheimer, R. Sanders, A. Leff, Jack Hattem, A. Rapf, Leo Brecher, David Weinstock, L. Schiffman, S. W. Lawton, A. Shenk, B. Pear, S. Seelenfreund, J. Rosenblum. Members of the finance committee are also directors.

Mr. Benas, Mr. Hattem and Mr. Rapf were named as a committee to meet with Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, on the trade practice conferences to be resumed next week with the distributors.

The current operators' imbroglio was discussed, and Mr. Brandt told the members of efforts to have Mayor F. H. LaGuardia intercede.

Block Booking

A favorable report on the Pettengill-Neely blockbooking bill will be made to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee by the motion picture subcommittee headed by Senator Neely of West Virginia, it was learned in Washington Wednesday.

The subcommittee met early in the week to determine what to do with the measure and voted to report it favorably. The submission of such a report will bring the matter before the full committee. The committee has not been advised by Chairman Wheeler of Montana as to when the measure will be brought up. The group has no scheduled days for meeting but gathers when called by the chairman.

Trial Set

Argument in the suit of Jacob Smith, Lee Hamlin and other General Theatres Equipment corporation bondholders against the Chase National Bank, National Theatres Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, et al., was scheduled to be heard on Wednesday before the U. S. circuit court of appeals in St. Paul.

64 COMPANIES PROMISE 856 FEATURES FOR 1937

More Than New Concerns in Independent Field Presage Lively Competition; 100 Foreign Films Scheduled for Sale

The producers in Hollywood are now ready to present their distribution affiliates with sufficient tangible evidence of the nature and construction of 1936-37 product programs to enable them to commence bargaining with exhibitors everywhere for a supply in the approaching season.

Some 64 distributors and producer-distributors in Hollywood and New York have already established tentative new-product outlines embracing 856 feature motion pictures, including more than 100 foreign language talkers, for 1936-37.

This optimistic pre-seasonal commitment will be shaved considerably, of course, when the schedules assume the actual, within a few weeks, as salesmen start out from the 32 exchange centers with portfolios for the exhibitors' doorstep.

There will be no appreciable change numerically in the product of large distributors next season, but there is an unusually large expansion of production activities of independent companies with the states right market in view. More than 20 new companies of potential consequence already have made their appearance for 1936-37 activity. Principal among them are Pathe's Grand National Films; Joe Brandt's Italian-talker Nuovo Mondo; the Fenn Kimball-James Love Banner Pictures; Centaur Films, of Walter Kofeldt; I. E. Chadwick has plans, and so has Harry Thomas; Coronet Pictures, of Sherman Krellberg; E. B. Derr's Crescent Pictures; Edison Film, planning shorts only; Fanchon and Marco's Hollywood Pictures; James Harper and Company; John Krimsky; Carl Laemmle, Jr.; Leichter and Hoffberg's Beaumont Pictures; Fanchon Royer's new enterprise, via Mercury Films; National Film, headed by Lawrence W. Fox, Jr.; National Pictures, a Stuart Paton enterprise; Pan American Studios, of M. H. Hoffman, Jr.; Herbert Roesener Enterprises, and, Shubert-Rowland Pictures, among others now forming.

The long series of conferences that have been under way both in New York and Hollywood for the purpose of establishing the nature of the new product commitments are about over, and so are inter-departmental discussions over basic story identities and treatment to be incorporated in the formal announcements due shortly.

There is already at hand much evidence that the approaching season will witness the engagement of both major and independent distributors in the lustiest competition of 20 years to trade early and en bloc with the country's theatre owners.

Within four weeks, since MOTION PICTURE HERALD, on April 4th, reported on the first wholesale new-product activities, some 64 companies have reported considerable advancement both of plans and policies.

Present season's commitments now are in the last stages of production, and in many cases have been actually completed and stand ready for delivery. Virtually all studios are well in advance of 1935-36 schedules and already are engaging in actual production for 1936-37.

A study of the producers' 1936-37 programs in their present form discloses an abundance of color, spotted in the type of product where it is expected to do the most good, unlike the color splurge of 1930 when color was dabbed on promiscuously with disastrous effects. It has taken color these six years to make a substantial comeback, and apparently the technical and commercial sponsors are suggesting the use of discretion. Color, of course, has since been refined. At least two dozen 1936-37 features will be in color.

Too, third dimension, in an early form, will appear for commercialization, Paramount announcing a series of six short subjects, titled "Classics," in both Technicolor and third dimension treatment. Jesse Lasky predicts third dimension's advent.

The use of music will be even further extended next season, taking a new expression as background for a large number of westerns. The schedules already show, too, a continuance of a substantial number of outstanding musical features, based more on old musical successes than on stock backstage themes.

There will be no letdown in short subject availabilities, but, rather, the trend points more to an expansion of schedules.

From the results of a poll among 80,000,000 theatregoers now being conducted by Warner Brothers to determine the fate of dual bills will come a determination of the extent of an enlarged market for shorts.

Longer features will also curtail duals.

Cartoons will be stressed even more next season.

Hollywood, too, concedes an expansion of the western film market.

Sales Policies and Conventions

Equally as important to the exhibitor as the actual source of supply and the nature of the product emanating therefrom, is the manner and method with which the distributor will approach him for the negotiation of the contracts for the right of exhibition. These policies, as is customary, will not become known until they are presented formally to and discussed with the branch managers and salesmen who gather with studio and home office executives for that purpose at the annual sales convention.

Indicating the progress already made by the large companies in advancing 1936-37 selling by at least four weeks ahead of last year, the eight majors and Republic and GB Pictures have determined on the following convention plans, tentatively or otherwise:

COMPANY	CONVENTION DATE	CONVENTION PLACE
Columbia	June	*New York
GB Pictures	May 22-24	New York
MGM	May 11	Chicago
Paramount	June 5	*Chicago
Radio	June 1	New York
Republic	June 5	Chicago
20th Cent.-Fox	May 30	Chicago
United Artists	Undetermined	Undetermined
Universal	June 1-3	New York
Warners	June 1	Los Angeles

* Tentative

The selling season, therefore, is finally back to the pre-depression period insofar as its commencement date is concerned, as gauged by the sales conventions which formally launch selling. Even last year's conventions ran well into July, whereas this season they will all be history before mid-June.

DUALS RETURNING TO B & K NEIGHBORHOODS

Absent for more than three years, double features will return to Balaban & Katz, Chicago neighborhood theatres, within the next few weeks, according to John Balaban. The change in policy is based upon reports from other cities, according to B & K executives, even though the circuit earnings for 1935 were higher than any year in the last five.

All other circuits are strongly opposed to the plan and the independents plan to do all they can to stop it.

Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied Theatres of Illinois, was most emphatic in denouncing the double feature policy. He said, "Our organization will fight the return of double features to the last ditch. We do not want them. The public isn't asking for them and to bring them back to Chicago after so long an absence will be a great harm to theatre men in this vicinity."

Emil Stern of Essaness and James E. Coston of Warner Bros. theatres both called double billing detrimental to exhibitors.

Many along film row think that B & K will not go through with the double feature plan as contracts for this season's product state that the films are for single feature release only. Of this a major distributor said, "If several exchanges grant B & K the right to play their features on dual bills, the other exchanges will fall in line and that will settle the matter."

Exhibitors will learn along about convention time the extent and nature of concessions and revisions which will be effected individually by the distributors in sales policies and methods as a result of the MPTOA's present negotiations with all large companies, except Warners, for establishing a proposed ten-point program of fair trade practices. Specifically involved, all in their relation to the new season, are: cancellation privileges, selling shorts with features, a new form of simplified exhibition contract, non-theatricals, score charges, clearance and zoning, preferred play-dates and such.

That virtually all distributors have been for six weeks quietly negotiating new-season product deals with circuits is generally admitted at the home offices, but in all cases there is a reluctance to discuss tangibilities at this time because of obvious competitive aspects. Paramount is practically the only company to admit the activity.

Detailed product plans of some 64 companies for the approaching season, together with data available to date on policies and personnel, both serving as a guide to the exhibitor in building his source of supply for 1936-37, follow:

Academy Pictures

Edward Halperin's Academy Pictures is understood to have eight features scheduled for 1936-37, to be produced in Hollywood.

Alliance Films

British International Pictures, in London, whose product is released in the United States by Alliance Films Corporation, managed by Budd Rogers, will send 12 films here in 1936-37, out of 24 to be made at Ellstree in England. Alliance disposed of the rights to American distributors.

Ellstree's producing forces have the second half of this season's product now in work, Walter Mycroft, production director, and John Maxwell, chairman, having drawn the full year's schedule following a meeting with the sales forces from which ideas were obtained for selecting the balance of material.

Clarence Elder has been appointed director of studio operations for B.I.P., with Joe Grossman continuing as studio manager.

Amkino Pictures

The Soviet will release in America, through Amkino Pictures, for the balance of this season, some ten feature pictures, as follows: "Seven Brave Men," "Little Nightingale," first in color; "Gypsies," "We Are from Kronstadt," "On the Bank of the Blue Sea," "Anna," by Sergei Eisenstein, and four others. Next season's plans are not known.

Atlantic Pictures

Seven features are said to be scheduled by Bob Savini's Atlantic Pictures, comprising six "thrillers" and James Fenimore Cooper's "Deerslayer."

Banner Pictures

Fenn Kimball and James Love have organized a new producing company, Banner Pictures, which will produce four features, all mysteries, starting with "The Trunk Murder Case," starring Norman Foster, who also is directing, from Harry Hamilton's original.

Buckingham-Capital Productions

Two of Max Schach's features for 1936-37 will star Robert Donat, Mr. Schach's Buckingham-Capital productions releasing through General Film Distributors.

Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures

Ben S. Cohen, president of Burroughs-Tarzan Enterprises, is expected, on his arrival in New York next week, from Hollywood, to announce a 1936-37 schedule of from 18 to 24 features. "Phantom of the Santa Fe," in color, is the latest release this season, and will be brought east by Mr. Cohen, to Harry Rathner, eastern representative.

Centaur Films

Fifty-two short subjects are set for 1936-37 production by the New Centaur Films Company, of which Walter Kofeldt is general sales manager.

Chadwick

I. E. Chadwick is understood to be holding conferences with a group of states right distributors for the purpose of forming a new national producing and distributing company, releasing franchises going to the independent exchange sponsors, some whose names have been mentioned in this connection including "Pop" Korson, Philadelphia; Sam Decker, Detroit; Melvin Hirsch, New York; Nat Schwartz, Cleveland; Phil Smith, Boston; Joseph Skirball,

MANY WESTERNS ARE PROMISED

Pittsburgh; Ben Judells, Chicago; Lee Holdberg, Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis, and Ben Judells, of Chicago.

Mr. Chadwick on his own will produce two features starring Buster Keaton.

Chesterfield-Invincible

George R. Bathcheller, president of Chesterfield Pictures, and Maury Cohen, president of the affiliated Invincible Pictures, announce nine features for each company, both groups to be produced on a higher budget plane.

Their releasing contracts with First Division expire at the end of this season and henceforth both companies will release through other states right exchanges.

Twickenham Productions, Ltd., in London, will distribute in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Batcheller and Mr. Cohen now are in New York arranging for the 1936-37 story and talent sources.

China Roars, Inc.

The new China Roars company, headed by Clyde E. Elliott, in Hollywood, has scheduled a "special" to be produced in 1936-37, in China.

Columbia Pictures

Jack Cohn, vice president of Columbia Pictures, in charge of home office and sales operations, returned to Broadway from 1936-37 product conferences at the studio in Hollywood with his brother Harry.

The company will produce 48 next season, the same as this season, and 16 will be westerns. The sales convention, sometime in June, will be held in New York. Twenty-four two-reelers and 100 singles will also be announced.

Returning to New York with Mr. Cohn were his son, Ralph, and William Lengel, eastern story editor. Richard Aldrich, play editor, returned one week ago.

The Cohns, besides 1936-37 plans, discussed the nature of the balance of this season's commitments to exhibitors.

Ken Maynard this week started on the last of this year's eight westerns, called "Fugitive Sheriff," and it is expected he will star in a similar number next year. Walter Connolly will appear in Columbia pictures throughout the new year, having signed this week to a long term. Dolores Del Rio will star in two pictures per year for three years, starting with 1936-37. Mary Astor has also been contracted to do three next season, and so will Fay Wray, both contracts having been executed this week. A newcomer signed is Caroline Houseman, who came from amateur theatricals. Miss Del Rio will not start until after one picture for Alexander Korda in London, where she now is awaiting that assignment.

Columbia will likely release six features starring Jack Holt, to be produced by Larry Darmour, and this week contracted with Toeplitz Productions in Europe to release their "Beloved Vagabond" in the United States.

Moe, Howard and Larry Fine, billed as "The Three Stooges," were also contracted, to appear in both feature and comedy short subjects. Andy Clyde has been acquired for six short subjects, and El Brendel for two, with an option for four more. Polly Moran will star in a new 1936-37 series of short comedies. Another addition to the studio force is Bill Henry, the publicity writer, who joins Columbia's press agents from Educational.

Mr. Cohen, on arriving in New York, admitted that many of the stories had already been purchased for next season, and titles will be forthcoming shortly, when the company also will announce whether it will produce in England. If such a decision is made the schedule in London will approximate six features for next season's release, principally for quota purposes.

Columbia will also create a source of supply on its own, producing plays on Broadway, where Richard Aldrich, play editor, will put on several productions this fall. Mr. Aldrich now is searching for material.

Henry Mollison will again appear in Columbia features, the company having this week taken up an option.

Meanwhile Columbia, last week, held the first session of a pre-convention sales meeting, in New York, and followed with a second discussion at Kansas City.

Sales Manager Abe Montague presided at New York, where those present included: Jack Cohn, vice president; Abe Schneider, treasurer; Joseph A. McConville, Rube Jackter, Lou Weinberg, Louis Astor, Max Weisfeldt and Leo Jaffe, from the home office executive staff, and the following district managers: Sam Moscow, southern division; Nat Cohn, New York; C. H. Shalit, central; S. A. Galanty, eastern; Max Roth, midwest.

Another meeting will be held in New York in two weeks.

The purpose of the pre-convention meetings is to give the district managers and home office personnel an opportunity to discuss and formulate a sales policy for the new year.

At Kansas City, Max Roth conducted a meeting attended by Harry Taylor, of Kansas City; Ben Marcus, Omaha; Hi Chapman, Minneapolis; Oscar Ruby, Milwaukee; Mel Evidon, Des Moines; Clarence Hill, St. Louis.

Completion of the first unit of a studio expansion plan that has been under way for five months, in Hollywood, was marked this week by the opening of a new four-story building containing players' dressing rooms.

Columbia's present season's short subject program, of 10 series in single reels and 26 two-reelers, is now 80 per cent complete.

Conn-Ambassador-Melody

Maurice Conn has returned to Hollywood from New York after setting 14 features for 1936-37, to be produced through his affiliated companies, as follows: four "Pinky Tomlin" musicals, to be produced by Melody Productions, in association with Coy Poe, who will write songs for the group; six "Sport-O-Stune" productions, sponsored by Conn Pictures Corporation, will star Frankie Darro and Kane Richmond; four James Oliver Curwood stories are set for Ambassador Pictures, with Kermit Maynard starred.

"Racing Blood," fifth Darrow production this season, and "Wildcat Trouper," next Maynard story, now are in work.

Product for the three companies will be produced at Hollywood's Talisman studios, and distribution in some places will go through Mr. Conn's new Chelsea Pictures, and in others arrangements will be made with existing states right exchanges.

Coronet Pictures

The new Coronet Pictures company sponsored by Amusement Securities Corporation, Sherman Krellberg, is proceeding with previously announced plans to make 18 pictures in Montreal next season, for release both in the American and Canadian-British markets. Willam Steiner, president of Coronet, has already completed the first, "From Nine to Nine."

GB EXPANDS DISTRIBUTION PLANS

Crescent Pictures

E. B. Derr returns to active motion picture participation in the new season, through his recently incorporated Crescent Pictures. Immediately scheduled are eight starring Tom Keene, starting with "The Glory Trail," in four weeks, from John T. Neville's original and script. Lynn Shores will direct and Mr. Derr will supervise.

Edison Film

Six single-reel "Stories Behind the Stamps" are planned by the new Edison Film Company.

Fanchon and Marco-Hollywood Pictures

Some $400,000 will be spent on each of the first two of four features to be produced by the new Hollywood Pictures Company of Fanchon and Marco, motion picture theatre stage-and-presentations producers. The stories, both originals, are "Waltz King," by Billy Wilder and Allen Rivkin, and the second, by Mr. Rivkin alone, titled "Dance Congress."

Marco Wolf, president, indicated that arrangements will be attempted for distribution through one of the eight large companies. Associated with him in the new venture is Lester Cowan, and distribution will start early in the fall.

First Division Exchanges

Pathe Exchange's new Grand National Films will liquidate First Division, having purchased Harry Thomas's management contract and his ten per cent interest in the company.

"She-Devil Island," a Mexican drama, has been acquired by First Division for distribution, and with the release of "Southern Maid" and "August Weekend," Alliance and Chesterfield pictures respectively, First Division completes 85 per cent of the regular feature program originally announced at the start of the season. Exclusive of the regular feature releases, four Hoot Gibson westerns have been released for Division Pictures, with four more coming and one "Big Boy" Williams outdoor story for Normandy Pictures, with seven Rex Bells to follow, the initial, "Too Much Beef," being set for release immediately. Also added to the 1935-36 schedule is the Edward Halperin picture, "I Conquer the Sea," featuring Steffi Duna.

Al Friedlander, vice president of First Divisian, has been touring the exchanges in the interest of "Harry Thomas Month," sales drive.

Meanwhile Mr. Thomas is making arrangements to re-enter motion pictures at the head of a new independent distributing company. (See Thomas).

FitzPatrick Pictures

James A. FitzPatrick announced the production of 12 feature pictures for 1936-37, to be released one each month beginning August 15th, as follows: "Auld Lang Syne," based on the life of Scotland's poet, Robert Burns; "Gangway," a sea comedy; "The Bells of St. Mary's"; "The Bard of Avon," based upon the life of Shakespeare; "The Tiller Girls," a musical comedy; "David Livingstone," the life of the African explorer; "The Captain's Table," a mystery murder of the sea; "The Love Dream," from the life and music of Franz Liszt: "Remember When," musical revue; "John Halifax—Gentleman"; "Velvet Fingers," musical from the life and works of Frederick Chopin; and "The Rose of Tralee," a story of Ireland.

Production will be in London, from where Mr. FitzPatrick recently returned after selling Great Britain rights to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the rest of the foreign countries to United Artists, the company withholding American rights.

AMERICAN ACTION FILMS POPULAR WITH GREEKS

American western, and other action type pictures, enjoy the greatest popularity among the theatregoers in Greece, according to a report from Commercial Attache K. L. Rankin at Athens. The report further states that although there is an exceptionally large number of bootblacks in Athens and are frequent customers at picture houses, they are nevertheless unpopular with managers because the boys carry their shoe shining equipment in with them and use their brushes to bang on the floor, seats or anything they can to express their approval or disapproval.

Mr. FitzPatrick will operate under a new corporate setup, FitzPatrick Pictures, Ltd., in England.

Futter

Tom Keene will not appear in features for Walter Futter next season, Judge Leon Yankwich in Federal court in Los Angeles sustaining Mr. Keene's motion to dismiss an injunction obtained by Mr. Futter against the star to prevent him from seeking employment elsewhere. Mr. Keene meanwhile has joined E. B. Derr's new Crescent Pictures.

GB Pictures

Gaumont-British Films will send to America some 24 features in 1936-37, from England, for distribution through its affiliated GB Pictures, as compared with 16 distributed in the United States last year. All will be "A" features, according to Jeffrey Bernerd, head of Gaumont sales in Great Britain, and they will be budgeted accordingly..

Mr. Bernerd admitted that Gaumont has no immediate plans for production in this country, and added that the increase in releases next season is part of "expansion plans of great scope." He will remain here for another three months, attending the American sales convention in May.

Mr. Bernerd denied reports of the resignation of Michael Balcon as production head in London to go with Twentieth Century-Fox Film. His contract has a minimum of two years to run.

Kenneth Hodkinson, head of the San Francisco division, was conferring with George Weeks, sales manager in New York, on expansion plans for distribution in the Hawaiian Islands. Ponce Irmaos, of Rio de Janeiro, has signed a three-year distribution contract with GB in Brazil, starting with "Thirty-nine Steps."

Signed in America for GB parts in London were Sylvia Sidney, borrowed from Walter Wanger for "Sabotage," and Ernest Truex, to appear in a comedy with Cecely Courtneidge. Dwight Taylor, scenarist, has also been signed, and so has Raoul Walsh, director. Miss Sidney sails this week.

Mr. Bernerd said in New York this week that Peter Lorre will appear in another GB picture, and so will Constance Bennett. Both Mr. Lorre and Miss Bennett returned to Broadway the other day from London, accompanied by Berthold Viertel, director, here for a brief visit.

Sonnie Hale, GB comedy player, has been signed to a year's contract to write and direct.

Grand National Distributors

Pathe Exchange, Inc., finally decided to return to active motion picture participation, organizing Grand National Distributors to commence operations with the opening of 1936-37, under the presidency of Edward L. Alperson, and releasing some 30 features. Actual production plans and arrangements for obtaining product from the outside, together with distribution procedure, still must be worked out, although management and financing already have been provided. Grand National had been tentatively called Premier Pictures.

Pathe is liquidating its affiliated First Division Exchanges (See First Division in this compilation), and Harry Thomas's contact has been purchased.

Grand National's distribution will be in charge of both Mr. Alperson and James Davidson, who has been named vice-president.

Guaranteed Pictures

Eight Conway Tearle and six Margaret Morris features will be produced by Mitchell Leichter in 1936-37 for release through Guaranteed Pictures Company, starting September 15th.

Guaranteed had sold the Portugese version of "Through the Centuries" to C. Lopez, for Portugal and its colonies. Negotiations now are pending for disposal of the Spanish rights. English, French and Spanish versions have been made available.

Harper and Company

James H. Harper and Company enters the motion picture producing field with a series of one-reel comic shorts to be known as Ray Knight's "Cuckoo Newsreel," burlesquing the news of the day and release twice monthly on the states right market. Harper and Company for years has been engaged in the commercial motion picture business, and engaged Ray Knight from the radio.

Hirlaman

George Hirlaman will star George O'Brien in six features for 1936-37 distribution, starting with "Valley of the Moon," Jack London's adventure, for release through RKO Radio.

Hoffman-Liberty

M. H. Hoffman, Senior, will produce 30 features in 1936-37, releasing through the recently reorganized Liberty Pictures Company. In addition, he will have available two series of westerns, approximately eight in each.

Mr. Hoffman is now in England to arrange for distribution in Europe and to study the advisability of producing in England. Mr. Hoffman's newest venture will probably also embrace an exchange of product with an English company, with British interests reported interested in the financing.

Hungaria Film

The company's 1936-37 plans to date call for the importation of 12 features from Hungary. Menyhert Szabo is president of Hungaria Film Exchange, headquarters in New York.

Imperial Pictures

William Pizor and Clifford Sanforth have engaged Tim McCoy to appear in eight films in 1936-37 and the same number in the following two seasons, possibly with color.

Krimsky

John Krimsky will produce three features next season, starting with "High Wind in Jamaica."

Laemmle

MGM CONVENTION OPENS MONDAY

Cowdin's new ownership and management, now is considering a continuance of his producing career. United Artists denied a report that he was going with that company. In any event he will produce for 1936-37.

Leichter & Hoffberg-Beaumont Pictures

Mitchell Leichter will participate in 1936-37 activities through a new enterprise in which Jack H. Hoffberg will be associated, producing eight Conway Tearle and six Margaret Morris features, and distributing in the United States through various states right exchanges, and in Europe through Guaranteed Pictures.

Mr. Leichter has returned to Hollywood to start production of the first feature. The Tearle productions will be action melodramas with musical backgrounds, and those starring Miss Morris will be straight action.

Lloyd Productions

Harold Lloyd's company is searching for material for the comedian, who was in New York to make a distribution deal.

Mentone Productions

Next season's Mentone operations will be conducted from a new home office at the RKO Building in Rockefeller Center, the company having moved from the Knickerbocker Building at Times Square.

Mercury

Fanchon Royer will produce six features in 1936-37 for Mercury Film Laboratory interests, delivery starting in August.

Sam Katzman is understood to be set to produce two features next season for Mercury, starting with "Parole," featuring Eddie Nugent and Lucille Lund, from a screenplay by Al Martin, with direction by Robert F. Hill.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Al Lichtman will probably preside at the annual Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales convention, opening May 11th at the Palmer House in Chicago, where sales and production and home office executives will hear the details of 1936-37 program and policies, embracing 51 features. The convention will last four days.

With some 40 out of the announced 49 features already completed this season, the company now is engaged in unprecedented production activities that have necessitated the withdrawal of all studio guest visiting privileges. The new season's plans in Culver City are well in hand, the company having re-signed J. Walter Ruben, director; Stuart Erwin, actor; John Barrymore, actor, re-signed to a long term agreement; Ray Bolger, dancer; May Robson, actress; Albert Persoff, assistant to Lawrence Weingarten; Spencer Tracy, actor; Edmund Lowe, actor; George S. Kaufman, S. N. Behrman, William Slavens McNutt, and J. Ainsworth Morgan, all writers; William Anthony McGuire, director, writer and producer; Seymour Felix, dance director; Al Lewin, associate producer; Franz Waxman, musical director and conductor.

In addition, new contracts have been given to Eleanor Powell, for "Born to Dance" and "Great Guns"; Robert Taylor, to appear with Greta Garbo in "Camille," her first on her return from Sweden; Joseph Calleia, Edmund Lowe and Edith Atwater, players; Maurine Watkins, writer, assigned to "Libeled Lady"; Rupert Santley, to write an original; Joseph Santley, director; Winifred Shotter, player; Sam Marx, associate producer; Jerry Mayer, brother of Louis B. Mayer, as business executive of the John M. Stahl unit; Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby, to write a story for the Marx brothers, and Natalie Jarson, Billie Burke and Jeanette MacDonald, actresses.

Extensive plans for producer Harry Rapf already embrace four stories: "One Man Came Home," "Troubadour Trouble," "Yellowstone or Bust" and "We Went to College."

TRADE CONFERENCES RESUME ON MONDAY

The meetings between the large distributors—except Warner Brothers—and exhibitors of the country, as represented by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to establish fair trade practices and the machinery for creating harmonious relations, will be resumed in New York immediately following the weekend, when Edward L. Kuykendall's MPTOA committee returns to New York to determine the individual attitudes of the distributors on the ten-point platform offered by the exhibitors as a solution to unfair trade practices.

The meetings will be held individually with each distributor, and follow a joint conference three weeks ago at which the entire matter was placed by Mr. Kuykendall's committee before the majors.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's British-made features will be released in the United States, when a new unit is launched shortly in London. Four already are set for production: "Silas Marner," "Wind and the Rain," "The Yank at Oxford" and "Rage in Heaven," all in charge of Ben Goetz, who returned last week to New York from a study of the situation in England. He will confer at the home office with Louis B. Mayer, production general in California, who is making the trip for the purpose.

MGM also will build a film laboratory in London, to handle both outside work and release prints of product from Hollywood for United Kingdom distribution.

Metro's foreign sales department in New York has been enlarged considerably. Arthur M. Loew, in charge, is now in South America.

Nor has the company progressed on 1936-37 features product plans alone, much attention having already been given to the short subject program. Inspired by the reception of "Sequoia," feature released last year, MGM will have a series of short subjects based on wild animal life, Vance Hoyt, naturalist, having completed the story for the first. A new comedy team, Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti, will appear in Hal Roach two-reelers, and Carey Wilson, writer and speaker, will write "Side Streets of Hollywood," a new series for which he will also act as commentator. Jack Chertok will produce the first, "The Extra."

Another new MGM short subject series will be "Milestones of the Theatre," starting with "The Bard of Avon," about Shakespeare. Mr. Roach again will make 12 "Our Gang" comedies. Robert Benchley is set for a series, too, and, in addition, the company also announces a new Benchley film, "How to Cure a Cold"; a one-reel musical, "Song of the Plains"; and a new Ted Healy release, with Peter Smith narrating.

Metro's 1936-37 short subject program will be approximately the same, numerically, as this season, when 93 single and two-reel films will be distributed. It is possible that some will be made in the east.

Louis B. Mayer's party arrived in New York this week from the Culver City studio preparatory to attending the Chicago sales convention, at which a total of 250 will attend from the home office, studio and branch offices in the field, including division and branch managers, salesmen and chief bookers. All sessions will be held at the Palmer House.

Accompanying Mr. Mayer eastward, and continuing with him to Chicago, were Al Lichtman, Howard Strickling and Howard Dietz.

The convention will have special significance in connection with the presentation of William F. Rodgers, formerly eastern sales manager, as the new general sales manager, succeeding the late Felix F. Feist. Also, Thomas Connors and Edward M. Saunders will be officially installed as eastern and western sales managers, respectively.

National Film

National Film Company has been launched in production by Lawrence W. Fox, Jr., who resigned as a vice president and voting trustee of Standard Capital Company, controlled by the J. Cheever Cowdin interests which now own Universal. Mr. Fox, however, will continue as a director of Standard.

The new National company will arrange preliminary financing for "meritorious film enterprises and aid in their development from the initial stages." Offices will be established at first in New York, Hollywood and London, Mr. Fox sailing for England for that purpose on Friday, and also to study the motion picture situation while there.

National Pictures

Stuart Paton has started production on the new National Pictures' "Wings Over San Antonio," at San Antonio, in Texas, and interiors will be done at Universal's studio in California.

Nuovo Mondo Pictures

Joseph Brandt's new Nuovo Mondo Pictures has set 40 Italian talkers for release in 1936-37, 19 of which have already been selected, under a direct arrangement with Benito Mussolini's government at Rome.

Mr. Brandt, working from headquarters at 1270 Sixth Avenue in Rockefeller Center, New York, has been establishing branches at Los Angeles and San Francisco, and has established a distribution channel in New England through Academy. He will be represented in Chicago and Philadelphia, too, followed by the establishment of similar arrangements in Detroit and Cleveland, all through existing independent exchanges.

Pan-American-Hoffman

M. H. Hoffman, Junior, president of the new Pan-American Studios, at Miami, announced a budget of $4,500,000 on 30 features to be produced in Florida for 1936-37 release. The company is reputedly spending $600,000 erecting studio buildings, actual filming starting June 1st, and backed by Florida capital.

Paramount

The annual sales convention will be held June 5th, at a place to be determined, and to be followed by three regional conventions, with a likely schedule of 65 features, the same as this year, and 113 short subjects.

John Edward Otterson, president, returned to the home office at Times Square this week from a series of new-product conferences with studio and home office heads at Hollywood, where the management decided that henceforth "A" pictures will be budgeted at $500,000 and "B" films at $200,000 or less. Attending the conferences in California with Mr. Otterson were Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board; Watterson Rothacker, William Le Baron and Russell Holman. Mr. Zukor returned to New York two weeks ago and left for Hollywood again this week.

"With the exception of four productions, but with the number of specials not yet definitely determined, Paramount will set budgets at $500,000 for 'A' pictures," Mr. Otterson said while in Hollywood. "The figure is elastic, however," he added. "Wherever a picture can be brought to below that cost, this procedure will be encouraged."

In an informal discussion, Mr. Otterson explained that several of the current "B" productions, particularly "Hands Across the Table," had proven better investments than "A's."

The success of "Too Many Parents," the company explained last week, has convinced the management that there is a definite demand for more pictures with youthful players, and several juvenile stories are now under consideration. "Ah, Miss Keane," by Grace Sartwell Mason, already purchased, is the type in mind.

Interrupting pre-seasonal production plans, Paramount reported that its "film rentals continue to reach new high marks—last week's total ran 35 per cent above film rentals at this time last year, thereby setting a record for the past five years," and, it is understood, including some 9,400 accounts.

Of considerable potential effect on Paramount's 1936-37 product is the appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as special advisor. Mr. Kennedy left on Monday for the Hollywood studios where he will make a survey of production activities. He was accompanied westbound by C. J. Scollard, former Pathe vice president, who will be associated with Mr. Kennedy at Paramount.

Watterson E. Rothacker, Paramount studio executive, is due in New York this weekend for a five-day conference at the home office with President Otterson, after which he will sail for a two months' vacation in Europe.

Considerable attention next season will be given to color, producing "Beau Geste" as the first of four in Technicolor already scheduled, and to be released early in the season. Gary Cooper will star in "Beau Geste," and Henry Hathaway will direct.

Three pictures will be produced in the east: "Artists and Models," "Carmen," with Gladys Swarthout, and a third as yet untitled, starting in June, at the company's Astoria studio.

Adolph Zukor has been placed at the head of Paramount production.

Mr. Otterson, on the eve of his departure eastward, was host to producers, directors and department heads of the Hollywood studios, at the Hollywood Athletic Club, where, the company said, "Mr. Otterson expressed satisfaction with the progress being made at the studio and emphasized the permanency of William Le Baron's appointment as production chief in complete charge of pictures, with all producers, directors and executives reporting to him."

Russell Holman, head of the New York story and production department, returned to New York from the Hollywood 1936-37 product conferences, and at the same time announcement was made that Glendon Allvine, former production executive with Radio Pictures, had been appointed head of the studio story board. Richard Diggs, of the editorial board, left on a three-months' leave of absence, traveling to Budapest.

The Hollywood conferences were productive of a general strengthening of the studio's talent roster, and resulted in the ruling that henceforth Paramount will loan stars to other companies only when it can get other stars in return. Studio schedules will be so arranged that it will not be necessary to loan contract players in order to keep them busy.

The studio's contract list is to be built up, and negotiations are now pending for the acquisition of a number of players. In the past month 10 have been signed, bringing the total to 87. The studio also has 69 writers working.

DORED PHOTOGRAPHS RIOTS IN ETHIOPIA

A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News, has received word from the British Embassy that John Dored, cameraman, had abandoned the American Legation in Addis Ababa and taken up a position with the British prior to the rioting following Haile Selassie's leavetaking, from which point of vantage he photographed the end of the war. Mr. Dored had been in Ethiopia seven months and is believed to have been the only newsreel man on the scene at this time.

Jeanne Perkins, junior players' school candidate, was given a new contract, starring with George Raft and Dolores Costello in "Yours for the Asking." Dolores Costello Barrymore, who made her screen comeback in David Selznick's "Little Lord Fauntleroy," has been signed by Paramount.

Marlene Dietrich has signed a new three-picture contract, following her part in Mr. Selznick's "Garden of Allah," for United Artists. Gary Cooper has returned to the studio, starting in "The Texas Ranger," which King Vidor is to direct.

George Hayes has been placed under a contract by Harry Sherman to appear in all of the "Hopalong Cassidy" series which Mr. Sherman produces for Paramount.

Paramount has given Fred MacMurray a new contract, for seven more years. Eddie Welch, writer, and Virginia Van Upp, also a writer, have new contracts, likewise Manny Wolfe, scenario editor, to act as liaison between the unit producers and the contract writers, having charge of all assignments.

Kay Griffith, newcomer, was signed, starting in "The Big Broadcast of 1937," in June. New contracts have also been awarded Nick Lucas, Paul Barrett and Marten Lamont, players.

Paramount has already placed in preparation some 31 scrips for 1936-37, 20 of which were purchased recently. This season's schedule is nearly finished. Two productions were scheduled for 1936-37 for Arthur Hornblow, Jr., to produce: Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell are writing "Legal Holiday," to co-star Claudette Colbert and Gary Cooper, and Julian Street is writing "The Doctor's Wife."

George Arthur, head of the editing department in Hollywood, has been appointed a production supervisor and will make "Hideaway Girl," from David Garth's novel, "Cabin Cruiser."

Paramount caused George Barbier to reconsider retiring, and re-signed him for another seven years, starting with Walter Wanger's "Spendthrift."

LeRoy Prinze, dance director, will also continue with the company next season, producing the dances in "The Big Broadcast of 1937," to be directed by Mitchell Leisen, and to represent the "big" Paramount musical for the year. Mr. Prinze has served the company in the same capacity for several years, arranging choruses and assemblies. Jack Benny will star in "The Big Broadcast," from a script by Erwin Gelsey, Walter DeLeon and Frances Martin, with songs by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin.

Helen Hernandez, writing department clerk, has been elevated to the position of scenarist, and assigned to "Three Married Men." The company has also signed E. A. DuPont director; Purnell Pratt, Marsha Hunt, Leif Erickson and Wolfe Hopper, players; John Boles was signed to star in a feature for next season, and a term contract was given Billy Lee, six-year-old.

Paramount's 1936-37 schedule will not contain any releases from Walter Wanger, who is going over to United Artists, and there is some discussion that Cecil B. DeMille may not continue, but Emanuel Cohen is back with the company and produce eight pictures yearly for three years, starting next season with Mae West's "Personal Appearance," on June 1st, and working at the General Service rental studios in Hollywood. Mr. Cohen's contract calls for the production of four "A" pictures and four "B" pictures by his Major Pictures Company. Bing Crosby is expected to star in one, and so will Gary Cooper. Ben Piazza will be Mr. Cohen's executive assistant.

Mr. Wanger insists that he will join United Artists after this season, despite recurrent Hollywood Boulevard reports that Paramount and Mr. Wanger are discussing a new contract.

Meanwhile nearly half of next season's Paramount pictures will come from independent or unit producers, with the remainder made by the regular studio staff under William LeBaron. There will be eight from Cohen, six from Harry Sherman, four from Frank Lloyd, six from Ernst Lubitsch, with the balance coming from the studio staff of Arthur Hornblow, Benjamin Glazer, Henry Henigson, A. M. Botsford, Lew Gensler, Al Lewis, E. Lloyd Sheldon, Harold Hurley, Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. Mr. Sherman is also discussing the production of four Rex Beach novels, in addition to the scheduled six "Hopalong Cassidys."

Frank Lloyd last week took up his new duties as associate producer following a lengthy vacation in Mexico. William Tummell will serve as Mr. Lloyd's unit manager. The first will be an outdoor story, probably in Technicolor.

Le Garmes will be associate director with Hecht and MacArthur on their next, "The Monster."

Frank Buck will make a straight studio-staged drama for Paramount for 1936-37. The arrangement was made through Grantland Rice and Jack Eaton.

Henry Henigson's first for Paramount will be the Burns and Allen "Hotel Haywire," screen play by Preston Sturges.

Richard Rowland will be assisted by Bert Lytell in the production of two for next season. Paramount has signed Lewis Gensler to a five-year producer's contract, starting with "The Duchess," to star George Raft, followed by "Professional Lady," "The Big Broadcast of 1937," and Bing Crosby's "Beach of Dreams."

Meanwhile Walter Wanger is working to complete his contract with Paramount by June, having two more features to make: "Spendthrift," under the direction of Raoul Walsh and starring Pat Paterson and Henry Fonda, and Anatole Litvak's "Simoon," to star Charles Boyer. He will forego a trip to Europe.

Paramount will distribute 112 single-reel subjects and one two-reel cartoon series in 1936-37, in addition to the news reel, as follows: 12 Popeye cartoons, 12 Betty Boop cartoons, six Screen Song cartoons, 18 Headliners, 13 Grantland Rice Sportlights, 13 Pictorials, 13 Paragraphics and 18 subjects in color: six Musical Romances, six Classics and six Popular Science subjects. The two-reel cartoon will be Popeye.

Fred Waller will produce 51 of the 112 subjects, working entirely in the east, on the Headliners, Pictorials and Paragraphics.

The Musical Romances will again be produced by Robert C. Bruce, in Technicolor, while Lou Diamond, head of the short subject department, will set all details for the entire west coast program when he visits the studios in Hollywood in July. The Color Classic series will be in three-dimension and in Technicolor. Cinecolor will be used on the Popular Sciences.

Pathe

Pathe Exchange, Inc., finally returns to production and distribution, commencing with the 1936-37 season, after lying dormant some five years. As already announced, the company will participate through its recently organized Grand National Films, headed by Edward L. Alperson. (See Grand National).

Stockholders last week re-elected Frank F. Kolbe, president of Pathe, and Robert W. Atkins, executive vice president.

The company is liquidating First Division immediately.

Principal Pictures

Sol Lesser was negotiating in New York for releasing arrangements for 1936-37, when he will have between six and 12 "Whispering Smith" stories, and at least three with "Bobby Breen" characters. In addition, he will make six more for Twentieth Century-Fox, and possibly four for Columbia.

Mr. Lesser has arranged with Hal Horne's Blackston Agency to represent him in New York as publicity and advertising contacts. Mr. Lesser has also appointed Elizabeth Beecher, fiction writer and newspaper woman, to head his story department in Hollywood.

Principal Pictures is doubling this season's feature program, plans having recently been completed at the annual directors' meeting in Hollywood, attended by Mr. Lesser, Louis R. Lurie and Mike Rosenberg.

Three of the six features which Mr. Lesser will produce next season for Twentieth Century-Fox will be based on Harold Bell Wright stories. Mr. Lesser this week signed Richard Arlen to star in them.

Radio Pictures

The tentative determination of a feature schedule of 48 pictures, at least an amount of short subjects equal to this year, and an annual sales convention on June 1st to 3rd in New York, sets RKO Radio well on the road to the completion of program and policy for the new year.

Pre-convention district sales meetings were held some weeks ago to wind up sales effort on the current season and establish new policy for next year. At that time it was indicated that more Class A pictures than heretofore will be in order at the Hollywood studios, where 15 "A" features usually has been the rule. Now the "A's" and the "B's" will be divided about equally, 24 in each group.

Some 30-odd writers are busy at the studios on 28 stories in preparation to complete this season's commitments and launch next year's, under the heaviest writing schedule at RKO in years. Seventy-five per cent of the present group have been delivered to exhibitors, or completed, and sales are presently running 30 per cent ahead of last year.

Strengthening of the 1936-37 feature schedule is progressing. The company will release a series of feature comedies starring Joe E. Brown and produced by David L. Loew's new company. The pact is a term one and goes into effect early in the new season. Mr. Brown is now finishing his long service with Warners-First National. Mr. Loew, son of the founder of the Loew corporation, recently announced plans for independent production, with Joe Brown as his first star. There will probably be six features under the contract with Radio, three in 1936-37 and an equal number in the year following.

B. P. Schulberg, now completing his producing contract with Columbia, has been mentioned in conversations with Radio Pictures in a similar capacity in the new year.

80,000 PASSES HELP VIENNA KEEP ORDER

Eighty thousand free tickets to motion picture theatres were distributed by the Vienna police on May Day, last Friday, to help keep crowds off the streets. This was an extraordinary measure to prevent outbreaks during the annual celebration of Socialists, Communists and Nazis. The holiday passed quietly.

In Mexico City all film and other theatres were closed on Government order in recognition of Labor Day, the strictest of national holidays. Exhibitors' reminders that the pictures were of high educational and recreational value were of no avail. The Government insisted that all film industry employees must have a full holiday to participate in the parades and in the general glorification of the Mexican labor movement. Exhibitors estimated the revenue loss as at least $20,000.

In New York members of Local 306 and Empire State motion picture operators' unions were in the annual May Day parade.

Six features will be produced by George Hirliman with George O'Brien featured for RKO Radio release in 1936-37.

Mr. Hirliman is expected to work the RKO Gower Street lot in Hollywood, or take space at the RKO-Pathe studios. All of the pictures will be outdoor romances, with Jack London's "Valley of the Moon" starting the series.

Radio signed Lew Brown to produce a musical next season, and will probably assign Pandro Berman, Edward Small (Reliance Pictures) and Edward Kaufman to producing most of the Class "A" stories, Mr. Berman leading with a reputed 10-feature assignment. Pioneer Pictures has only one story to do for Radio before switching release to United Artists. Reliance is down for six next year, by the terms of Mr. Small's new associate producership contract. In addition, the company is considering a series of westerns in color.

New talent contracts consummated by the company include those given Fred Stone, Victor Moore and John Beal, players. Charles Collins, young dancer, is another to be contracted. William Powell's new deal provides for but two features annually. Joseph Fields will write for the Lee Marcus unit, while the management has elevated "Parkyakarkas," who is Harry Einstein, from stooging in radio to an exclusive long-term film contract, starting July 12th.

Burgess Meredith will appear in "Winterset" next season, and Irwin Shaw will adapt "The Big Game." Other writers signed include Charles Roberts and Alice D. G. Miller.

New contracts have been given Anne Shirley and Ginger Rogers, RKO and Miss Rogers having adjusted their differences some three weeks ago. She receives a five-year agreement at an increase in salary.

The company promises a "new deal" in trailers next season, increasing the trailer production staff in a series of experiments designed to improve their quality. The experiments were started in March when trailer production was concentrated at the Hollywood studios. National Screen Service will continue to distribute, under a new contract.

Joseph H. Steele has taken up his new duties on Producer Sam Briskin's executive staff. He was formerly with Larry Weingarten at Metro. Lou Lustig continues as Mr. Briskin's assistant.

RKO will not open sales offices in Germany, but will continue to release through channels existing in that country, reported Phil Reisman, export head, the other day. Mr. Reisman surveyed conditions through Europe in their relation to 1936-37 policies.

The principal change in Radio's short subject structure, of course, is the addition of Walt Disney's "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphony" color cartoons and the discontinuance of Amedee Van Beuren's cartoons. In addition, there will henceforth be 13 issues of March of Time, instead of the present 12. Under the new schedule, according to Roy Larsen, producer of the reel for Time Magazine, there will be a release every four weeks, eliminating the five-week schedule.

Republic Pictures

The first full season of Republic Pictures under the Herbert J. Yates administration, W. Ray Johnston, president, and Nat Levine, head of production, will witness the production and distribution of 56 features, at a cost of $6,750,000, as follows: eight "specials," 24 straight feature stories, 20 westerns and four serials. Four are to be made in color.

Republic's national sales convention will be held June 5th and 6th, in Chicago, at the Drake Hotel.

Back from a two-day pre-season conference of studio and home office executives, at Kansas City, Mr. Levine declared the new budget represents an increase of 50 per cent over current production expenditures.

The serials will embrace one in 15 chapters and three in 12 episodes.

Too, "Republic plans to increase its present contract lists by the addition of a number of starring personalities, writers and directors," Mr. Levine said. The company at present has 13 players under contract for starring or featured parts in 1936-37: Marion Talley, Phil Regan, James Dunn, Mae Clarke, Roger Pryor, Donald Cook, Charlotte Henry, Evelyn Venable, Gene Autry, Ray Corrigan, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnette and Lynn Roberts.

The company also plans to develop new writing talent from the magazine field, and announced that Francis M. Cockrell, Cosmopolitan Magazine author, will join the company's staff, which already includes Homery Croy, Nathaniel West and others.

Attending the Kansas City conferences, besides Mr. Johnston and Mr. Levine, were Edward Schnitzer, eastern sales manager; Sam Horowitz, representing the middle west, and J. J. Milstein, newly made vice-president.

The first 1936-37 stories to be definitely set include: "Follow Your Heart," to star Marion Talley; "Two Years Before the Mast," by Richard Henry Dana; "Gangs of New York," by Herbert Ashbury; "The Devil Commands," by Robert Du Soe; an original "Cappy Ricks" story, by Peter B. Kyne; "The Chinese Orange Mystery," by Ellery Queens; "Portia on Trial," by Faith Baldwin; "Without the Net," by Frank R. Adams; "Corpus Delecti," by Allan Vaughan Elston; "William the Second Comes Home," by Owern Francis; "Join the Marines," and an untitled story to star Phil Regan.

Republic will at once conduct a nationwide

Text of Dr. Giannini's Address At Quigley Award Presentation

Following is the complete text of the address of Dr. A. H. Giannini, who presented the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards for outstanding showmanship at a luncheon in Hollywood last Wednesday at which the honored guests were Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia theatres publicist, winner of the Bronze Award, and Lester Pollock, manager of Loew's Rochester at Rochester, N. Y., who won the Quigley Award of Merit. After Jesse L. Lasky, toastmaster, had introduced the speaker as "a man who has given more courage to the motion picture industry, particularly to production heads", Dr. Giannini said:

"I want the boys in the industry to know that I find pleasure in contributing some little help to the industry. I have been in it many years and I've always made it my business to see to it that I would continue that help.

"I am pleased over much to be selected today, and I am pleased, as a Republican, to be listed along with that genial Democrat, Vice-President Garner. I have to hurry away, and yet Mancall and Vogel thought that I ought to say something before making the presentations.

"Vogel asked this question: What is an exhibitor? I'm not going to try to answer that question here impromptu because it would be difficult to give an estimate of what an exhibitor is, but I do know this—that the exhibitor has been instrumental in convincing the theatre owner that he ought to build good theatres and he has succeeded in presenting the story of the picture about to be presented in such a way as would attract a great number of people into the theatre.

Defining the Exhibitor

"Modern man, ladies and gentlemen, sees a little bit more of history in the making than did his more remote ancestors. One may assume, as far as he dares to assume, that centuries ago man did not express the wish, so frequently heard today, that he might add 30 to 50 years to the natural span in order to see what might transpire. In the slow-moving world of generations ago there was no scope for such curiosity, but the great and important changes that have occurred were brought about when men were made to live in different ways and the era of fixity became an era of flux. Now the circumstances that have changed the life of the theatre were many in the last 30 years, and here's where the exhibitor found it necessary to go to the owner and ask for theatres—theatres that were magnificent and splendid temples; theatres that brought fresh comforts to the theatregoers; theatres that outrivaled the temples of old that were dedicated to Olympian deities; theatres that were a worthy home to motion picture production; theatres that challenged the artists and architects in triumph of color and decoration, in hygienic and sanitary surroundings. And here's where the theatre owner insisted that everything of comfort, everything attractive, everything that would enhance the appreciation of the motion picture—or the drama—would be done for the purpose of attracting and making comfortable the visitor to the theatre. That is my very clumsy definition of an exhibitor.

"The old criticisms have happily passed away and the theatre today is a place where one may go to see these fine productions which you men are more familiar with than myself; where you see a portrayal of everything that is beautiful; a portrayal of everything that is fine historically, artistically and every other way; portrayal of the proud, portrayal of the humble, portrayal of the man of wealth and purple; portrayal of the man in rags; portrayal of some romance in the middle ages or of some romance of the ancient days—theatres as they have been run by Mr. Goldberg and Mr. Pollock—theatres where the weary go to rest their burden. Avarice sometimes enters, to be shamed by generous deeds. Here the sorrowful unload their sorrow and the old unload their youth. That's the theatre of today that presents things in an attractive way—things that lift—that make the best of life.

Tribute to Martin Quigley

"The novelist creates imagination; the historian tells of the great of the past; the scientist tells of things scientific; while the theatre brings to the heart and mind the abstractions of the philosopher, reveals great inventions of the things scientists tell you about and also makes you acquainted with the things imagined by the novelist.

"More power to these men who do this good work—and it is a pleasure indeed to present these plaques to these two men.

"Today you have fresh evidence of the pleasant, efficient way in which Martin Quigley and his associates function for the motion picture industry. Martin Quigley has not only met and faithfully discharged his duties as a trade journalist—he has done splendid work. Quigley is a doer—a creator. You have the negative type of man who never habitually originates anything. You have the creative man who is the doer, performer—and Martin Quigley, Red Kann, Terry Ramsaye, Colvin Brown belong to that type of doers, performers. It is wholesome to see these men engaged in this work of encouraging the exhibitor.

"Mr. Goldberg and Mr. Pollock, it is a pleasure to have met you, and I hope that these plaques may occupy a conspicuous place in your home or your theatre, and I hope the memory of this occasion will occupy a conspicuous place in your hearts."

Banking Strong, Says Giannini

Dr. A. H. Giannini, board chairman of the Bank of America N. T. and S. A. and the outstanding financier of independent film efforts, speaking this weekend over a national network of the National Broadcasting Company, said that the major features of the country's banking policy are now truly constructive and that the financial structure rests upon a stronger foundation than at any period within our memory.

"There is more adequate protection for the public, less hazards to the stockholders and a better prospect for success and prosperity in all lines than we have seen for many years," Dr. Giannini said.

"Future generations in surveying the experience of the past and viewing the ruinous effect of lost bank deposits, may well wonder that the apparently wanton disregard of the safety of bank deposits so long persisted," he said. "It is a definite responsibility upon every government chartering of financial institutions to require it to be so conducted that it will be able to meet its obligations. That responsibility is one that should be discharged at all times with honor and without loss to the patrons of the bank. It is no hardship on banks to be compelled to make moderate contributions to a general reserve fund which will insure this result."

Reviewing the banking act and other banking legislation of the last three years, Dr. Giannini added:

"All of these measures are designed to the end that there never may be a repetition of the catastrophe from which we have lately emerged. There are provisions which promise to keep at all times a safe margin of capital back of all of the obligations of every financial institution."

Four Weeks' Music Strike Is Settled

Members of Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, were returning to work this week under closed shop conditions and a standard contract, terminating the strike called April 1 against 92 New York music publishers. The strike was under way more than four weeks. Copyists, arrangers, pianists and others were affected.

Negotiations were carried on by a strike committee headed by William Feinberg, vice-president of the union, and a committee of publishers led by John G. Paine, chairman of the Music Publishers' Protective Association.

Besides union recognition, the terms of the agreement called for an average increase in wages, including weekly and piece work employees, of about 33 per cent. Individual settlements were made during the course of the strike with about 30 independent publishers, and other independents are expected to fall in line.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY AT PARAMOUNT AS SPECIAL ADVISOR; BEGINS SURVEY

Former SEC Chairman Accepts Invitation to Survey Company Problems; Commences Study of Studio Situation

Assumes No Direct Responsibility; Board of Directors Unanimous in Offer; Scollard, Poole, Ford Join Staff

Pursuant to conversations and discussions spanning a period of weeks, Joseph P. Kennedy joined Paramount Pictures, Inc., in an advisory capacity on Friday at the unanimous invitation of the board of directors.

Mr. Kennedy arrived in Hollywood Tuesday to start a survey of the company's affairs which is to form the basis of a report and recommendations to the board. An accounting of production costs also will be made.

Objectives assigned to the former head of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission were defined by the company in a statement issued after special meeting of the board on Friday as follows:

"The board of directors of Paramount has been giving careful consideration to the many serious problems concerning the motion picture industry, especially to those touching upon Paramount in particular. Costs have risen rapidly in the studio and substantial losses have been taken on pictures made since January, 1935.

Made "Special Advisor"

"The board has made a search for a man best equipped to advise the company. Finding that Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy was available, the directors and officers unanimously invited him to become a special advisor for the purpose of making a survey of the situation to report and make recommendations. Mr. Kennedy has accepted and will enter upon his new duties immediately. In his role as advisor, he is assuming no direct responsibility.

"Mr. Kennedy brings a long and varied business experience to the aid of the company. He was for a year and a half chairman of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission from which he recently resigned. Previously he had been a banker and for four years he had an important and personal experience in all activities of the picture business.

"Paramount, after a long and profitable record, underwent reorganization in 1935. On the completion of the reorganization Adolph Zukor was elected chairman of the board and John Otterson was elected president. Both continue in their offices."

Confirming his acceptance of the invitation, Mr. Kennedy said:

"I have seen the statement issued by the Paramount Corporation and there is nothing I need add to it except, perhaps, this: I have been called into the situation by the unanimous vote of the directors and officers to give such help as I may to a company that has a great potentiality but which recently has had rough sledding. How that potentiality can be most fully realized; what lines it should take; what changes, if any, in major policies—these are the questions I shall try to answer in my role, which is equivalent to a committee of survey and policy.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

"I shall take an office in the Paramount building and shall soon go to the coast. How long the engagement will be is undecided; that will be determined by the time required to make my findings. I am assured of the unqualified support of the directors and officers. I shall take up the survey with no preoccupations."

Active Trading in Stocks

News of Mr. Kennedy's affiliation with Paramount circulated swiftly in financial circles and was reflected in animated trading in company stocks." Reported Dow-Jones' Wall Street Journal of Saturday: "The latest developments in Paramount's affairs represents a further step in the company's program to reconstruct a successful film producing unit following its reorganization last year. Wall Street heard during market hours yesterday that Mr. Kennedy would be drafted for the task and its reaction was registered in active demand for Paramount shares. The first preferred ran up 3¼ points to 69¾."

Under a plan of corporate decentralization revealed on Tuesday Adolph Zukor will be placed in executive charge of Paramount production operations. It is indicated that Mr. Zukor, who is chairman of the board of Paramount Productions, Inc., the studio subsidiary, will be elected president, and that John E. Otterson, now president, will become chairman of the board. William Le Baron's position as head of production will not be affected.

Mr. Kennedy's activities in the motion picture industry date from February, 1926, when he was elected president and chairman of the board of FBO, a post he held until December, 1928, when, as chairman of the board of KAO, he consummated the deal whereby RCA took over FBO and KAO, which led to the formation of RKO. On February 15, 1928, he was appointed special advisor of Pathe, which elected him chairman of the board in 1929. He retired from the business in 1933. His most recent connection with the industry was by way of working out a recapitalization plan for RCA, to accomplish which he was retained in an advisory capacity and paid a fee reported as $150,000.

In his operations in behalf of Paramount Mr. Kennedy will have as aides three men associated with him in past phases of his motion picture activity. C. J. Scollard, executive vice-president of Pathe when Mr. Kennedy was chairman of the board, accompanied him on his trip to Hollywood Monday. Arthur B. Poole, who was treasurer of Pathe during his administration, and John Ford, present general manager of the Maine-New Hampshire Theatres circuit, are other members of his staff thus far selected.

Mr. Kennedy's decision to give first attention to the studio affairs of Paramount is in line with general trade expectancy. In the company's financial statement for 1935, which showed a net profit of $3,153,167, out of which $2,500,000 was set up as a special inventory reserve for pictures not released, President John E. Otterson said: "The high cost of pictures made during the period of studio reorganization which had not been released at December 28, 1935, would normally involve a charge against 1936 operations. Inasmuch as the excess costs of these pictures were an incident of the studio reorganization, the directors have set aside out of 1935 profits the sum of $2,500,000 as a special reserve against the picture inventory, absorbing all of such estimated excess cost in 1935 operations rather than spreading it over the active life of the negatives."

Court Reverses Coxe Ruling

Obliquely related to the Paramount situation is a decision handed down by the U. S. circuit court of appeals May 4th reversing Federal Judge C. Coxe, who had disallowed applications of Kuhn, Loeb and Company, former Paramount bankers, and Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swain and Woods, attorneys for the bank, for fees for their services in the Paramount Publix reorganization.

Kuhn, Loeb and Company was awarded $25,000. It had asked $100,000 and its petition had been denied in toto by Judge Coxe. The bank's attorneys had asked fees of $150,000, which Judge Coxe also had denied in toto, and the circuit court awarded them $60,000. Judge Coxe was sustained in his refusal to grant increases in allowances made by him to Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballyntine, counsel for Paramount trustees; Cook, Nathan and Lehman, attorneys for the Paramount stockholders' committee; and Coverdale and Colpitts, industrial engineers, retained by the stockholders.

20TH CENTURY-FOX SESSION MAY 30

talent search, sending scouts the country over for the purpose.

Gene Autry will star in two of the new "specials" and in six musical westerns. No player has been selected as yet for the remaining westerns.

Five features will be placed in work within the next four weeks to complete commitments for this season. These remaining are: "The Gentleman from Louisiana," to be directed by Irving Pichel; "Tickey to Paradise," Aubrey Scotto directing; "Legion of the Lost," by "Ex-Legionnaire 1384"; Gene Stratton-Porter's "Michael O'Halloran," and "Sitting on the Moon," a musical.

There will be a parallel increase in Republic's 1936-37 advertising and exploitation budgets, according to Ray Johnston.

Considerable of the higher production budget will be spent on the production of the specials, eight in number, which the company does not have this year. Also new are the four color westerns.

Richard LaMarr has been signed by Mr. Levine as talent scout; Endre Bohem was assigned to adapt "Gangs of New York," and at the same time the company decided to screen "The President's Mystery Story," the Liberty Magazine serial by Franklin D. Roosevelt, for which six outstanding American writers provided the solution—Rupert Hughes, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Anthony Abbott, Rita Weiman, S. S. Van Dine and John Erskine, each writer contributing a chapter. "Proceeds from the sale of the motion picture rights are to go to the George Warm Springs Foundation for infantile paralysis," said Republic.

B. Reeves Eason has been assigned to direct "Winds of the Wastelands," last of this year's series of John Wayne westerns, the while Tracy Knight will hereafter have charge of all writers on the Republic lot. J. Lawrence Wickland is now supervisor of the serial unit.

Rosener Enterprises

Four features are already in hand for states right distribution, under plans to purchase foreign and "unusual" single features for 1936-37, as undertaken by Herbert Rosener Enterprises, in association with Dave Brill, formerly general sales manager of Principal Pictures. The four new acquisitions are "Amphytrion," a French story for roadshowing, and "You Can't Escape," "Souls for Sale" and "The Shadow."

The company will also conduct theatres in the East and on the Pacific.

Seiden Pictures

Joseph Seiden, one of the first producers of Jewish features, and president of Seiden Pictures, Inc., announced plans for a series of motion picture programs done entirely in Yiddish to be built around six feature Jewish stories to be made this summer, starting with "Love and Sacrifice," directed by George Roland, who will also direct the others. Filming will be indoors at Seiden's own studio, on 60th Street, New York.

Stars of the Yiddish stage will be cast, including Jennie Goldstein, Aaron Lebedeff, Ludwig Satz, Menasha Skulnik, Itzik Feld and Michael Michalesko.

Mr. Seiden will supplement the features with a series of short subjects and "newsreels" in Yiddish.

Shubert-Rowland

A new enterprise to be conducted in England by J. J. Shubert and William Rowland is expected to contribute six musicals, four in Technicolor, in 1936-37, with all filming in London.

Spectrum Pictures

With the completion of "Outlaws of the Range," last of a series of eight westerns starring Bill Cody, Spectrum Pictures Corporation delivered all commitments for this season, to the 27 franchise holders under contract.

TIRED OF BEING TOUGH, CAGNEY WANTS CHANGE

That red-headed, fighting young Irishman, James Cagney who first attracted screen prominence because of his ability to smash a half grapefruit into a young lady's "kisser," is now tired of it all. "It was a novelty, at first, and it startled the people who saw my movies," Mr. Cagney said this week upon arriving in New York for a vacation. "Then it got so they thought I ought to kick the poor girls all over the room and trample on their faces for good measure. Right there is where I said no."

The star further admitted that in hitting women he always pulled his punches for a full-sized wallop might do serious damage. Anyhow, he wants different roles because, as he puts it, "there's too much danger of being typed."

Attention will now be given to 1936-37 plans, probably embracing eight westerns.

Supreme

A. W. Hackel, producer, was due in New York to arrange for independent distribution for Supreme Pictures of a series of Bob Steele features and a second group with Johnny Mack Brown, in 1936-37.

Stage and Screen Productions

Louis Weiss, of Weiss Productions, has completed production on "The Clutching Hand," second of three serials for Stage and Screen Productions for this season, and immediately started preparing "Phantom Island," all being distributed on the states right market by Robert Mintz's Stage and Screen.

The Weiss-Mintz combination in 1936-37 will continue to produce one 15-episode serial every 14 weeks, on a three-a-year basis.

Tapernoux

Further extension of a market for French films in this country will be attempted in 1936-37 by John S. Tapernoux, who, encouraged by the success of "La Maternelle" in the United States, recently returned from Paris with a new line of ten French stories, to be distributed especially to "little" theatres, colleges and so-called "art groups."

The pictures for which Mr. Tapernoux has signed American distribution contracts include Marcel Pagnol productions: "Angele," "Toni" and "Merlusse."

Albert Prejean will be seen in "L'Or Dans La Rue," and Danielle Darrieux will appear in "Mademoiselle Mozart," a musical. Also acquired were "Jeunesse," "La Marmaille" and "Maternite," and the photographic record of the two citreon-Haardt Asia-Africa caravan expeditions, known as "La Croisiere Jaune" and "La Croisiere Noire."

Thomas

Having sold his corporate share and the balance of his service contract in First Division, to Pathe Exchange, which will liquidate the company, Harry Thomas, who founded First Division ten years ago, turned his attention from that structure to a new enterprise. He is expected to take over the distribution for a number of independently-produced features, dispose of their rights to other exchanges and possibly withhold the New Yok franchise for himself.

Twentieth-Century-Fox and Educational

Fifty-two features, the same number of short subjects and a sales convention opening in Chicago on May 30th are the basic plans of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation for 1936-37. Half of the new features have been set.

William Goetz, executive assistant to Darryl Zanuck, production general in California, is now in New York from the Movietone City studio conferring with John D. Clark, general sales manager, and other home office executives, on distribution department attitudes toward new types of material. Both Mr. Zanuck and Mr. Goetz will attend the Chicago convention, leading a large studio delegation, to meet with division and branch sales managers, salesmen and bookers who will be on hand, together with virtually all home office personnel of consequence.

Fox's 1936-37 sales activities are well under way, starting in Europe. More than 100 delegates from 26 countries, exclusive of the United States, were in session in Paris this week, in the corporation's first international sales gathering. President Sidney R. Kent, presiding, was informed there by Benjamin Miggings, European manager, that the French Government has just appoined him to be an officer of the Legion of Honor. Mons. Bigot presented the decoration on behalf of Mons. Flandin, the French foreign minister. It was awarded for Mr. Kent's work in creating good will between France and America.

In charge at the Paris convention, besides Mr. Kent and Mr. Miggings, were Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, from New York; W. J. Hutchinson, foreign manager, and French Managing Director M. Koenig. The meeting closed with a dinner at the Hotel George V, and then Mr. Kent, Mr. Schenck and Mr. Hutchinson flew to London to be present at the British sales convention, from May 7th to 9th, and presided over by F. L. Harley, managing director in the United Kingdom. On its conclusion Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck will sail for New York for home office conferences preparatory to leaving for Chicago and the domestic convention.

While in Paris, Mr. Schenck disclosed that the company will produce ten pictures in England in 1936-37, under supervision of Robert Kane, the first to be "Wings of the Morning," starring Annabelle, under Glenn Tryon's direction. It will be the first all-Technicolor feature to be made in Europe, and for this reason Natalie Kalmus, of Technicolor, is on hand to supervise that work. Production is at London Film's new studios at Denham.

Meanwhile Darryl Zanuck in California rescinded his plans for a partial shutdown of the studios this summer, and canceled a proposed ten-week European vacation, to proceed with full speed ahead during that period, on 24 pictures now in preparation, principally intended for the new season. Already assigned to 1936-37 productions are Sol Wurtzel's designation of John Stone to direct five, as follows: "Public Nuisance No. 1," "Ramona," "Charlie Chan at the Race Track" and two additional, but untitled "Charlie Chan" stories. "Ramona" will be Fox's first Technicolor feature, starting this week, with Loretta Young in the title role.

Six features will be made for Twentieth Century-Fox by Sol Lesser's Principal Pictures, three of them to star Richard Arlen.

Fox has lost John Boles, but at the same time acquired Tyrone Power, Jr., on a long term arrangement, starting on the completion of his stage acting contract in "St. Joan," with Katharine Cornell.

While Earl W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures, was in Paris with Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck attending the international sales convention, his producing units in the States were finishing 1935-36 commitments and proceeding to build a new program, continuing distribution through Twentieth Century-Fox.

Buster West and Tom Patricola, stars in occasional comedies for Educational during the past two years, have been signed on a long-term contract, appearing first in a series of six comedies during 1936-37. The team still has one picture to make under its old agreement, and this subject will be produced by Al Christie at the Astoria studios on Long Island.

Buster Keaton will arrive in New York from Hollywood this month to make the first under his new Educational contract, calling for six comedies.

Educational is expected to again release 110 short subjects through Fox, probably continuing in the form of 52 in two reels and the same number in single.

United Artists

Some 26 to 30 features are understood to be in United Artists' tentative lineup for 1936-37, and although the company has set neither a date nor a place for the annual sales convention, the various independent producing forces which will supply the product had their plans far advanced on several fronts in this country and abroad.

The present policy of individual selling of only so-called Class "A" pictures will continue next season. Any other new policies that will be required are due for settlement sometime between the visit of George J. Schaefer, general sales manager, to the studios in Hollywood, shortly, and the assembling of the field sales forces, probably in June. Mr. Schaefer will set the exact date of the convention during his conferences with the company's producers in California, where he went this week.

He already has completed his first national tour of United Artists' exchanges, during which he held pre-seasonal district meetings at New York, Chicago and Atlanta, determining the status of contracts for the remainder of this season and ascertaining prospective revisions for new sales policies.

All but a handful of 1935-36 features have been completed, and virtually all of the units scheduled for assignments next season are already proceeding on the new projects.

British Cine-Alliance, Ltd., London, will make two pictures for United Artists release in 1936-37, working at Alexander Korda's London Films studios at Denham. British Cine-Alliance is headed by Arnold Pressburger.

Charles Chaplin is expected to produce two, both probably without the comedian in the cast.

Samuel Goldwyn is down for eight: "Come and Get It," by Edna Ferber, starring Edward Arnold, with Virginia Bruce and Francis X. Shields, Mr. Goldwyn's first in the season; "Hurricane," by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, from a screenplay by W. P. Lipscomb, to be made in color in the South Seas; "Dodsworth," by Sinclair Lewis, from a scenario by Sidney Howard, with Walter Huston starring, and Ruth Chatterton supporting; "Princess and the Pauper," by Sam and Bella Spewack, to star Miriam Hopkins; "Dead End," from the Broadway play, and three others.

Mr. Goldwyn has secured Jules Furthman, by arrangement with Irving Thalberg, of MGM, to scenarioize "Come and Get It."

William Wyler will direct "Dodsworth." Another Goldwyn assignment is that of John Balderston to write an original for Merle Oberon for next season, also the appointment of Marguerite Taylor as assistant story editor at Hollywood.

ORGNIZATIONS CHECKING POPULARITY OF DUALS

Following the announcement of Warner's intention to conduct a survey of the country to ascertain the general public's reaction to double features, the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs has signified its intention of cooperating with the film company by polling the members of its hundreds of affiliated organizations. The Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs has announced that questionnaires were being prepared to record the votes of all delegates at the annual convention in Chicago late this month.

Rene Clair will make one feature for United Artists in 1936-37, coming to America from Paris, and working in Hollywood, that is if negotiations now under way are consummated.

The Elisabeth Bergner-Paul Czinner combination in London is another new producer affiliation for United, making as many as they desire in the next five years, on an arrangement to produce at London Films' studio at Denham. Their first three will be Sir James Barrie's "The Boy David"; George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan" and Jack London's "Little Lady of the Big House." Probably two of these will be available to exhibitors next year.

Alexander Korda's London Films will make "Rembrandt," starring Charles Laughton, under Mr. Korda's direction; "I Serve," by A. E. W. Mason, dealing with the life of Queen Elizabeth, with Flora Robson in the title role, Erich Pommer producing, and direction in the hands of William K. Howard, Vincent Korda and L. Meierson; "Lawrence of Arabia," and an undetermined feature to star Merle Oberon, besides others.

The Criterion Films Company of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in London will participate again as a source of supply for United Artists.

Reliance Pictures still has "The Last of the Mohicans" to deliver to United before switching to RKO. Randy Scott is starred in the James Fenimore Cooper classic.

With the presentation this week of the first offering of the new Pickford-Lasky enterprises, a Francis Lederer farce titled "One Rainy Afternoon," these two pioneers are off on program which in the new year will be well represented on United Artists' releasing schedule. Leo Carrillo has been engaged for the second, "Gay Desperado," to star Nino Martini, under Rouben Mamoulian's direction, from an original by Leo Birinski and a screenplay by Wallace Smith. Mr. Carrillo will appear in three subsequent productions for the same unit, and probably Mr. Mamoulian will direct two annually.

Maurice Hanline, back in Hollywood from a visit to Broadway, was studying several story deals for future Pickford-Lasky productions.

John Hay (Jock) Whitney's Pioneer Pictures will have four features for U. A. next season, Mr. Whitney having recently returned from London where he arranged for the production of one of the group in color, at London Films' studio. The remaining three will be made in Hollywood, likewise in color.

Pioneer still has two features under its present contract for distribution through Radio, "Dancing Pirate," now available, and another to be made this summer.

Victor Saville, British director-producer, will independently produce two for United Artists' release, working at the London studio at Denham, starting with "Storm in a Teacup," from James Bridie's play, and followed by "Gentlemen, the King," in Technicolor.

Selznick International Pictures, David O. Selznick, president, and John Hay Whitney, financial participant, will figure prominently in United Artists' schedule next season, starting with "The Garden of Allah," now in work, and starring Marlene Dietrich, and Charles Boyer. Mr. Selznick signed C. Aubrey Smith to a long term, and assigned him to "Allah," along with Basil Rathbone, Joseph Schildkraut, Tilly Losch and Alan Marshal. The production, in Technicolor, is being directed by Richard Boleslawski.

A second Selznick picture will be done in London, at Denham, on arrangements concluded there by Mr. Whitney on his recent trip.

Mr. Selznick has signed James Logan, New York stage director, as a member of his directorial staff, and re-signed Hal Kern, his chief film editor.

Although not formally announced, the understanding on Broadway is that next season will find Walter Wanger among United's producing units, his present releasing arrangement with Paramount concluding this summer. On the other hand, nothing is expected to materialize from the widely circulated reports that Carl Laemmle, Jr., who recently left Universal will produce for U. A.

Universal Pictures

Producing in all probability some 36 features, eight westerns and four serials for 1936-37, the new management of Universal will meet the field forces for the first time at the annual sales convention, starting May 25th, in New York.

The story conferences for next season are completed, the lineup is virtually designated, and, with a new long-term contract in hand as sales manager, James R. Grainger will lead the sales and division managers of the company to New York to hear of the new program.

Charles R. Rogers, in charge of production at Universal City, and William Koenig, general studio manager, will attend. R. H. Cochrane, president, will lead the home office contingent. Mr. Grainger this week rounded out his new sales portfolio for the managers, which will contain an announcement of one of the proposed new season's highlights, a huge musical to be called "Hippodrome," a story concerned with the pageants and productions staged at the New York Hippodrome during the 25 years of R. H. Burnside. Mr. Burnside will assist in production and will work with Garret Fort and Ralph Murphy on the script.

Another musical for next year will be "Everybody Signs," which Lou Brock will produce and Ralph Murphy will direst.

Anatol Litvak was signed to direct "The Phantom of the Opera," for which W. P. Lipscomb will write the screen play.

John Wayne will appear in a series of westerns, while Eddie Buzell has been engaged to direct a comedy drama, by Norma Krasna.

The new J. Cheever Cowdin management at Universal has already commenced to strengthen the talent roster and executive personnel for its effect on 1936-37 product. Thirteen writers were added to the staff of Jerry Sackheim at Universal City, including: A. E. Thomas, now adapting "Love Insurance;" Leonard Praskins, adapting "Roxana"; Humphrey Pearson, on "Time Out of Mind"; Norman Starling, working on an untitled Norma Krasna original; Isabel Dawn and Boyce DeGaw, adapting "Reno in the Fall"; Vera Caspary, on an original; Adele Buffington and Kubec Glasmon, collaborating on "Night Life"; Lillian Barker, writing "Where Are My Children?" and others.

Other writers, already under contract, who have returned to the studio for assignments are Harry Clork, Morris Ryskind, Eric Hatch, Doris Malloy and Samuel Hoffenstein.

William Koenig, general manager, anticipates the signing of 10 additional writers.

Rufus LeMaire is Mr. Rogers' assistant assigned to talent; Betty Roberts, formerly of Radio, has been engaged as western story editor, and Harry C. Evans becomes talent scout. Elsa Neuberger arrived in California to become story head, under Jerry Sackheim's supervision, bringing with her, from the home office, a number of books, plays and advance proofs of forthcoming stories.

Victory Pictures

Eddie Nugent and Maxine Doyle are starring in Victory's "Rio Grande Romance," a Peter B. Kyne story, direction in charge of Robert Hill.

Warner-First National-Vitagraph

With Harry M. Warner, president; Sam Morris, home office executive, and Mervyn LeRoy, producer, converging on New York from a European vacation, and Major Albert Warner, vice-president; A. W. Smith and Gradwell Sears, sales managers, and S. Charles Einfeld, advertising director already in New York from studio conferences, the combined forces of Warner Brothers-First National-Vitagraph-Cosmopolitan productions are about to determine the nature of the 60 features for 1936-37, and plans for the annual convention, beginning June 1st, in Hollywood. Fifty of the 60 features have already been set.

The convention will be the usual Warner "world conference" of sales, theatre, production and advertising staffs of Warner and affiliated companies, including the music publishing subsidiaries.

Business sessions will be held daily at the Hotel Ambassador, and there will also be meetings of the entire delegation at the studios in Burbank. All executives will attend.

"Important new policies of international application will be debated and determined at the conference, which will conclude with a banquet at the Hotel Ambassador," the company declares, with all production, distribution and exhibition executives on hand, together with the company's principal stars.

Already determined is a road-show policy for both "Anthony Adverse" and "Green Pastures," on a two-a-day basis. Other road-showings next season will be "The Charge of the Light Brigade," and a continuance of "Midsummer Night's Dream." It is probable that there will be at least 10 costing $1,000,000 each on the new program.

Major Warner this week announced a "Branch Managers' Contest Week," opening May 24th, to stimulate sales.

Warners have borrowed Clark Gable from Metro for the lead opposite Marion Davies in "Cain and Abel," with Lloyd Bacon directing.

Marie Prevost was signed for the new season, and Louis King joins the company as director.

Max Reinhardt will direct "Danton," with Henry Blanke supervising. Olivia de Haviland, player, is another to receive a new Warner contract.

Frank Craven was signed to act as executive assistant to Bryan Foy, who is in charge of producing Class "B" product, and Macklin Megley, former vaudeville producer, becomes Warners' eastern talent scout.

The roster of the Warner-First National-Cosmopolitan studios now reaches a new high, with 22 stars, 58 featured players, 23 directors, 44 writers and seven associate producers under contract and under Jack Warner's supervision.

In the short field department, Warners may increase the output from the present 52 two-reelers and 78 singles. Cartoons will be raised from 26 to 34, Leon Schlesinger delivering five additional Merrie Melody and three additional Looney-Tune subjects.

Western Pictures

The new Western Pictures of William Fiske, Harry Sherman, Nicholas Ludington and Jack Trop, have 1936-37 product plans well in hand. Mr. Sherman produces the "Hopalong Cassidy" pictures for Paramount.

Benefit Causes Arrest

Because he insisted on showing a benefit picture for tornado sufferers in Georgia, Nat Williams of Thomasville faces two charges of disorderly conduct in connection with the Sunday performance. Despite objections of clergymen and a city council order against showing the picture, the manager opened his house and ran the film until police forcibly closed the theatre. Patrons refused to take their money back, however, and all proceeds will go to the relief fund.

Acquire More Loew Stock

Acquisition in March of 300 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock by Charles C. Moskowitz and 1,412 shares by Arthur M. Loew's holding company has been reported in Washington by the Securities and Exchange Commission. At the close of the month, it was shown, Mr. Moskowitz held 600 shares and the holding company 3,177 shares of Loew's common.

Reorganization Asked

Daniel W. Blumenstock, counsel for a bondholders' protective committee for defaulted Strauss issues, has applied to Justice Church of the supreme court to direct the Continental Bank and Trust Company to prepare a plan of reorganization for the Masque, Royale and Majestic theatres, New York. Decision was reserved.

F.W.C. Will Reopen Three

Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., will reopen three houses soon, following repairs and remodeling. The houses, which have been closed for some time, are the Fox Court, San Bernardino; the Airdrome, El Centro, and the Rose Marie, Ocean Park, all subsequent runs.

Argue on Mickey Mouse Name

The question of whether Walt Disney and his companies can prevent a radio set manufacturer from using the name Mickey Mouse is now before the Federal Trade Marks Commission at Canberra, Australia. The radio makers contend his copyright covers only the design and not the use of the name as a trade mark.

Judges to Reveal AMPA Awards In Three Weeks

Results in the judging of the industry's best advertising production will be disclosed in about three weeks, it was announced Tuesday by Gordon S. White, following partial balloting in the annual awards competition of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

The awards are to be made for "bests" in the division of trade paper advertisements, advertisements addressed to the public, posters and press sheets. All major companies have submitted entries in some division.

Judges, who include trade paper publishers and editors, advertising and newspaper executives, exhibitors, magazine publishers, artists and designers, were grouped according to division. Those judges not present will make their selections later. Meanwhile the individual ballots will be kept secret.

Independents Active In Philadelphia Building

Philadelphia's greatest concerted movement toward new theatre building, particularly among the independents, is being launched this spring, with at least six new theatres in prospect.

The South Philadelphia district will be an important center of activity. Warner plans a 1,000-seat house at Broad and Morris Sts. The Felt interests, which already operate the Southern, plan another house in the same neighborhood. On the west side of South Philadelphia Charles Stiefel is to erect the 1,000-seat President.

West Philadelphia will have the Terminal, to be built and operated jointly by William Goldman and Warners on the site of the new 69th St. Terminal.

Jake Fox will build a house in the near future in northeast Philadelphia, while Erny and Nolan, real estate operators, are planning a theatre in West Oak Lane.

Paramount Transfers Overseas Executives

John W. Hicks, Paramount vice-president in charge of foreign activities, has announced the transfer of L. Foldes, manager of the Budapest office, to Batavia, Java. He is succeeded in Budapest by Dr. N. G. Palukyay, formerly manager in Bucharest, whose place there will be taken by Franz Silver. A. Lichtscheindl, district manager for Austria, Jugoslavia and Roumania, has had Hungary added to his territory.

Rockefeller Center RKO Claim Goes to Court

Negotiations for a settlement of the $9,100,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO have failed after being in progress for more than a year and the claim will be contested in the federal court of New York by the RKO trustee, according to RKO attorneys.

LARGE SAVINGS TO COMPANIES SEEN IN 2,000-FOOT REEL STARTING AUG. 1

Reduction of Costs Cited for Distributors and Greater Facility in Editing for Producers; Outside Diameter 14½ Inches

No Change in Equipment Necessary Except in Possibly 200 or 300 Theatres Having Early Type Powers 6A Projectors

by GEORGE SCHUTZ

The 2,000-foot reel, which will be placed in effect August 1 by at least seven major distributors, and likely thereafter to become standard practice in the industry, will have an outside diameter of 14½ inches, and a hub diameter of four inches so that practically every existing projector is adaptable to the innovation without change of magazine or base.

The new specifications, proposed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in response to a survey of theatres in the United States, have received final approval from the committee representing the distributor members of the MPPDA.

The only dissenting member is Universal, in which organization, however, there is said now to be sentiment, particularly among technicians, for adoption of the larger reel. Independent producers are expected to follow, in at least their editing and processing, the methods indicated for the use of 2,000-foot units.

Distributor Cost Reduced

One persuasive factor operating to make the 2,000-foot reel the new standard unit of film is the reduction in costs to be realized by distributors, and the greater facility in editing permitted the producer. A total of 77 feet of film for leaders and comparable footage will be saved for each eight-reel subject. In addition, a large saving in print replacement is expected due to diminished depreciation of the film, particularly in opening and final footages. William Koenig, chairman of the Research Council, has predicted a total saving to the companies of $250,000 a year, and some later unofficial estimates have placed the saving at two and three times this amount.

Greater facility in editing is achieved by elimination of the necessity to provide for from six to eight changeovers. On an average, only three will be necessary with the 2,000-foot unit in force.

Projectionists Object

In projection, no change in equipment is necessary except in possibly two or three hundred theatres having the early type Powers 6A projectors, which require new magazines and base. Of the 6,900 theatres represented in the survey returns (45.5 per cent of the theatres queried), only 800 reported equipment unsuited to the 15-inch reel, and able to use the 14½ inch unit without equipment changes.

Opposition to the larger reel continues, however, from union projectionists, notably in the larger cities, and resolutions already passed by their locals condemning the change are expected to be echoed at the convention of the IATSE and MPMO in Kansas City in June. What practical effect IA action could have, now that most of the major distributors have finally adopted the change, probably depends on the attitude of state and municipal authorities.

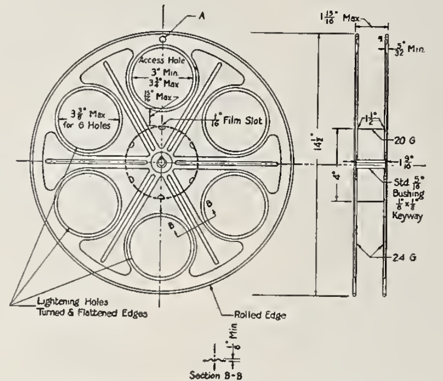

Diagram by the Research Council of the Academy indicating specifications of the Standard 2,000-Foot Reel now finally adopted by MGM, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, RKO, United Artists, Columbia and Warner for all releases beginning August 1, 1936. It is to be constructed of steel, so coated as not to corrode, .025-inch gage for the sides, and .0375-inch gage for the hub. Not shown in the figure are finger holes in the hub, which are now specified.

Union leaders assert that the larger reel increases fire hazard.

Hazard Reduced, Say Distributors

In anticipation of efforts to obtain legislation outlawing the 2,000-foot unit, the distributors' committee already has contended to authorities in various localities that the larger reel reduces fire hazard, and a statement to this effect has been obtained from George W. Booth, chief engineer of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

In addition, the committee has persuaded the committee on hazardous chemicals and explosives of the National Fire Protection Association, to recommend revision of that body's regulations so that use of the 2,000-foot unit is specified among permissible practices.

Where there is a municipal or state law prohibiting use of film units larger than 1,000 feet, as in Massachusetts, theatres will continue to be serviced for 1,000-foot lengths. Although edited for changeovers at approximately 2,000 feet, each print will be marked for suitable changeovers at the shorter lengths. The standard release print practices will be followed for units of both lengths.

Regulations Amended

Some localities with such prohibitions, definitely provided or implied in existing regulations, have amended these so as to permit the 2,000-foot units. Such action has been taken in Portland, Seattle and San Francisco, and is expected in Chicago. In New York fire authorities have indicated that the long reels will be permitted.

The change on August 1 will impose an initial expenditure on distributors of about $12,000 for reels and cases, and the seven subscribing distributors estimate that each will have to spend this amount during the first year. Part of this outlay will be occasioned by physical adjustments in their branch offices.

Specifications, which have now gone to reel and case manufacturers, are the same as those originally established for the construction of reels and cases by the Research Council, except that finger holes in the hub to facilitate handling are now required. The cost of the new reel is expected to be approximately twice that of the 10-inch size, which is 11 cents. The larger cases are expected to cost the distributors about $2 each, or $1.25 more than the smaller case.

Third Revision

The specifications now finally adopted represent a third revision since the Research Council initiated the movement for 2,000-foot units about a year ago, partly as a result of "doubling-up." Originally they called for diameters of 15½ and 5½ inches, which were chosen in order to provide a reel of a weight that would absorb much of the strain on the film at changeover. To reduce the cost of larger reels, these specifications later were reduced to 15 and five, while the date for placing the larger reel into effect was changed from Jan. 1, 1936, to August 1 to provide the added time necessitated by revision.

That the practice of "doubling up" 1,000-foot lengths was widely followed by projectionists has been indicated by the distributors' survey of theatres. Of the 6,900 theatres answering the questionnaires, 4,165 already had adopted 2,000-foot lengths in this manner.

The distributors' committee, sitting in New York, is composed of J. S. MacLeod of MGM, chairman; Harry Mersay and D. J. Smolen of Twentieth Century-Fox; Joseph Brennan and H. C. Kaufman, Columbia; G. Knox Haddow, Paramount; J. P. Skelly and Sid Kramer, RKO; Robert Hilton, United Artists; A. W. Schwalberg and C. C. Ryan, Warner; and O. C. Binder, Universal.

L. W. Fox Quits Standard Capital

Lawrence W. Fox, Jr., has resigned as a vice-president and voting trustee of Standard Capital Company, recent purchasers of Universal Pictures from Carl Laemmle, and will devote his entire time to a new company, National Film Company. The new organization has been formed to engage in film activities other than those of Standard Capital.

The new company will arrange preliminary financing for "meritorious film enterprises and aid in their development from the initial stages." Mr. Fox, however, will continue as a member of the board of directors of Standard Capital.

National Film Company will establish offices or correspondents in New York, Hollywood and London. Mr. Fox will sail on the Berengaria Friday on business for the new company and to study the film situation abroad.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Hal Kemp's story, related to Leonard Lyons, concerns an argument overheard between two persons who were trying to establish the priority of their ancestry.

"My forefathers came over on the Mayflower," haughtily challenged one.

"That's nothing," defended the second, "mine heard the first Amos 'n' Andy program."

Sidney Skolsky visited Warner's studio at Burbank and found Director Michael Curtiz to be an earnest and excitable Hungarian who frequently mixes his English with disastrous effects. Typical was the boiling over and bawling out that he stormed on the head of an assistant who had been sent for a stage prop and returned with the wrong piece. "The next time I send some dumb guy," blasted Curtiz, "I go myself."

One of the most amusing incidents about the American newsreel cameramen's coverage of the Ethiopian situation is the story now being related on Broadway by Truman Talley's Fox Movietonews photographer Len Hammond. Mr. Hammond had accompanied the elaborate and very expensive Fox newsreel crew and truck from New York to Addis Ababa at the outbreak of hostilities. One of the immediately important duties was to ingratiate the crew with Emperor Haile Selassie so that henceforth they could work unmolested by the Ethiopians. The obvious procedure was to have newsreel pictures taken of Selassie.

Came the eventful day. Lights were set up en masse in the palace. Camera tripods were poised and cables no end covered the floors. Entered Emperor Selassie, bedecked in jewels and finery, all prettied in his best. But he sneezed, and, unconsciously, Cameraman Hammond shouted "Saluta," the Italian equivalent of our "good-luck." And that ended that, for recognizing the language of his arch enemy, Mussolini, the King shouted orders to remove, bodily, without cranking a camera, all of the lights and the cables and cameras with cameramen.

Advance publicity on a talker produced in a studio in the shadows of the Pyramids says that the film differs from those previously produced in Egypt, in that "the dialogue has been cut down to essentials and the action has been speeded up."

The result of the innovation will be studied with interest by Hollywood producers.

Ralph Cokain, managing the Indiana theatre at Marion, Indiana, informs us by air mail that "one James Cunningham, who broke jail here, was apprehended in another town and returned," and adds: "I thought of you, and the possibility of a Dr. Jekyll-and-Mr. Hyde existence." Cokain is the correct spelling.

Hollywoodites always are chided for their purple-shirt and pink-automobile eccentricities. But they are not alone, for Concert Conductor Artur Toscanini insists that the Hotel Astor keep two large and live fir trees in the carpeted hallway outside his suite—and he makes 'em put it in writing in the lease. He's a pretty good musician, however.

United Artists' publicity, exploitation and advertising impresarios were seated about the desk of Monroe Greenthal the other afternoon trying, oh, so hard, to think up gags with which to exploit "One Rainy Afternoon"—that's the picture in which Francis Lederer appears. The best idea—which will give you an idea—came from Len Daly, who suggested a tieup with the Post Office on the catchline: "The Lederer Man Always Rings Twice!"

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER on March 28th released a one-reel motion picture about "The Story of the Jonker Diamond," in which the best part purported to show the cutting of the famous 726-carat stone into 20 separate diamonds. Not until one month later, however, on April 27th, was the huge diamond successfully cleaved into three parts. And these will not be cut into smaller stones for another six months. Eventually there will be 12 stones, not 20.

Evidently someone was quite anticipatory, for no one in the world would guarantee in advance, as Metro did, that the diamond in its full size could even be cleaved successfully; not even Lloyd's of London was willing to take the risk of insuring the cleaving. So Metro "scooped" the world a month ahead of the actual consummation of the job. Maybe they should turn the newsreel over to the short subject department. Then we could tell in advance the when and where of the next world war—we wouldn't need H. G. Wells.

As a matter of further fact, Harry Winston, present owner of the $2,000,000 diamond, carried the stone around with him—in his pocket—on Broadway, only a week before it was cleaved. He walked unprotected.

Then, on Monday, April 27th, Lazare Kaplan, diamond cutter in New York, cleaved the diamond as a preliminary to cutting the great stone into smaller ones. He had spent a year studying the stone and preparing for its cutting. It was like a difficult engineering problem and a difficult surgical operation combined. He got ready for the task by going fishing for three days to steady his nerves.

The Jonker is unique in that there is no indication on the surface just where the cleavage planes are, probably because the diamond had lain in a river bed for hundreds of thousands of years, or been submitted to the terrific heat. In cleaving, a V-shaped groove was first made in the direction in which the stone was to be cleaved. A steel wedge was inserted in this groove and one quick blow of a metal rod against the wedge did the trick. Mr. Kaplan's heart stopped pumping for that second, and then he phoned his wife: "Mama, it's a success."

Eventually the 12 stones, the largest of which will be an emerald-shape diamond weighing 165 carats, will form a necklace or a jewelry set to be purchased by one client, for $2,000,000. When completed the stones will be the only modern-cut set of gems from one diamond in the world.

The Jonker diamond was picked up in 1934 by Jacobus Jonker, a South African farmer, in Pretoria. Though only the fourth largest ever found, the Jonker is considered to be the most nearly perfect big diamond.

And then there's Irving Hoffman's tale about the prominent motion picture star in Hollywood who was told she would have to have a double in a certain scene of her new picture.

"Why?" she asked. "Do I have anything dangerous to do in that part?"

"You bet!" enlightened the director. "You'll have to utter a three-syllable word."

One of the behind-the-scenes activities of the United States supreme court that is never witnessed by the motion picture interests frequently appearing before it, is the occasional mellow moment of Justice McReynolds, when he unfolds one of his favorite Scotch stories.

The judge's best one concerns a Scotchman who, leaving a bar one night after considerable imbibing, was approached by a Salvation Army lassie who extended her tambourine and asked for alms.

The Scotchman dropped a shilling into the tray and started to walk away. Then suddenly he turned and asked:

"What are you going to do with that money, my lassie?" What's it for?"

"It is for God."

"For God?" replied the Scotchman, "well, in that case give it back, because, my girl, I expect to see Him before you do."

It was Bill McNutt—Williams Slavens McNutt, writer—who, the other night, upset a strike threat of scenarists and writers at a Screen Writers' Guild meeting in Hollywood by injecting a little commonsense larded with satire into the proceedings.

The writers who were assembled, so Whitney Bolton tells us, had been getting red in the face sputtering over "injustices" inflicted by the producers. Bill is a member of the Guild, but the manner in which his colleagues were straying annoyed him.

"Boys," he said, "as I look around me I see many successful screen writers. Some of you are getting a thousand a week, some fifteen hundred, a few as much as two thousand. Some of you boys used to get $85 a week as reporters in New York, and still would be if you hadn't been invited to come out here.

"I've heard a lot of strike talk here tonight. All right, if you want to strike, then strike. But don't leave the little fellow in the lurch. It breaks my heart to report it, but some of the boys are only making five, six or seven hundred a week. The poor underdogs, only half a thousand a week—What are you going to do about them?"

Motion picture executives, their lieutenants, aides, stooges, clerks, office boys and elevator operators can once again smile happily, look unworried and proceed normally with the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion picture entertainment to American millions every week. The reason?—all Kentucky colonels and Kentucky admirals whose status has been in question were restored to good standing, reinstated by Acting Governor James Wise at Frankfort, Ky. Chief Kentucky Colonel Charlie Pettijohn had us worried there for a while. We thought he'd up and do something drastic when word came from Kentucky, last January, that the Kentucky colonels were no longer entitled to their titles.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Dancing Pirate

(Radio-Pioneer)

Romantic Drama

Exceptional novelty attached to this forthcoming feature is that it is the first full length music and dance tinged romance drama to be filmed in Technicolor. Both previous Technicolor full lengthers, "Becky Sharp" and "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," were primarily dramatic and consequently comparatively slow moving. "Dancing Pirate" has speed for its essence. It is anticipated that color processing will demonstrate its efficiency to catch fast movement in this production to the same popular and commercial results as the other two succeeded in their embellishment of dramatic quality.

Locale and time of the story are early California in the Spanish occupation days. A Boston dancing master is believed to be a pirate and is sentenced to be hanged. The Alcalde's daughter learns of his accomplishments; she wants to learn to dance. Time after time, as romantic love interest grows apace, the execution is delayed. Finally, with an interim of much music, dancing and comedy, real pirates appear, but the dancing master leads the community in defeating them and proving his own identity.

The story is based on a popular magazine yarn of a few years ago. The screen play is by Francis Faragoh and Ray Harris with adaptation by Jack Wagner and Boris Ingster. Direction is by Lloyd Corrigan.

A newcomer, Charles Collins, an accomplished dancer and a promising personality, received his theatrical training on the stages of New York and London. He shares the lead with Steffi Duna. Frank Morgan, currently outstanding in "Zeigfeld," is the third principal as the girl's father and the Alcalde, who insists that Collins be hanged. Other players of note who will be seen are Luis Alberni, Victor Varconi, Jack LaRue, William V. Mong, Mitchell Lewis, Julian Rivero and Alma Real. The Royal Cansino family is presented in spectacular dance sequences and additionally there are scores of singing and dancing chorus girls and boys.

Parole

(Universal)

Drama

Though this story has a sustaining love interest quality, it essentially is a drama of the convict parole system, an important and topical subject currently the object of much attention on the part of newspapers, clergymen, welfare leaders and other opinion makers in any community. In it an effort is being made to provide something substantial to create interest on the part of audiences and desire on the part of exhibitors that gets away from prosaic routine. With one central group, it really tells two stories; the difficulties encountered by paroled prisoners in reestablishing themselves in the modern social and business world, and the dangers and hazards to which they are subjected by incorrigible criminals who endeavor to use them to keep the heat away from themselves as they continue their law defying careers.

As it reads, the story has definite dramatic power together with romantic love interest, both of which are blended in such a way that while the picture presumably will have a high thrill action atmosphere it also will possess a sympathetic emotion stirring vein with human interest for its keynote.

When the picture appears on the screen it will present two new players, Henry Hunter and Ann Preston. Both have a training that should insure their success in films; Hunter is a protege of the New York City Theatre Guild School and Miss Preston a product of the Institute Players of Chicago. The young players are supported by a group of well known screen personalities, including Alan Dinehart, Grant Mitchell, Alan Hale, Berton Churchill, Alan Baxter, Charles Richman, Noah Beery, Jr., Christian Rubb and Frank McGlynn.

The production, which is being directed by Louis Landers, maker of "The Raven" and "Stormy," is an original screen play by Kubec Glasmon, Joel Sayre and Horace McCoy.

Girl of the Ozarks

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

Virginia Weidler, who has scored in supporting parts in many pictures, will be given her first leading woman opportunity in this. As the title indicates, it is a mountain story. A story of a youngster who has more spirit than sweetness, one who can lie and falsificate quicker than she can do anything else and at the same time get quite a bit of fun out of it, it probably is the first time that a straight character part has been prepared for a child actress. Most of the story concerns the youngster, her pranks and antics, her flea-bitten dog and her rooting-tooting, quick shooting mountain grandmother. They are her only friends until a pair of mountain sweethearts enter the story, and the sweetness of the mischievous youngster has an effective part in bringing about the conclusion of their romance as it should be concluded.

The story on which the production is based is by Maurine Babb, John Bright and Robert Tasker, with screen play credited to Stuart Anthony and Michael L. Simmons. It is being directed by William Shea, long time assistant, who is getting his first chance at making a picture on his own responsibility.

While little Miss Weidler can be considered a veteran performer, having appeared in almost a score of pictures, principals in the cast, with the exception of Henrietta Crossman who plays the role of granmaw, are practically all new or unfamiliar players. The young lovers are the newcomers Lief Ericson and Elizabeth Russell. Others who will be seen in type character and atmospheric roles are Janet Young, Russell Simpson, Nora Cecil, Lois Kent, Lois Mason and Arthur Aylesworth.

Fury

(MGM)

Drama

This story is meaty drama. It's sensational stuff in content that calls for equally sensational methods in its selling. It's a story of a man and a woman, but, more to the point, it is the story of a man and a mob, a man who would sacrifice everything for vengeance. Falsely arrested on the eve of his wedding on the charge of being the perpetrator of a heinous crime, he is jailed. A mob bent on lynching him, blood lust overpowering its reason, sacks and burns the jail. Their victim is presumed to have perished in the flames, but he lives, and he lives for one thing: that the members of the mob shall be brought to justice. While he hides in secret, forcing his friends to carry on the fight he has planned, newsreels taken upon the occasion of the jail raid reveal the identities of the mob's leaders. Only when they stand at the bar ready to pay the price of their fury, does the man who was supposed to be dead reveal himself in response to the pleas of love and justice to deliver a philippic against the folly of mob violence.

The story is an original by Norman Krasna recently a contributor to "Wife vs. Secretary," "Hands Across the Table" and author of "Four Hours to Kill." The screen play is by Bartlett Cormack and Fritz Lang, and Lang, whose "M" is quite vividly remembered, is directing.

Spencer Tracy plays the principal role in what promises to be the most dynamic character of his career. Sylvia Sidney is the girl and the supporting cast is far better in caliber than usual for this kind of attraction. Included are Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot, Edward Ellis, Walter Brennan, George Walcott, Frank Albertson, Morgan Wallace, Edwin Maxwell, Jonathan Hale, Leila Bennett, Esther Dale and Helen Flint.

Poppy

(Paramount)

Comedy

In this forthcoming production, its star, W. C. Fields, is given more opportunity to display his fun-making talents personally than has been his fortune in previous productions. Though he's the hero of the story, which in character is comedy itself as it depicts the manner in which an old trouper braves the perils and pitfalls of a lifetime in the theatre and carnival eventually to be fittingly rewarded with a proportionate share of the world's goods, the production is one in which Fields is the juggling magician again. He juggles, balances, does shell card game tricks, performs many feats of legerdemain and ventriloquism.

With Fields in the lead, the supporting cast contains many names that are of more than average box office value. Rochelle Hudson and Richard Cromwell carry the accompanying love interest and romance vein. As the list of other players is studied and Lynne Overman, Catherine Doucet, Rosalind Keith, Maude Eburne, Granville Bates, Dewey Robinson, Tom Kennedy and the late Tammany Young are noted therein, it becomes evident that there is an exploitation value in cast assignments fully worthy of the prominence of the star.

Most of the action takes place in a traveling carnival. Fields just manages to become a member of it. Subsequently he becomes its leading attraction, not solely because of the contributions he makes to its entertainment, but by the manner in which he comes into a fortune to be lauded and acclaimed by citizens of the small town in which the stroke of good luck befalls him.

Based on an original screen play by Waldemar Young, Virginia Van Upp and Bobby Vernon, direction is by Edward A. Sutherland.

Under Two Flags

(20th Century-Fox)

Dramatic Romance

This is a thrill action dramatic romantic story of the French Foreign Legion in Africa. Audiences will find much in it that is entertaining. Showmen will find plenty of effective angles with which to market it. Colorful as the Legion is colorful and so produced that the full value of that element is really the motivating force, the story it tells is narrated with bold vivid strokes. The drama of the dangers to which the Legionnaires are subject, with their companionate heroism and sacrifice, makes an alluring feature. Though sometimes grim, it forms a solid basis for the multi-phased drama of love, jealousy and sacrifice which is the picture's spirit. Its exploitation value is the entertainment worth of that combination, to which must be added the commercial worth of the featured players, Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen and Rosalind Russell.

In atmosphere of dangerous adventure, Cigarette, darling of the Legion, falls in love with Brett, highborn English soldier. The exotic girl's infatuation for the Corporal arouses the jealous fury of Major Doyle, who considers Cigarette his personal property. Time after time, Doyle sends Brett on hazardous missions hoping he never will come back. Brett meets and falls in love with the titled Lady Cunningham. Their romance is as idyllic as Cigarette's love dream is volcanic. Arabs revolt. The battalions set out to quell it. Brett's detachment is decimated; the fanatics menace the safety of the entire force. As Brett, disguised as a tribesman, temporarizes with Sidi-Ben Youssiff, Lady Cunningham pleads with Cigarette to save Brett's life. The clash between two women who love the same man is high drama. As the call of humanity prevails over passionate greed, Cigarette rides into the desert. Coming upon the embattled legions, she realizes the hopelessness of their predicament. Riding across the wild desert she contacts an approaching reinforcing column. Leading it into the heat of battle, she is wounded. Before she dies in Brett's arms, she tells him that she is saving him for another woman whose love is greater than hers.

The conflict between Colman and McLaglen, the drama in the situation that makes the voluptuous Claudette Colbert and the polished Rosalind Russell rivals in a battle for a man's affections, the disillusionment that comes into Cigarette's heart when Colman evidences his preference for another, and the triumph of her sacrifice are drama to a high degree, capable in every way of holding interest. Excitement of the Legion in action, particularly in the concluding battle sequences, packs a hefty punch.

On strength of cast, quality of story and excellence of production values, "Under Two Flags" is entertainment for any kind of audience.

Showboat

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

Anyone fortunate enough to have "Showboat" on its program can start in shouting about it right now. Enthusiasm need not be stinted in heralding the picture's entertainment worth. The quality of merchandise delivered will not let anyone down. As it comes up on the screen, "Showboat" presents a quality of entertainment for the appreciation of any kind of audience. Produced with a keen eye toward showmanship availability, it provides an exploitation quality and quantity fully worthy of any showman's best efforts.

"Showboat" is first a musical drama. Its music, no matter in what form, is an artistic treat, and because it is an integral part of the story and sung thereas by Irene Dunne, Allan Jones and Helen Morgan, it is beautiful in the way it accents the motivating spirit. Paul Robeson's singing of "Ol' Man River" undoubtedly is the finest thing ever heard in sound pictures. The human dramatic love story plumbs the emotions. It carries its auditors along to the joy of youthful romance. It plunges them to the depths of sympathetic understanding as a woman experiences the terrors of desertion, poverty and heartache. It surges to triumph in the climax when it shows that real love is something that never can die.

But "Showboat" is not all music and drama. There's thrilling spectacle, with the old river showboat plying the Mississippi, the experiences that befall its happy family troupe, the eagerness with which darkies and white folk greet its visits; the shows it presents at their high spot when Cap'n Andy (Charles Winninger) has to play all the parts in a rip-roaring comedy melodrama. So are the cabaret, theatre and auditorium sequences and those devoted to visualizing Negro plantation life.

While the motivating story revolves around Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Helen Westley and Helen Morgan in its dramatic context, it brings in Paul Robeson to thrill with his singing, Sammy White and Queenie Smith to amuse and regale as they portray a pair of oldtime comedy vaudeville actors. It presents a long line of known players, Hattie McDaniel, Arthur Hohl, J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles Wilson, Stanley Fields, Donald Cook, Charles Middleton and many others to be important in the presentation.

Twice previewed, two weeks ago in the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, and Saturday in Pantages Hollywood, it both times stirred audiences to roaring applause. Accepting the reaction in either house as a basis, but relying more on what took place at the Alexander, where the crowd was practically 100 per cent paying customers and there were only a few studio officials in attendance to act as cheer leaders, "Showboat" has the stuff to clock any time in any place it plays.

Half Angel

(20th Century-Fox)

Mystery Melodrama

This production is novelly concocted comedy mystery melodrama with an equally refreshing scared-girl he-man romance inserted to take the whole thing out of the thrill and chill class. Mainly an action story, moving continually to a rapidly tempoed pace, the picture is a nice blending of character portrayals, unlooked for situations and surprising developments. Though the dramatic theme is presented in a somewhat grim atmosphere, the comedy that is associated with it plus that accruing to the romance between the hero, who is bound to win the girl for any number of reasons, and the heroine who doesn't want to have anything to do with him for any reason, gives it a gay and airy identity that drew a full quota of laughter.

As the story goes, reporter Giles with the assistance of his stooge, Felix, is instrumental in winning the acquittal of Allison Lang, charged with being a poison murderess. While he is sort of attracted to the girl, his real purpose is to get her exclusive life story. Allison is befriended by Mrs. Hargraves, who has a penchant for taking care of anyone or anything the world likes to kick around. As Allison is shielded from Giles and Felix, who make every effort to contact her, a couple of murders take place in the household where all is supposed to be sweetness and light. Allison is a natural suspect, but the crack brained pseudo scientist will confess to anything. As the situation becomes dramatically but amusingly complicated, Giles eventually rounds up the whole crowd of suspects in the district attorney's office. There lunatic Dr. Cotton joyfully convicts himself as being the perpetrator of a pair of killings and the Professor accidentally tabs himself as the killer of those that had been charged to Allison. The comedy finale, that has bewildered Allison fleeing Giles, winds up in the most unexpected of places.

The Case against Mrs. Ames

(Paramount-Wanger)

Drama

Essentially this is drama with heart appeal, but this element is effectively supported by an engaging romantic love interest contrast and a line of comedy in situations, action and dialogue. Skipping the formula murder-mystery-court-trial character, the picture has a novel and forceful story content. Suspense of uncertainty developing immediately and automatically to preclude advance anticipations of what is going to happen, the film moves at a speedy pace. As it mainly concerns the trials and tribulations of a woman first accused of murder then an acquittal devoting her efforts to restoring her good name and gaining the custody of her child, the picture has a natural appeal for women. Its field, however, by no means is limited to this particular audience contingent as there is much in it to excite, hold and satisfy the attention of general class and mass adult theatre goers.

Well produced and directed, the story soundly logical in all phases, the picture is a worthy vehicle to reintroduce its star, Madeleine Carroll, to film followers. It also gives George Brent an opportunity to turn in one of the most accomplished performances of his screen career.

Hope Ames, on trial for husband murder, is being rigorously prosecuted by Matt Logan and apathetically defended by Waterson. When the jury brings in a not-guilty verdict, Logan excoriates the jury as a collection of inane sentimentalists which permitted its sympathy for a pretty woman to strangle its sense of justice. Jailed for his effrontery, he is released through the influence of Mrs. Ames, and she is engaged by him to investigate her case and also to aid her in regaining custody of son Bobbie, in charge of moralistically narrow minded grandmother Mrs. Livingston Ames who hates her daughter-in-law. As ensuing action permits butler Grigsby, reporter Lou and news photographer Sid to contribute tension easing comedy, Mrs. Ames and Matt fall into combatative love. Following his investigations in which the efforts of the elder Mrs. Ames to retain custody of Bobbie add to dramatic suspense, Logan discovers evidence which gives him reason to ask for another trial. Gathering realistic force, the picture brings a situation in which it is revealed that attorney Waterson had motivation for and actually was the killer of the man for whom Hope had been tried. Waterson's self-destruction preludes the happy romantic ending.

While realistic, the picture is not grim or solemn. The quantity and quality of comedy contrast provides plenty of laughs and its value is intensified by the intelligent manner in which it has been woven into the picture's dramatic sequences. Always an adult feature, it can be recommended to patrons who are on the lookout for something fresh and new.

Previewed in the Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles. The character of the picture and the potent manner in which the story is narrated quickly grasped audience imagination. The dramatic phases held it in calm silence and it reacted to the comedy contrasts as the producer, scenarist and director hoped it would.

Dracula's Daughter

(Universal-Asher)

Drama

A picture of creeps and chills, this production bases its bid for entertainment and commercial success upon the unusual and potent appeal of terror and thrill situations. A worthy sequel to the shuddery "Dracula," memory of which is still vivid, it is built of eerie and weird material, which, quite smartly, is more spine tingling in character than terror inspiring. There's plenty of the quality to provoke shrieks, screams and gasps, but in the manner in which they are included they have more power to amuse than they do to scare. In presenting a story that is off the beaten path, doing so in a polished, realistic and intelligent fashion, the production includes many opportunities for showmen on the alert for something other than routine features to sell.

Here the fiend is a woman, Dracula's daughter. The character is played with skillful understanding and conviction by Gloria Holden and serves as a fitting vehicle to introduce her charm and unique fascination. In the story, Dracula's daughter is alluring by daylight, but from dawn to dusk she is a vampire. Believed dead for a century, she in the dark hours picks up where her sire left off and preys upon the ones she loves and those who are near and dear to them. Aware of her fatal failing, she strives to overcome it without success. Bringing horror and terror to London, her identity discovered by doctor Garth and Scotland Yard officials, she flees and is thrillingly pursued to Dracula's native African heath. There, with much that is unearthly, packed with weird suspense, the scourge of Dracula's daughter to herself and humanity is forever removed.

A haunting melodrama, naturally having a romantic and some little comedy counterpart, the picture nevertheless is a story of a dead thing—a companion of the evil one—a fatal woman who was a demon at night as she satisfied her lust for blood. Thus the picture is loaded with a spine-chilling character that has proved its capability to thrill in a strange way and amuse in equal style.

Previewed in the studio projection room. The audience, composed almost entirely of newspaper folk, accepted the picture with enthusiasm.

The Golden Arrow

(First National)

Romantic Comedy

In her first picture since winning the award of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for the best feminine performance of 1935, Bette Davis departs abruptly from the dramatic role and undertakes a straight comedy characterization heavily underscored with romance. The story is actionful and swift moving and at no point approaches the serious. She enacts the principal role, said to be the kind of thing she has wanted to do from the time she came to pictures, with the same brisk manner and swift utterance that has marked her other work.

George Brent has the male lead, a newspaper reporter casting again, and divides with Miss Davis a substantially preponderant portion of the footage and dialogue. A large cast is made up of familiar players who portray with accustomed accuracy the pattern personalities called for in a play dealing exclusively with and requiring extremes.

Miss Davis' recently won laurels suggest various exploitation possibilities, naturally, and the fact that this is a different kind of picture for her provides special point. The picture itself is based on exploitation, the promotion by publicity means of a hypothetical brand of face cream, and in the working out of the story are employed yachts, polo ponies, swanky hotels and assorted similar appurtenances of wealth and all in a manner conceivably susceptible to tieups. The possibly misleading title argues for inclusion of advertising reference to the exact character of the production.

Miss Davis is cast as a waitress employed to pose as Miss Appleby, heiress to a fortune made in face creams. Mr. Brent appears as John Jones, a newspaper reporter sent to interview her. She has become weary of titled suitors and asks him to rescue her by a marriage of convenience. He consents. Her employers exploit him in the press, present him with polo ponies, expensive motors and interests he resents. He, believing the girl a genuine heiress, runs away, is arrested for speeding and paroled to his wife. He thereupon pays court to an oil heiress and his wife retaliates in kind. The oil heiress discovers the girl's true identity and tells Jones, whereupon he abducts his wife and takes her to an island cabin where he intends to write a book.

Reviewed at the Warner Strand theatre, New York, where a Sunday afternoon audience laughed responsively at several points in the course of the picture. WEAVER, New York.

The Robber Symphony

(Concordia-British)

Fantastic Film Opera

Whether this production is called film opera, screen expressionism, or sound symbolism—and it can be called all these—it is certainly a screen work of genius and a most important experiment which may have an influence on the development of production technique. That might be thought to infer that it is not box office but such an assumption needs qualification. In New York and every center with a specialized film public there is a field for a hearty welcome, and there is, in fact, even for the regular audience a wealth of real entertainment if cutting, a difficult operation, does not destroy is distinctive quality.

The subject was written, composed and produced by one man, Friedrich Feher. It is really, as well as theoretically, a unity. It has a rhythm interpreted in terms now of music, now of action and now of dialogue and, whether you regard the characters and natural objects as so many animated notes in a musical score, or whether you regard them as mimetic interpreters of that score, it is a fact that Feher has evolved something very like a new entertainment art form, deriving from opera, from ballet and from silent film technique, but combining these elements into something differing from these sources as widely as it differs from realistic talker production.

The outstanding features of the production are its fantasy, its musical charm, its great pictorial beauty and that unique rhythm already spoken of. The plot is slight and deliberately absurd, as fairy stories are absurd. An old witch fortune-teller's stockingful of money is stolen and hidden in an automatic piano, mounted on a barrow, which an old man, his daughter and his grandson push from village to village. To recover the money the robbers proceed to the most extravagant strategems. In a hamlet in the Alps scores of similar pianos, drawn by similar donkers, are paraded side by side with the original equipage, in order that the latter may be stolen. When the boy—his mother in prison on suspicion—gets away into the snow-covered mountains, the train of pianos follows. Weird happenings in the hills include an encounter with the gendarmerie, in which the pursuit is disconcerted by pianos playing to the left and to the right of them and by musicians who pipe from snow banks and caverns; a continuous musical movement, this, in which snowfall and thunderstorm also play their parts. The capture of the robber chief and the elevation of the poor strollers to wealth is the Hans Anderson finish.

Sometimes obscure, extremely long in its present form, possibly caviare to the general, "The Robber Symphony" for its rich and bizarre imagination, its rollicking defiance of "fact" and the originality of its form, may prove as important a film as "Caligari," or any other of the Germans or Russians, from which Hollywood has learned so much.

Outstanding in the cast are Vinette as the fortune teller, Ivor Wilmot as an examining magistrate, Michael Martin-Harvey as a Punchinello-thief, and Webster Booth, Al Marshall and Jack Tracy as members of the Chaplin-hatter robber band. A symphony orchestra of 100 admirably has played the original and very tuneful, score.

Exploitation on regulation lines would be out of place for this picture. It will probably be a case of going for specialized audiences on the strength of its artistic nature. Maybe it will be a roadshow proposition both in England and America.

Trade shown at The Queen's Hall, London—first time a film had been shown there—it was undoubtedly thought too long by most of the audience, but the music and the fantastic humor were generally appreciated. Production specialists were deeply impressed by its originality and execution. "The most outstanding film ever made in England" was a common expression.

The Criminal Within

(Chesterfield)

Mystery Melodrama

Released outside of the New York territory under the title "Murder at Glen Athol," this Invincible production stars John Miljan on the right side of the law, a change for the veteran portrayer of deep, dark plots, casting him as a detective on vacation drawn into investigation of a double murder which takes place on the adjoining estate. It differs from his customary film occupations, too, in that he is permitted to fall in love with and marry the girl in the case, played by Irene Ware.

There are touches of comedy in the picture but interest is focused chiefly on the mystery. Circumstantial background is intricate and many sided. Suspicion is directed in turn at nearly every member of the large cast but the solution is logically supported.

A sophisticated daughter of the family next door invites the detective to a party at which are also present her aunt, uncle, divorced husband, the girl her second husband, now in an asylum, intended to marry before she broke up the match, and her second husband's younger brother, with whom she is conducting an affair. She summons a bootlegger whom she has been blackmailing and the detective rescues her from him when he attempts forcibly to regain possession of papers which incriminate him in murder.

Later that night her second husband, escaped from the asylum, is shot and killed by the butler. She and her first husband are found dead in different rooms, murdered. Local police investigate and are led by the girl's uncle to place responsibility for the murders on the dead maniac. The detective carries on the investigation, ultimately proves the aunt and the gangster guilty, but allows her to commit suicide instead of arresting her.

Neighborhood House

(MGM - Hal Roach)

Comedy

From a comedy gag and situation viewpoint, this picture satirizes the fun and foolishness of bank night. Screen actors go through the mechanics of the actions and reactions to a topical development current in many theatres, but noting the spirit in which the preview audience took the attraction it was quite evident that its members considered themselves the personalities who were doing both the entertaining and the being entertained. As the same thing is quite likely to happen in theatres that play the picture, it opens up the exploitation angle of inviting patrons to come and see in actual picture form how they carry on while waiting the calling of their number.

In the yarn, Charlie Chase, his wife, Rosina Lawrence, and child Darla Hood attend a picture show. They are more interested in the possibility of their number being drawn than they are in the attraction. Darla is chosen to draw a number. She does and it's her father's. Immediately the audience goes into an uproar, hollering fake and fraud. Another try is made and this time she picks her own number and there is more raging excitement. The third time she draws her mother's. Then a gang of racketeers tries to raid the theatre. Follows a harum scarum chase in which everybody indulges. Back in the theatre another drawing is held and this time Chase's boss wins. He's paid off in cartwheels, the bag breaks, and there's a wild scramble by everybody to pick up coins.

In neighborhood houses wherein the picture's field lies, the attraction, which doesn't mean much one way or another other than to be amusing entertainment, makes possible a brand of topical exploitation that probably can incite a good bit of interest.

Show Boat

Universal release of the Carl Laemmle, Jr., production featuring Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Paul Robeson, Helen Morgan and Helen Westley. Directed by James Whale. Screen play by Oscar Hammerstein II, from his stage play. Original story by Edna Ferber. Music and lyrics by Jerome Kern and Hammerstein. Photographed by John J. Mescall. Dance numbers staged by Le Roy Prinz. Edited by Bernard Burton and Ted Kent. Special photography by John P. Fulton. Musical director, Victor Baravalle. Supporting cast: Sammy White, Hattie McDaniel, Patricia Barry, Marilyn Knowlden, Arthur Hohl, J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles Wilson, Queenie Smith, Donald Cook, Francis X. Mahoney, Sunnie O'Dea, Charles Middleton, Clarence Muse, Mae Beatty, Harry Barris, Stanley Fields. Previewed at Pantages, April [illegible]. Running time: [illegible] mins.

Fitting tribute for the departure of Carl Laemmle from the motion picture scene is this saga of river boat shows. As important today as entertainment as it was when Ziegfeld produced it a decade ago, 'Show Boat' is a money picture. Impressive in cast and production, theatres should have no trouble selling it. Carl Laemmle, Jr., has spared nothing in making the picture near fool-proof. Story, casting, direction and background are class throughout.

When James Whale was first suggested as the director it was doubted if an Englishman was the best choice for a subject so thoroughly American. Result looks as if Whale had been born on the Mississippi. His sensitive guidance of the players is mainly responsible for the excellence of the production.

Oscar Hammerstein's screen play deviates little from his original stage play. He has lengthened his characters' stay in Chicago, has switched the finish from the showboat to New York. Outside of this, everything is as it was originally. Jerome Kern's score is familiar to everyone. 'Old Man River,' sung by Paul Robeson is the best piece of musical reproduction yet done in pictures. The resonant baritone voice of Robeson brought cheers from the preview mob, should repeat this everywhere. Doubtful if the number has ever been sung so well as it is in this picture. Helen Morgan in her inimitable style sings her topper, 'Can't Help Loving that Man Of Mine' to grand results. Here she is aided by Hattie McDaniel and Robeson. 'You Are Love' duet is the best effort of Allan Jones and Irene Dunne though 'Room Upstairs,' new number, gives it a run.

Another new number is 'Ah Still Suits Me' by Robeson and Miss McDaniel. A semi-comical song, it was well received. 'Galavanting Around' is the third addition to the original score.

Familiar story has many highlights. Early in the picture, Charles Winninger steps to the fore by [illegible] ing the show when a [illegible] shoots Sammy White; White [illegible] cops the picture in one [illegible] where he sells Irene Dunne to a [illegible] ducer for a floor show. W[illegible] nger is superb when he enco[illegible] es Miss Dunne as she makes [illegible] first cafe appearance. Scene [illegible] which Helen Morgan "admits sh[illegible] s colored is also an outstande[illegible]

Despite his [illegible] fulness in the latter scenes, Allan Jones scores throughout, sings admirably. Miss Dunne is an excellent choice as the Edna Ferber heroine gives a superb performance. Winninger demonstrates that there is a very definite place for him on the screen by his excellent portrayal of the boat captain. Helen Westley gives her usual class performance as Winninger's wife. Sammy White, in his cinematic launching, adds a new personality to the screen, and should go places. Robeson, teamed with Miss McDaniel, is perfect casting for the part. Tagging closely behind is Miss McDaniel. Queenie Smith in the Eva Puck part has little to do, but impresses. Harry Barris surprises in a small part which should get him many a picture job. Sunnie O'Dea, unfortunately, had her dance eliminated, but manages to impress in a small part. Dance of this young lady should go back in the picture. Donald Cook, as Miss Morgan's actor-husband, gives a good account of himself. J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles Wilson, Francis X. Mahoney, Charles Middleton, Clarence Muse, Arthur Hohl, Marilyn Knowlden, Mae Beatty and Stanley Fields are all excellent in short characterizations.

Le Roy Prinz has done a fine job in staging the dances and ensemble numbers. Background for 'Old Man River' and the final theatre sequence could easily have been overproduced. Prinz has kept them from projecting over the principal action, still has made them stand out.

Photography is excellent throughout however, considerable process footage has handicapped the regular camera work, no fault of the lensers. Production throughout is on a high plane.

Cast: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Paul Robeson, Helen Morgan, Helen Westley, Queenie Smith, Sammy White, Donald Cook, Hattie McDaniel, Sunnie O'Day, Francis X. Mahoney, Charles Middleton, Patricia Barry, Marilyn Knowlden, Arthur Hohl, J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles Wilson, Clarence Muse, Mae Beatty, Harry Barris, Stanley Fields.

Magnificent in scope of production and unlimited in audience appeal, "Show Boat" will have smooth sailing as a world's boxoffice attraction. The fine Kern-Hammerstein score is given splendid rendition, especially by Paul Robeson. The large cast performs superlatively, especially Irene Dunne, a completely captivating Magnolia.

The picture comes as a fittingly noteworthy climax to the long and brilliant career of Carl Laemmle, retiring president of Universal Pictures. It marks the last time that "Carl Laemmle Presents" will appear above the main billing of a production from the studio he founded more than 21 years ago. As a producer, Carl Laemmle Jr has given "Show Boat" a handsome mounting.

Follows Stage Show

The screenplay by Oscar Hammerstein II follows more closely the stage musical success by the same writer than it does the original novel by Edna Ferber. In mood and in fact, this present version is a pretentious musical comedy rather than a drama of Mississippi river showboat folk, with musical interludes. The plot is sketchy in structure, presenting scenes as separate entities, however correlated, instead of as incidents in the telling of a life story. Each sequence has its own beginning and reaches its own climax, often in music. It is a departure from formula screen writing, interesting and extremely well done.

The opening quickly establishes the personnel of the showboat troupe. Following in uninterrupted succession are three numbers from the original Kern-Hammerstein score. "Make Believe," sung in excellent voice by Irene Dunne and Allan Jones, serves neatly as an introduction of their romance. Then comes the picture's great musical triumph, "Old Man River," superbly and stirringly rendered by Paul Robeson. The staging of this number is very effective photographically. Finally there is "Can't Help Loving That Man of Mine," sold by Helen Morgan as only she can sell it.

Immeasurably helped by the mood set by these musical scenes, the story proceeds to the miscegenation episode and the substitution of Magnolia and Ravenal as the leading players of the troupe. There is a delightful interlude of a showboat performance, then the marriage of the lovers and the birth of Kim. The action moves on to Chicago, where Ravenal deserts his wife and child.

A New Ending

A new ending has been given the piece with Magnolia reunited with her husband, now a stage doorman, on the eve of their daughter's stardom. The finale will doubtless prove popular with the public, ~~although~~

In addition to the three musical numbers mentioned, a fourth has been retained from the original, "Bill," the sob ballad long identified with Helen Morgan, who again delivers it delightfully. Four brand new numbers augment the score, music by Jerome Kern, lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein II. Of these the most outstanding are "I Suits Me," sung to excellent comedy effect by Robeson and Hattie McDaniel, and "Gallivanting Around," which Irene Dunne does in blackface.

Miss Dunne's performance is highlighted by surprising touches of comedy. Besides the blackface routine, she breaks into a shuffle that is a howl. The first part of her portrayal is as an adolescent girl and she gives a portrait of childhood without obvious artifices. She plays throughout with grace and charm and her singing voice has never been better.

Vocally Excellent

Allan Jones is likewise vocally excellent, but he never quite achieves the dashing river gambler that is Ravenal. Part of this shortcoming seems to be attributable to the presentation of the part both in writing and direction. It lacks reality.

Charles Winninger's Cap'n Andy Hawks is a joy. He does a scene to explain the ending of the showboat play interrupted by shooting that is one of the season's comedy gems. Helen Westley does Parthy, the Cap'n wife. Her performance, to say the least, is a vigorous characterization.

The singing of Paul Robeson is alone worth the price of admission. He plays Joe, the steamboat handyman, for a solid hit. As a comedy foil, Hattie McDaniel scores in each appearance.

Helen Morgan rises to every opportunity as the tragic Julie. Donald Cook does a memorable bit as her white husband.

Queenie Smith and Sammy White dash in and out of proceedings as a team of dancers. Both make their roles outstanding. Others notable in support are Sunnie O'Dea, Charles Middleton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Stanley Fields and Clarence Muse.

The photography of John J. Mescall is of high standard, as are the settings by Charles D. Hall. Special photography is credited to John P. Fulton and his effects are excellent.

The film editing is noteworthy, a smooth job, with no loose ends. Bernard Burton and Ted Kent are listed as editors and Maurice Pivar as editorial supervisor. Victor Baravelle's outstanding musical direction needs be mentioned, with music arrangements by Russell Bennett. The dance numbers were staged by LeRoy Prinz.

Mopping Up

As the last month preceding conventions and announcements of new season programs opened, Hollywood continued its cleanup drive on present schedules by starting 10 pictures and finishing seven. With practically every major studio engaged in "mop-up" activities, the pictures currently started and completed will in most cases be given first run releases prior to new lineup announcements. Several of the features in production will be held over for 1936-37 schedules.

Starting pictures went in pairs as four studios launched two productions each. At Radio "M'liss" went into work. The cast includes Ann Shirley, John Beal, Guy Kibbee, Frank M. Thomas, Arthur Hoyt, Moroni Olsen, Margaret Armstrong, Barbara Pepper, William Benedict, James Bush, Esther Howard, Ray Mayer and Douglas Dumbrille. George Nichols, Jr., is directing. Its companion piece is "Marry the Girl," which Leigh Jason is directing. Gene Raymond, Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young, Helen Broderick, Ned Sparks and Eric Blore are featured.

The two at MGM are "We Went to College" and "Gorgeous Hussy." The first will present Edmund Lowe, Edith Atwater, Maude Allen, Mahlon Hamilton, Virginia Brissac, Mabel Colcord, Robert Wayne, King Baggot, Jack Gray, Billy Dooley, Harry Bradley, Don Barclay, Pat West, Tom Ricketts and Frank Morgan. Joseph Santley moves up from Republic to his first opportunity at major studio direction. Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor and Melvyn Douglas are the stars of "Gorgeous Hussy," which Clarence Brown is directing. The support lists James Stewart, Lionel Barrymore, Alison Skipworth, Edith Atwater, Ian Keith, Melville Cooper, Willard Robertson, Phoebe Foster, Gene Lockhart, Marjorie Gateson, Nydia Westman and Beulah Bondi.

New Star Introduced

Matching the stride of these studios, Twentieth Century-Fox started two pictures. "Girls' Dormitory" will introduce Simon Simone to American audiences. She is supported by Herbert Marshall, Ruth Chatterton, Constance Collier, Dixie Dunbar, J. Edward Bromberg, Frank Reicher, John Qualen, Peggy Montgomery and Shirley Deane among others. Irving Cummings is directing. The second feature, "Trouble Makers," has Glenda Farrell, Brian Donlevy, Norman Foster and Louise Henry as its principals. Alan Dwan is directing.

Keeping up the pace, Warner started "Cain and Mabel." Marion Davies and Clark Gable are starred. Present supporting cast, with many more to be included, lists Mary Boland, James Melton, Roscoe Karns, Ruth Donnelly and William Collier, Sr. Direction is by Lloyd Bacon. In "Blood Lines" Mickey Rooney, Charles Wilson, Denny Meadows, Patricia Ellis, Robert Emmett Keane and Hal K. Dawson will be seen. William Clemons directs.

Paramount's contribution to the new activity is "The Return of Sophie Lang." The cast is headed by Gertrude Michael, Ray Milland, Guy Standing and Elizabeth Patterson. George Archainbaud is directing.

The final picture in the starting group is Republic's "Winds of the Wastelands." Directed by Mack Wright, it will present John Wayne, Phyllis Fraser, Sam Flint, Layne Chandler and Lew Kelly.

Three Companies Complete Six

WHY WE ARE NOT USING "SHOW BOAT" AS A ROAD-SHOW:

We are not entirely crazy in refusing to yield to the temptation to use "Show Boat" as a road-show.

Everybody who has seen it says it should be a road-show, with openings at high prices.

Under our contracts, we could do this, but we have a feeling that it would not be quite the proper thing to do.

We are asking all exhibitors who have "Show Boat" under contract to improve the terms of their contracts and they are doing it. They know as well as we do that we undersold it.

In fact they are so decent about it, so willing to meet us more than half way, that it would be a rather indecent thing for us to milk their territories with road-shows.

Therefore "Show Boat" will go to regular movie theatres when they need it most.

The new Universal starts off by offering the finest picture it has ever made without a single road-show—and it does so solely for the purpose of showing its good faith.

When you see "Show Boat" you will still think we are crazy for not road-showing it!

GUILD VOTES TO JOIN ACTORS' FEDERATION

Whitehead Plans Vaudeville Circuit to Cover Nation under Federal Theatre Project

Forging another link in the chain by which America's acting talent hopes eventually to reach the status of an amalgamated union, the Screen Actors Guild in Hollywood on Tuesday informed Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors, in New York, that its executive board had approved affiliation with the AFA.

This also is a further step in the Guild's drive for a closed shop at Hollywood studios and effects a reciprocal arrangement whereby screen actors will become members of the AFA should they enter any of its activities, such as, for example, personal appearances in motion picture theatres.

Under the plan, if an AFA member goes to Hollywood for screen work, he will be obliged to become a member of the Guild. With minor differences, the arrangement is similar to that in effect between the Guild and Actors Equity Association, the union of legitimate actors. All Guild members pay dues to Equity, and the arrangement is enforced by suspension of benefits.

The three players' organizations are groups in the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, which was scheduled to hold its annual meeting in New York on Friday. At that session the Guild's campaign for recognition by the producers and support in the move from its affiliates and the American Federation of Labor studio crafts, was believed most likely due for discussion.

Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Guild, has requested that the AFA bylaws be forwarded to Hollywood for completion of final details of the affiliation.

Vaudeville Circuit Planned

Meanwhile, in his capacity as director of the newly-formed Division of Vaudeville, Musical Comedy and Circus Units of the federal theatre project, Mr. Whitehead disclosed that he was working on ambitious plans for a circuit to blanket a large part of the nation, with a view to keeping actors employed and reviving vaudeville. Long a dream of Mr. Whitehead and others, he now is in a position to advance the "restore vaudeville" plan on a substantial basis, or at least persuade the Government to help materially.

Mr. Whitehead formerly was executive assistant director of a similar division under Eddie Dowling, who is understood to have resigned because of press of other business. Mr. Dowling was active in the 1932 presidential campaign of Franklin D. Roosevelt and one of the first to persuade the Government that something should be done for jobless actors.

"We hope to develop the vaudeville, circus and musical comedy projects to such an extent that the Government will want to expand our activities to use extra people," Mr. Whitehead said.

While WPA officials have assured that the federal theatre units will continue, actors, stagehands and others in the project still are meeting to protest the reported transfer of the units from federal to state control when present appropriations expire June 30th. Speakers expressed fear that budgets would be cut or diverted by local politics under state administration. The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators is a leader on the West Coast in the campaign for continued federal funds and control.

Federation Names Councillors

At the annual meeting of the AFA in New York Friday night, Ed Lowry and John Dilson were elected to the council, and the following were reelected: Sophie Tucker, Eddie Cantor, Fred Keating, Eddie Miller, Frank Lynch, Sid Williams. They are to serve four years.

A death benefit plan was adopted, under which each member pays 25 cents upon the passing of a paid-up member, the money being deposited in a fund from which the beneficiary is paid not less than $300. This amount may be increased, if the reserve permits.

In recognition of his efforts in behalf of organized labor, a delegation of eight stagehands headed by Sidney Platt presented Mr. Whitehead with a scroll, silver mallet and block. At an AFA party Friday night, the members presented a platinum watch to Mr. Whitehead.

Former motion picture stars are among the 6,250 actors and actresses, including many extras, who are destitute and working on federal theatre projects in the Los Angeles and Hollywood area, according to a report to Washington this week from Frank Y. McLaughlin, director in California.

$23,185,521 Judgment Asked In Fox West Coast Case

William H. Neblett, law partner of United States Senator William G. McAdoo, filed charges in the federal court of Los Angeles Tuesday that Federal Judge William P. James and Bankruptcy Referee Samuel W. McNabb participated in a conspiracy to defraud creditors of Fox West Coast Theatres in an amended petition for a reopening of the Fox West Coast bankruptcy case. Mr. Neblett asks judgments totaling $23,185,521 against Fox Film Corporation, Wesco Corporation, Chase National Bank, Albert W. Leeds, Referee McNabb and others.

David Sarnoff, president of RCA, resigned from the board of directors of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., on Monday. He was succeeded by Lunsford P. Yandell, assistant treasurer of RCA.

PUBLIC DOMAIN ISSUE EXPLANATION DENIED

The supreme court of the United States has refused a petition by MGM for interpretation of the copyright act as it applies to material in the public domain. The petition was based on the decision of the federal court in New York in the action involving "Letty Lynton," claimed by Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes to be a plagiarism of the play, "Dishonored Lady."

In this case the U. S. district court found in favor of MGM, but the U. S. circuit court of appeals reversed this decision and awarded the plaintiffs $21,000 plus attorney's fees for 84 showings of the film. In its petition MGM pointed out that on the $250 minimum damage basis it might be subject to penalties amounting to $2,000,000 on a picture playing in 8,000 theatres.

$269,230 Paid Sheehan in 1935

Paid $269,230 by Twentieth Century-Fox in 1935, as vice-president in charge of production, Winfield Sheehan was revealed as the highest salaried man in the organization by the company's annual financial statement made public by the Securities and Exchange Commission on Tuesday. Next highest payments were to the late Will Rogers, who received $250,000, and to Warner Baxter, who was paid $208,000.

Under a contract, which, the report states, has been canceled, George White received $48,446 for his producer's percentage of gross rentals, while Hughes, Schurman and Dwight were paid $200,000 as general counsel, and Alfred Wright received $20,800.

The company reported that holders of 10 per cent or more of its stock on February 1, last, were the Chase National Bank, 574,753½ shares of preferred, or 42.29 per cent, and 287,376¾ shares of common, or 23.43 per cent; White, Weld & Co., 202,126 shares of preferred, or 14.87 per cent; Joseph M. Schenck, 204,462⅝ shares of common, or 16.68 per cent; Darryl F. Zanuck, 183,979½ shares of common, or 15 per cent, and William Goetz, 214,642⅝ shares of common, or 17.5 per cent.

Sidney R. Kent, president, has an option for six years beginning August 22 last, at a price of $18.24 per share, and 40,000 shares have been reserved for issuance to officers in part payment for services rendered at a price to be determined by the board of directors, but not less than $10 per share, it was shown.

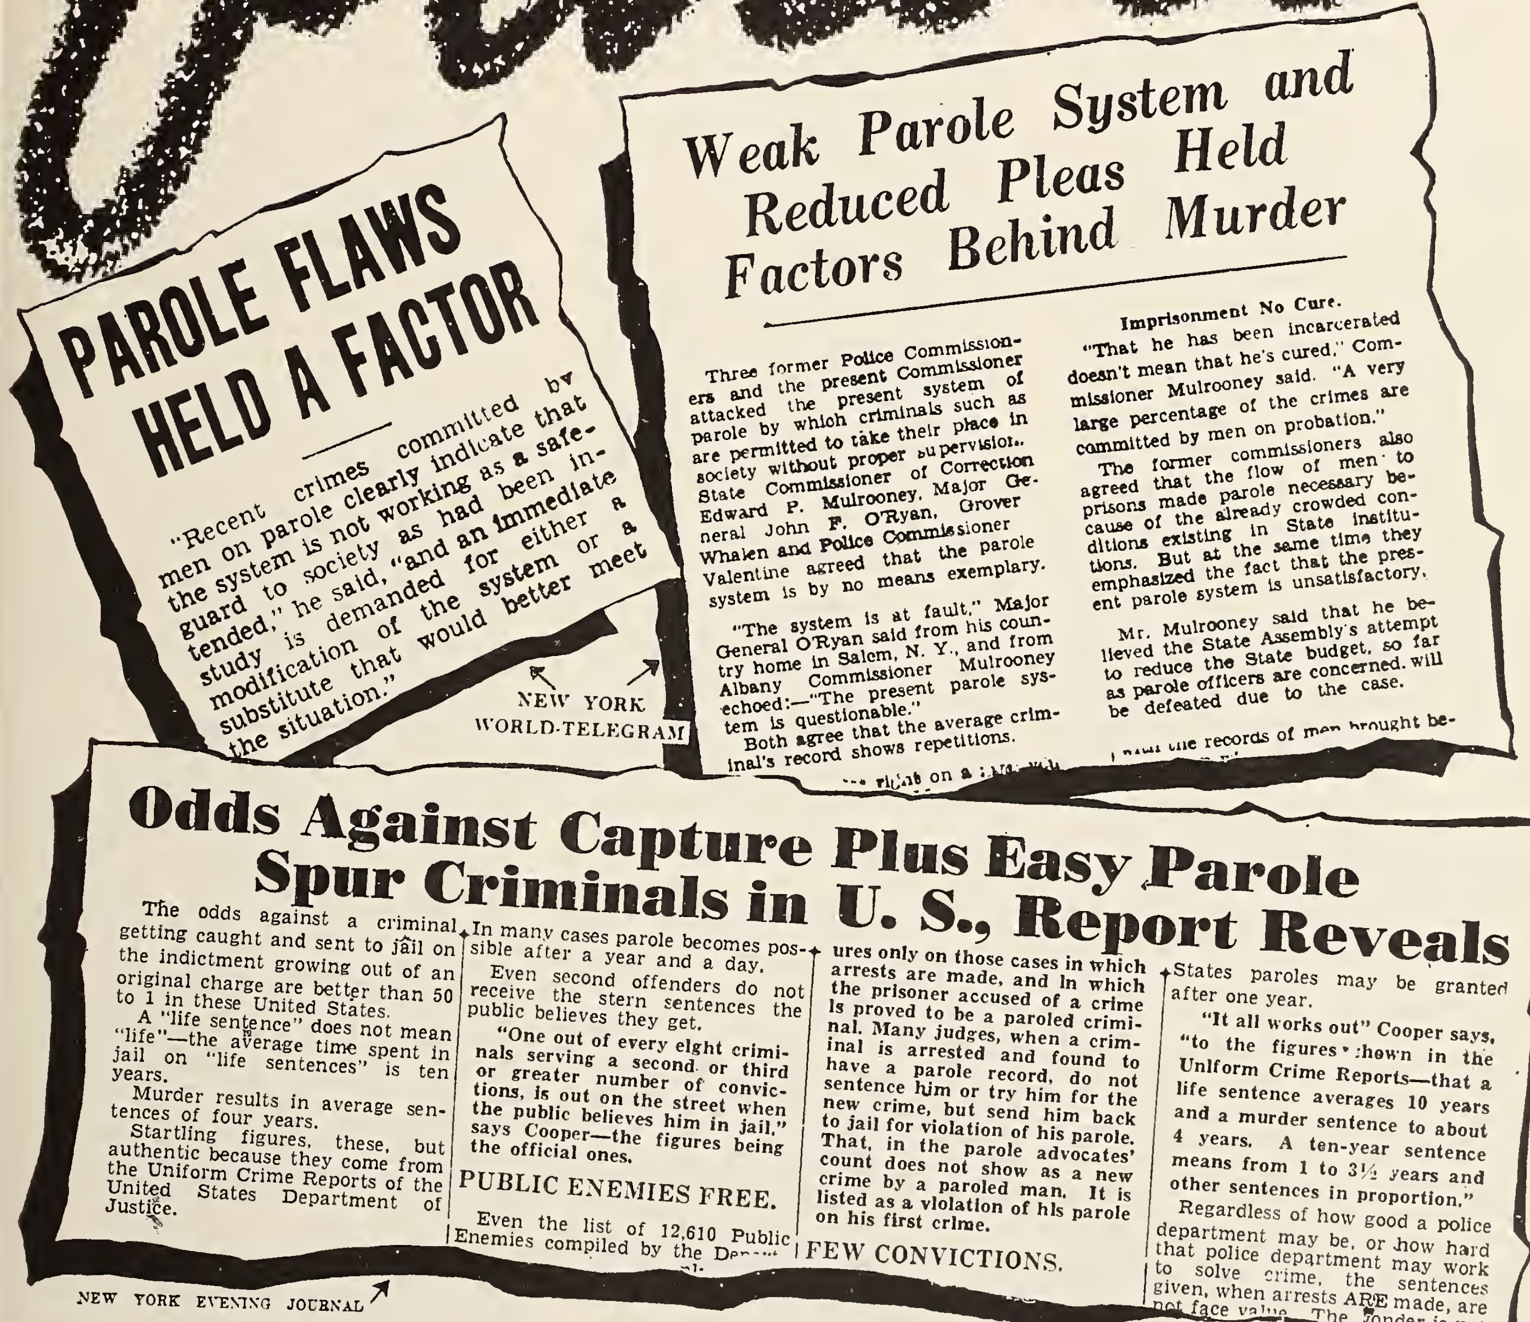
"Parole"



PAROLE FLAWS HELD A FACTOR

"Recent crimes committed by men on parole clearly indicate that the system is not working as a safeguard to society as had been intended," he said, "and an immediate study is demanded for either a modification of the system or a substitute that would better meet the situation."

Weak Parole System and Reduced Pleas Held Factors Behind Murder

Three former Police Commissioners and the present Commissioner attacked the present system of parole by which criminals such as are permitted to take their place in society without proper supervision. State Commissioner of Correction Edward P. Mulrooney, Major General John F. O'Ryan, Grover Whalen and Police Commissioner Valentine agreed that the parole system is by no means exemplary.

"The system is at fault," Major General O'Ryan said from his country home in Salem, N. Y., and from Albany Commissioner Mulrooney echoed:—"The present parole system is questionable."

Both agree that the average criminal's record shows repetitions.

Imprisonment No Cure.

"That he has been incarcerated doesn't mean that he's cured," Commissioner Mulrooney said. "A very large percentage of the crimes are committed by men on probation."

The former commissioners also agreed that the flow of men to prisons made parole necessary because of the already crowded conditions existing in State institutions. But at the same time they emphasized the fact that the present parole system is unsatisfactory.

Mr. Mulrooney said that he believed the State Assembly's attempt to reduce the State budget, so far as parole officers are concerned, will be defeated due to the case.

Odds Against Capture Plus Easy Parole Spur Criminals in U. S., Report Reveals

The odds against a criminal getting caught and sent to jail on the indictment growing out of an original charge are better than 50 to 1 in these United States.

A "life sentence" does not mean "life"—the average time spent in jail on "life sentences" is ten years.

Murder results in average sentences of four years.

Startling figures, these, but authentic because they come from the Uniform Crime Reports of the United States Department of Justice.

In many cases parole becomes possible after a year and a day.

Even second offenders do not receive the stern sentences the public believes they get.

"One out of every eight criminals serving a second or third or greater number of convictions, is out on the street when the public believes him in jail," says Cooper—the figures being the official ones.

PUBLIC ENEMIES FREE.

Even the list of 12,610 Public Enemies compiled by the Dep ures only on those cases in which arrests are made, and in which the prisoner accused of a crime is proved to be a paroled criminal. Many judges, when a criminal is arrested and found to have a parole record, do not sentence him or try him for the new crime, but send him back to jail for violation of his parole. That, in the parole advocates' count does not show as a new crime by a paroled man. It is listed as a violation of his parole on his first crime.

FEW CONVICTIONS.

States paroles may be granted after one year.

"It all works out" Cooper says, "to the figures shown in the Uniform Crime Reports—that a life sentence averages 10 years and a murder sentence to about 4 years. A ten-year sentence means from 1 to 3½ years and other sentences in proportion."

Regardless of how good a police department may be, or how hard that police department may work to solve crime, the sentences given, when arrests ARE made, are not face value. The wonder is not

FIGHT TO REFORM N.Y. OPERATOR LICENSING, "WORST IN COUNTRY"

Changes Are Urged by City Officials and IATSE Local's President to Rout Incompetence, and Stabilize Jobs

Drastic reform in the system of licensing motion picture projectionists in New York City, branded the worst in the country, is being urged on Mayor F. H. LaGuardia by city officials and Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, as a prime requisite in weeding out incompetence, stabilizing employment and improving exhibitor-operator relations.

The drive has been taken up by the New York World-Telegram, bellwether of the Scripps-Howard chain of newspapers, which finds that "at the root of labor troubles" among the city's 5,000 operators "lies an obsolete, careless, politics-ridden system of licensing," and calls on the mayor to take definite action "to limit and stiffen the licensing system in this field."

Similar evils have been reported in varying degrees in other large cities, notably Chicago, but in New York they are aggravated by their prominence. They represent a hangover from union racketeering and corrupt civic politics which have undergone a purge by the present administration in both the union and at the city hall.

That the advocated reforms will be effected soon is regarded merely as a hope, however, because opposition is apparent within the local and from some city department heads to the proposed that all licensed operators, submit to re-examination. The union said, however, that the members objecting represented only a small minority.

The World-Telegram, to whose interest in Local 306 affairs was attributed the downfall of Sam Kaplan, who wielded an unbreakable dictatorship over the union for six years, and to the subsequent cleanup of the local, has long pointed to the need of renovating the licensing system, which it describes as a "basic evil in the industry."

"Drastic Reform" Urged

A "drastic reform in the whole procedure of examinations" was urged in a report to the mayor a year ago by Commissioner of Accounts Paul Blanshard, whose investigation disclosed that before the LaGuardia administration it was a system marked by "reckless favoritism and improper political influence."

"Scores of unemployed men paid fixing fees for their licenses to professional fixers who were friends of politicians," Commissioner Blanshard declared. The examiners were found to be "under constant pressure from their political superiors in behalf of favored candidates."

"This reckless favoritism to certain men, regardless of their ability, is a public danger because of the responsibility of motion picture operators in preventing fire," pointed out the report. "Because of the proximity of live carbon arcs to highly inflammable film, a motion picture operator should be a man of intelligence and sound judgment. Our investigation revealed that it was a common practice under the former commissioner of water supply, gas and electricity (which department has charge of licensing) to grant motion picture licenses to incompetent men who should have failed."

RIGID REQUIREMENTS SET IN OTHER CITIES

While the provisions for licensing projectionists in New York City are declared to be encouraging a constant supply of low-grade operators, the states of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts have in force a system of examining and licensing which they consider a great improvement over conditions elsewhere.

Even more drastic are the requirements in the province of Alberta, Canada, where an applicant must undergo a period of apprenticeship and a thorough test with each progressive step before he can become a full-fledged operator.

As in New York, the license provisions in a great majority of cities are antiquated and inefficient, it is pointed out by union and civic authorities, and require revamping to meet present conditions.

State Law Proposed

Commissioner Blanchard underscored the necessity of a state law making "fixing" a crime. No steps have been taken on this recommendation, the commissioner's office this week pointing out that under court interpretations "fixing" is a crime only when the "fixer" fails to deliver, in which event he can be prosecuted on charges of obtaining money under false pretenses.

A bill to declare "fixing" a crime was introduced in the 1934 session of the legislature, but it died in committee.

Although the responsibility for a thorough reform of the licensing method rests upon the mayor, Commissioner Blanshard suggested that the transfer of the entire system of operator examinations to the Civil Service Commission "would be a wise solution of this whole problem."

Officials' Opinions Vary

Inquiry this week at the various departments of the city government involved revealed a variance of opinion on this point. The conviction of Commissioner Blanshard's office that examinations by the Civil Service Commission would eliminate inefficiency and graft remained unchanged. Furthermore, he was of the opinion the transfer could be effected under the present laws.

Demand for Re-examining Projectionists Is Protested Within Local 306 and by Some of the Department Heads

However, James E. Finegan, municipal civil service commissioner, while declaring that "all departments of the city government would be agreeable to the change," pointed out that the commission could not undertake the job unless the general state law governing municipalities were revised to meet the situation, separating the examining from the licensing function

Mr. Finegan said that a board on which long-experienced, working projectionists would be represented would submit license applicants to a more stringent examination than they get now. The reports would be the basis of licensing by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity.

However, that department, which is headed by Commissioner Maurice P. Davidson, saw no need of divesting itself of the examining function. Projectionist standards have been raised by making examination more difficult, it was pointed out, and the examining procedure has been changed.

Regardless, "New York City today is licensing operators to run the intricate sound picture machines of its modern movie palaces, potential fire hazards, on the basis of tests taken as long as 25 years ago in the pioneer days of the nickelodeon," insists the World-Telegram.

"Annually it continues to issue new licenses to more than 5,000 operators, most of whom were licensed under an antiquated examining system," the paper points out.

Basson Seeks Re-examination

A thoroughgoing re-examination of all operators to provide adequate safety tests and improve projection in theatres is being sought by Mr. Basson as head of Local 306, which represents a majority of the 2,000 or so operators employed in Greater New York's approximately 800 theatres. It is essential also, Mr. Basson said, before the labor troubles which continuously have plagued the metropolitan area can be settled.

"The large surplus of operators who pay their $10 licensing fee to the city every year," according to the union head, "is a constant source of turmoil. Many will never find employment and many are incompetent. Some have never worked in a projection booth. Yet they are always a menace to the operators who have always made this their trade."

Mr. Basson is one of the operators licensed today on the strength of an oral quiz he took in an era when operating meant chiefly turning a crank 12 hours a day in an unventilated booth. The mechanism was simple then when the industry was still pioneering.

The examination, Mr. Basson recalled, "consisted of a few questions on electricity, such as what to do if a fuse blew out." The system, he believed, has not kept pace with technical improvements, and although sound revolutionized projection, nothing has been done to re-test the operators, he pointed out.

Cites Technological Changes

While both Commissioner Davidson and Mayor LaGuardia have told the head of Local 306, according to Mr. Basson, that they favor a re-examination of all operators, others disagree. For example, Nicholas J. Kelly, chief engineer of the Bureau of Gas and Electricity, who has direct charge of examining operators and booth inspection, said this week that the technologi-

THEATRE LABOR 'WAR' IN NEW YORK AFFECTS 5,000 PROJECTIONISTS

Picketing Resumed at 46 Theatres When Merger Move of Local 306, Empire State and Allied Union Is Terminated

The motion picture's greatest projection labor war is on.

Hopes for labor peace at the 600 motion picture theatres in the New York metropolitan area were dashed this week when Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, New York's dominant theatre labor group, announced termination of merger negotiations with two rival unions and cessation of a truce in effect since late last summer. The city's 5,000 licensed operators are affected.

Marking resumption of hostilities, Local 306 said that picketing had been resumed at 46 theatres in the metropolitan district. Cross-picketing by the other unions also was in evidence. Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union replied that "if they want a fight, we will give it to them." Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union, accused by Local 306 of being a company union, charged Local 306 had broken its promises.

Following the Local 306 strike settlement last year, a merger at first had been expected to be consummated swiftly. As late as last week there still was hope for a coalition, but it was reported that union officials were not anxious for final action until next August, as new union agreements with theatres become effective September 1st.

Two-in-Booth Made Issue

Negotiations for a three-cornered consolidation which would give Local 306 complete control of the metropolitan area were begun in earnest about seven months ago at the termination of the Local 306 strike against New York circuit theatres.

But Allied declared recently that the move was not possible until Local 306 reconciled its policies to those of the other unions with respect to booth personnel. Local 306 insisted on two men in a booth, while the others maintained that one man is sufficient, particularly where the exhibitor's receipts or operating situation did not warrant the extra expense.

Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, took the position that the merger would not go through unless both Allied and Empire State entered the pact. He felt that many of the troubles and conflicts that have beset exhibitor-operator relations for years could be remedied by the move.

Calls Negotiations Fruitless

On Monday Local 306 issued this statement:

"Angered by the protracted and, to date, fruitless negotiations for a basic wage scale for New York City motion picture operators carried on for the last few months between union heads and representatives of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, members of Local 306 yesterday renewed picketing all theatres employing operators affiliated with the Allied Motion Picture Operators Union, which Local 306 officials characterized 'as an out and out company union.'

"Pickets carrying Local 306 signs appeared yesterday in front of 46 motion picture theatres in Times Square, Bronx, Brooklyn and Queens.

BRANDT ASKS MAYOR TO AID LABOR PEACE

Seeking to bring peace into a situation "which has been intolerable for the past 10 years," Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, this week asked Mayor F. H. LaGuardia to do the following:

(1) Set the wage scale for operators; (2) ask magistrates to demand bail from rioting or disorderly pickets; (3) inform the three unions that "fronts of theatres cannot be used for battle fields"; (4) take means to consolidate the unions and effect a contract with exhibitors providing for arbitration; (5) request the police department to maintain order and that plain clothes men be assigned to protect all theatres involved.

Mr. Brandt's letter revealed that Frank Tichenor, named by the mayor as peacemaker, retired because of a hopeless situation. The terms subsequently agreed upon, said Mr. Brandt, called for an increase of from 15 to 30 per cent in booth costs, including a week's vacation for operators. Before George E. Browne, president of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, could approve this agreement, warfare broke out anew over the weekend, Mr. Brandt told the mayor.

"'We are out to unionize every theatre in Greater New York,' union officials said, 'and we will welcome applications from every operator. Our object is to create one powerful union in New York City which will be capable of maintaining a decent living standard for all motion picture operators. Such a wage scale, gained after twenty years of hard fighting, is now endangered by the worst type of company unionism.

Charges Violation by Allied

"'As for the socalled truce between the Allied and Local 306, it has been broken repeatedly by the action of Allied in reducing the wage scale of men employed in non-union houses. In accordance with the truce we said nothing, but when Allied began to picket our houses in the Bronx, with the avowed object of reducing wages and increasing hours, we determined to fight. We will never picket houses where conditions are decent or where men are fighting for a better living standard, but rather than accept reductions of our basic living standards, we will picket every house in New York City.

"'The public must realize that this is a fight, not between rival unions, but between a bonafide American Federation of Labor affiliate and a company union. We are confident that the general public will support us in our fight for better instead of worse conditions,' Local 306 officials declared."

Allied, Accused of Being a Company Union, Retorts That IATSE Unit Has Broken Promises; Cross-Picketing Begun

Allied Resumes Picketing

Allied over the weekend resumed cross-picketing in the Times Square area, posting men at the Rialto, George M. Cohan, Loew's State and the RKO Palace, all employing Local 306 operators.

Reminiscent of police activity last summer when close to 1,000 theatre pickets were arrested, the authorities swung into action Sunday night, arresting six Local 306 members in front of the Times Square theatre, operated by the William Brandt interests. The police blotter gave the charge as shouting to patrons that the theatre was unsafe, blocking free ingress and egress, and refusing to stop these tactics when ordered by the police. Some of the men were paroled in custody of their attorney for trial.

Brandt Charges "Politics"

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association and a leading independent circuit operator, said that as a member of the ITOA committee he attended the merger conferences, and the committee "offered to give Local 306 anything they wanted to make a deal." After several snags, he said, the matter finally was referred to George E. Browne, president of the IATSE. Mr. Brandt charged that the present situation was due to the infiltration of certain political elements within Local 306.

"Local 306 does not want a merger," he went on. "This is the fourth time that the independent theatre owners have attempted to get together with the union, and each time the local has reneged."

Harry Glover, president of the Allied union, declared that his group "had cooperated with Local 306 in every manner possible in an attempt to bring about a settlement of the critical situation."

Glover Defends Allied Stand

"We went so far as to ask Mr. Browne to lend his services, and certain basic negotiations were then started," said Mr. Glover. "Certain elements within Local 306 were responsible for dumping the apple cart completely and placing Allied in its present position.

"Allied intends to fight in every legal manner to protect its members' jobs. The records will reveal that our picketing has been in strict conformance with the rules laid down by the law and the police. It is not without significance that not a single Allied picket was arrested during the entire campaign, despite the fact that Allied has picketed as many houses as Local 306 and will continue to do so."

"306 Bluffing," Says Kindler

Answering the Local 306 statement that Allied's objective is to cut wage scales, Mr. Glover said that "the decisions of the various courts involving cases in which Allied was charged with taking theatres away from Local 306 showed that the Allied scale is higher in each instance than the wage paid individual members of Local 306." He said this was the situation cal changes have been so numerous in the last few years that many working projectionists would not be able to pass the present tests, striking an analogy between this and lawyers of long practice who would not be qualified to pass the bar examinations given now.

Demands a Weeding Out

Mr. Basson believed, however, that steps should be taken to limit the influx of operators for whom there are no jobs and weed out those poorly qualified, both factors in the long-standing strife among Local 306, the so-called independent unions and the employing exhibitors. The surplus of licensed operators has caused the springing up of outside unions such as Allied and Empire State, which are thorns in the side of the IATSE unit.

With a view to stabilizing the situation, Mr. Basson's group is seeking a merger with Allied and Empire State, this for the time being taking precedence over the campaign for a new licensing system.

However, while Local 306 is sanguine over prospects for a three-cornered consolidation—which would give it complete control in the metropolitan area—the others are far from agreeable.

Empire said this week it had dropped all merger negotiations some time ago because Local 306 "had failed to live up to certain promises." Allied declared that a merger was not possible until the policies of Local 306 were reconciled to the others with respect to booth personnel, the local insisting on two men in a booth while the others maintain that one is sufficient, particularly in cases where the exhibitor's economic position or operating situation does not warrant an extra man.

Officials of Local 306 insisted this week that the merger negotiations, underway for about a year, will be consummated soon. Mr. Basson has taken the stand that no merger will go through with Allied unless Empire State enters the consolidation. He feels that many of the troubles and conflicts that have beset exhibitor-operator relations for years can be remedied by such a move.

5,000 Licensed, 2,500 Jobs

Mr. Basson estimated there are between 5,000 and 6,000 licensed operators in the city, with a maximum of 2,500 available jobs. Unemployed operators turn to whatever employment they can get, a large proportion driving taxis, while 300 receive unemployment benefits of $18 a week from Local 306. Those not affiliated with a union, or belonging to an outside union, may obtain work in a theatre for the duration of a strike or other labor difficulty.

The total of jobs available, as estimated by Mr. Basson, happens to approximate the number of members in three New York unions, Local 306 leading with 1,854, Empire State claiming 380, and Allied with some 300 members.

Now and then a new union pops up in opposition to the others, one, the National Theatrical Federated Union, Inc., announcing itself this week in letters to exhibitors soliciting employment for member operators, stagehands and musicians. David Krassner, signing himself as business agent, informed exhibitors his union's wage scale would "meet with the approval of every theatre owner."

Another group calls itself the United Sound Engineers, enlisting only projectionists. Joseph A. Teperson, an attorney formerly active in Empire State and who later organized Allied, is its guiding spirit.

3,619 Licenses, Says Davidson

Pointing out that he revamped the method of examining prospective operators in the early part of 1934, Commissioner Davidson said this week that "the net result was that in 1935, 147 candidates were examined, of which 64 passed and 83 failed. In 1935 3,619 licenses were issued, showing a decrease of 828 over the preceding year."

The commissioner's figures of operators licensed last year are at variance with the estimate of between 5,000 and 6,000 given by Mr. Basson. The union head pointed out, however, that his estimate of a maximum of 2,500 jobs available is on the basis of two men in a booth operation, but since a majority of theatres are one-man operations, even under Commissioner Davidson's figures there would still be a healthy surplus.

Commissioner Davidson enumerated changes made in the examining system as follows:

1. The examination period was increased from one-half hour to one hour.
2. Two new examiners were selected for their experience and efficiency and both were detailed to a motion picture apparatus factory to obtain first-hand experience.
3. A complete revision was made in the procedure of examination questions and subject matter.
4. Motion picture apparatus and equipment were completely overhauled with more modern parts and in keeping with safeguards against fire.
5. Portable instruments such as voltmeters, ammeters and motor generator sets were added for testing and technical purposes.
6. Curtailment was made in the number of examinations for the year 1935, from four examinations of one month each to two examinations of one month each.
7. A recording card was placed in each motion picture booth in all theatres with notations to be filled in by inspectors, showing date and time of his inspection and report of findings. More than 10,800 such inspections were made in 1935.
8. Regulations were changed regarding holders of licenses which have been allowed to expire, compelling them to qualify in a reexamination.

"As a result of this close supervision," said the Commissioner, "there was a reduction in the number of fires that occurred in the past three years in the various buildings where motion pictures are shown. In each case of a fire the operator of a machine was immediately summoned to this office and examined as to the cause of the fire and where negligence was found the license of the motion picture operator was either suspended or revoked, as the facts warranted.

No Loss of Life to Public

"The issuance of licenses to motion picture operators has been one of the functions of this department since 1908, and it is worthy of note that no record exists as to a single loss of life to the public resulting from a fire that developed in connection with the operation of a motion picture machine.

"There have been technical improvements made in the motion picture industry, such as talking pictures, which naturally involved new types of machines to provide for sound effects, but the activities of this department are concerned solely with the safety of the machines and the booths where the films are handled."

Operator Unions Renew 'Warfare'

in the entire city, with the exception of Loew theatres, "where the scale is very high."

Abraham I. Kindler, president of Empire State, the second independent union involved, charged that "Local 306 merely was bluffing in the merger negotiations, and never intended to go through with the consolidation."

Declaring that Local 306 officers had "played politics," Mr. Kindler said that the IATSE affiliate had promised six months ago that the merger would go through "in from two to four weeks." He said Empire State intended to picket Local 306 theatres, and "if they want a fight, we will give it to them."

Mr. Kindler said that after the negotiations started, Mr. Basson "insisted on a scheme of his own" and on the election of new officers for Empire State. The officers and executive board thereupon were replaced. After some differences among the new officers, Casper Ricca, president, later was impeached on charges announced by the union as "unwilling to cooperate with the other officers." Two other officials impeached were exonerated. Last week Mr. Kindler was elected to succeed Mr. Ricca.

Only the IATSE can bring about a merger, it was said by an Allied spokesman, and there will be no further discussions with Local 306.

Local 306 is picketing 21 theatres in the Bronx and Manhattan, 20 in Brooklyn and five in Queens.

3,000 Observe 50th Year Of Stagehands' Union

The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Theatrical Protective Union, Local 1, New York stagehands' union, was observed with a banquet at the Hotel Astor Sunday night, attended by about 3,000 persons.

James J. Brennan, who is serving his fifth term as president of the local, recalled that the organization—"the first real labor union in the history of the theatre"—had its inception at a secret meeting of 12 stage hands in a hall over an East Side saloon. The union's roster is now 1,600, the largest affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators.

Among other speakers were George E. Browne, president of the IATSE; Joseph N. Weber, president, American Federation of Musicians; Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser of the League of New York Theatres; Morris Gest, the producer, who once worked as a stage hand in Boston, and Edward Canavan and Jacob Rosenberg, officers of Local 802, New York musicians' union.

Robert Sherwood Wins Pulitzer Award for Play

The annual Pulitzer Prize drama award was given this week to Robert Emmet Sherwood, former motion picture critic, for "Idiot's Delight," his anti-war hit play in which Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt are now appearing in New York. "Honey in the Horn," a first novel by H. L. Davis, former cowpuncher, won the award as the best novel of the year. Each winner received $1,000.

Mr. Sherwood's play was chosen as the best of the current season by the advisory committee of the Columbia University School of Journalism, and the trustees of Columbia University confirmed the selection, along with the awards in the field of literature and newspaper work. The awards were announced Monday night by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the university.

The advisory board disclosed that it had lifted the restriction excluding previous drama winners from consideration. The restriction has been subjected to criticism and was believed to be a factor in the formation of the New York Drama Critics' Circle, which last month awarded its first annual prize to Maxwell Anderson for "Winterset."

The drama jury which assisted the advisory board this year was reported to have consisted of Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale, Mrs. Padraic Colum and a third person whose name was not learned. Elmer Rice, playwright, announced in December that he had refused an invitation to serve.

In choosing "Idiot's Delight," the advisory board and the trustees violated one of their own rules, that the award be given preferably to a play dealing with American life. The scene of the play is in Italy, against a background of impending European war.

Mr. Sherwood, by transatlantic telephone from his home in England, told officers of the Theatre Guild, which produced "Idiot's Delight," that he favored the awarding of the prize be placed in the hands of the Drama Critics' Circle. He was happy to receive the award, he said, but he would have refused it had the committee not removed the rule that barred prize winners of other years from the competition.

Although barely 40 years old, Mr. Sherwood has experienced success in great measure as a playwright. Of his eight plays, "The Road to Rome," "Reunion in Vienna," "The Petrified Forest" and "Idiot's Delight" have ranked among the foremost in American dramaturgy. The first three plays, and his "Waterloo Bridge," have been made as motion pictures.

He was drama editor of Vanity Fair, and editor of Life, for which he also wrote film reviews. He commented on films for the New York Herald and turned out a weekly cinema article for the New York Evening Post syndicate.

Mr. Sherwood in 1929 wrote the foreword to the first Motion Picture Almanac, published by Quigley Publications. Titled "My Ten Years Before the Screen," it recounted, in his characteristic dry, droll humor, his career as a film critic.

Griffith Circuit Convenes

The annual convention of managers and staffs of the Griffith Amusement Company, Griffith Theatres and the Consolidated Amusement Company was to be held May 5-7 at the Biltmore Hotel in Oklahoma City with more than a hundred theatres represented.

MISSOURI HIGH COURT HANDLING OUSTER MOVE

The Missouri supreme court en banc has assumed jurisdiction of the quo warranto anti-trust ouster proceedings filed April 15 by Attorney-General Roy McKittrick against General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., of St. Louis; Vitagraph, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, and RKO Distributing Corporation. Vitagraph, Paramount and RKO are licensed to do business in Missouri. General Theatrical Enterprises and Vitagraph, Inc., are subsidiaries of Warner Bros. Pictures.

The basis for the anti-trust proceedings before the state supreme court was the refusal of Warner, Paramount and RKO to supply motion pictures to Fanchon & Marco subsidiaries for exhibition in the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres in St. Louis, and also upon Kansas City zoning arrangements claimed to be unreasonably favorable to the following theatres operated by Fox Midwest Theatres: The Uptown, Plaza, Isis, Apollo, Warwick, Rockhill, Waldo, Linwood, Benton, Gladstone, and Vista.

The fact that the Missouri supreme court assumed jurisdiction on May 2 and that Attorney General McKittrick up to this time has not withdrawn his petition would indicate that the Missouri authorities plan to press the suit regardless of the peace agreement reached between Fanchon & Marco and Warner, Paramount and RKO. Probably there will be no dismissal of the state's quo warranto proceedings until there is readjustment of playdates in the Kansas City territory considered more satisfactory by the independent exhibitors.

Circuit Judge John W. Joynt of St. Louis has continued until May 21 Attorney General McKittrick's injunction equity proceedings filed April 15 against various Warner, Paramount and RKO corporations.

Legion Classifies Thirteen Current Pictures

The National Legion of Decency, in its new pictures reviewed during the current week, has approved, for general patronage or adults, all of the 13 pictures classified. None is classified as objectionable in part. The new productions and their classification are listed as follows:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage—"Alte Kameraden," "Avenging Waters," "Ein Ganzer Kerl," "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," "The Harvester," "Schwarzwaldmaedel," "Sundown Saunders." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults—"Absolute Quiet," "August Week-end," "Champagne Charlie," "The Last Journey," "Murder by An Aristocrat," "Roaming Lady."

RKO to Build Its National Theatre Setup

Leo Spitz, president of RKO and Keith-Albee-Orpheum theatres, is now hard at work on several deals whereby the national theatre situation of the company will be materially strengthened.

In some locations theatres will be dropped from the circuit entirely, while in others units will be added or pooled with the present holdings. Most of the activity is being concentrated in the East and Midwest.

At the present time, RKO operates about 100 theatres exclusive of those pooled with Walter Reade in Trenton and New Brunswick and with the major circuits in other cities.

Nate J. Blumberg, operating head of RKO, recently made a survey of the field and it is believed it is from his report that Mr. Spitz is weeding out the weak sisters and planning to solidify the circuit's status generally.

An initial step will dispose of two theatres in New Jersey and is scheduled to be consummated some time this week.

St. Louis MPTO Discusses Trade Conciliation Board

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois want some equitable basis for a conciliation board to settle trade disputes on a fair basis to all parties to a dispute. This became apparent this week when a meeting of exhibitors affiliated with the organization met at the Fox Screening Theatre in St. Louis, and voted unanimously in favor of this step.

The exhibitors in their discussions made it certain that they do not look with favor on the old arbitration boards set up by the former Film Boards of Trade throughout the country. The meeting also unanimously approved the action taken by the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in its meeting held in New York with the sales managers of leading producers and distributors.

Rogers Files Denial In Suit on "U" Sale

A general denial has been filed in the federal court in New York in connection with a suit for professional services brought by Gustavus A. Rogers, New York attorney, against his cousin, Charles R. Rogers, in connection with the sale of Universal Pictures to Standard Capital. A motion will be heard this week in which Charles R. Rogers asks that the plaintiff be compelled to include several other persons as plaintiffs in the action.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mrs. Fairbanks, the former Lady Sylvia Ashley, arrived in New York from Europe April 30th. After a short stay they planned to go on to Hollywood.

JUVENILE HOUR UNIT SHOWS START WHILE LEAGUE HEARS SUBSIDY PLEA

Columbia Plan of Units of Six Reels Each is Tested in Key Cities; Made for Children of 10 Years of Age or Under

To demonstrate once again that the motion picture industry is capable of solving the children's film problem without outside interference but with the cooperation of friendly better films groups, Columbia Pictures has evolved a plan for unit shows specifically designed for children of 10 years or under, to be shown apart from regular programs.

The series consists of specially assembled and approved short subjects, for community-supported juvenile matinees. The plan has been tested in various key cities in the last six weeks, and 10 such units, each of six reels and running approximately an hour, were announced as ready for exhibitors this week, on the eve of Columbia's 1936-37 sales campaign.

Culled from hundreds of shorts released by Columbia in the last three years, the films undergo inspection by socially-minded cooperating groups to meet all possible parental objection and undergo further revision if necessary. A woman's club or parent-teacher organization in each territory is to select one or more units, and they will be known as the "Buffalo unit," "Washington unit," and so on, although released nationally.

Answers Civic Units' Requests

Columbia considers this an answer to the demand for "certified" children's programs, which have been sought by parent and teacher organizations, and, says Columbia, it solves the exhibitor's headache in the bargain. Too, the exhibitor has a direct opportunity to "cash in" through the voluntary cooperation of the better films groups in promoting attendance at regular box-office prices. And the company believes that the idea will create considerable good will for the industry generally.

The "Happy Hour" entertainment plan, as it is called, "marks the motion picture industry's first effort to select from virtually hundreds of available subjects those of primary appeal to the young mind," according to Columbia. "They cover a wide range of material, including comedies, cartoons, sports, fantasies, travelogues and color subjects.

"The exploitation possibilities offer 100 per cent coverage since teachers' and parents' groups, all fully interested in this subject, reach virtually every child under 10 years in the neighborhood. And the good-will value accruing to the theatres from grateful parents should prove invaluable in building up consistent audience appeal."

Adaptable to Theatre Policy

The company emphasizes that the "Happy Hours" are designed primarily for neighborhood and suburban theatres, though the plan of operation may be adapted to each theatre's policy, running the films either at a special show or immediately preceding a regular program.

PICTURES' FUTURE IN EDUCATION: BRISBANE

According to Arthur Brisbane, nationally syndicated columnist of the Hearst newspaper chain, the future of the motion picture will lie in the field of education. "The source of future education is at Hollywood, producing pictures and sound that convey knowledge to the brain instantly," Mr. Brisbane wrote. "Devoted largely now to entertainment, the great work of the motion picture in the future will be education.

"From motion pictures the student will learn more in one week than he can learn from books in a year, and learn so that he will never forget," he concluded.

The 10 units now available bear the endorsements and unit designations of the Better Films Council of Buffalo, Albany Council of Women's Clubs, Philadelphia General Federation of Women's Clubs, Cleveland Cinema Club, and the state federations of women's clubs of New York, Massachusetts and Maryland. The endorsements are accepted by affiliated organizations in other territories, Columbia said.

Warm approval of the plan has been received from the graduate school of Boston University, the Motion Picture Council of the District of Columbia and other prominent groups.

40 Units for 40 Weeks

Columbia is selling forty units for forty weeks of service, though contracts are being written with a view to meeting exhibitors' individual situations and are inclusive of a cancellation privilege.

General attitude toward these contracts and toward the character of the project and the manner in which it is being conducted is said to be uniformly favorable, with the outlook promising for all points of view.

The units are sold consecutively by number, and no substitutions are permitted. The Columbia exchanges are instructed by the home office as to the deletions to be made before the films are released.

"All units are endorsed by organizations of national repute, are complete programs, approved not only for the quality of each subject, but arranged by the endorsing groups as to the running order of the program," according to Columbia. "Some of the clubs are even sending out, at their expense, literature praising 'their units,' and asking friends to patronize the theatres showing them.

"Each group is proud of its own unit, and

Tax-Supported Motion Pictures Is Prediction of Dr. Edgar Dale of the Payne Fund Before Committee at Geneva

Currently subjected to governmental attacks or control in a number of countries, the motion picture industry would become the target of governmental competition through subsidized films for children, under a plan submitted to the League of Nations by Dr. Edgar Dale of the Payne Fund, Inc.

A chief spearhead of the movement in the United States, Dr. Dale expounded his theories to the child welfare committee of the League, meeting in Geneva, at a session devoted to motion pictures, late last week.

The Payne Fund office in New York said this week that Dr. Dale went to Geneva also as spokesman for the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in his capacity of motion picture chairman. That organization has been sponsoring the plan for subsidized production, distribution and exhibition of films for child audiences, to be shown in schools and under other public or community auspices, in direct competition to the motion picture industry. He also represented, said the Payne Fund, the National Council of Teachers of English and the American Council of Education. The American Council also has been turning its attention to the production of films specifically for America's boys and girls.

Predicts Tax-Supported Films

Tax-supported motion pictures were foreseen by Dr. Dale.

"Our public libraries are based on the principle of public taxation for child welfare," he told the League committee. "Our public parks return a dividend only in child welfare. It is my conviction that we will more frequently turn in the future to publicly supported recreational activities for children and youths and that the cinema will occupy a place in such a scheme."

He also urged development of special films for children similar to special children's books, and submitted a study of this subject in which he suggested that several nations work together through the League of Nations to subsidize the making of such films, Denmark, for instance, producing the Hans Christian Andersen tales, Germany the Grimm's tales.

Dr. Dale recommended that other countries follow the lead of the United States in teaching motion picture appreciation as part of the regular secondary school curriculum, said press reports. American research, he said, quoting the Payne Fund studies, showed that children absorbed and remembered an "astonishingly large" proportion of the information that films presented and that they tended to accept as true what they saw on the screen.

It was also found, he declared, that films

we would be breaking faith with those organizations and cause profound embarrassment if substitutions in any unit were permitted.

Tried Out on Week Days

"Although at first we thought it was to become exclusively a Saturday matinee proposition, we since learn of some exhibitors who are trying it out during the week, at 4 o'clock matinees after school, and some others on Sunday afternoons. 'Happy Hour' seems to fit most of these situations. Summer resorts are especially keen about it.

"Columbia exchanges are booking only those units already endorsed. Special local interest may be stimulated by screening the units to groups of club women.

"'Happy Hour' programs are first offered to Columbia accounts for acceptance or rejection. This name has been copyrighted as a trade-mark. Though an exhibitor may be our account and books six shorts from us other than the 'Happy Hour' units, he still would have no right to the name, for the reason that permitting it would cause a breach of confidence on our part with the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America. We have gone on record that no 'Happy Hour' units would ever be played by any exhibitor unless they are first passed by an authorized committee of a federated club or allied organization."

Special Mail Campaign

Sample one-sheets and mimeographed press sheets are supplied exhibitors. Columbia also cooperates in campaigns with heads of local clubs, clergymen, mothers, teachers and others interested.

"We do not encourage or want any big so-called downtown 'Happy Hour' showings," Columbia declares. "We prefer that suburban or community theatres show them.

"The idea is new. Children's matinees are not, but this is, because it is designed solely for children 10 years and younger. We have been informed by exhibitors that this is opening up a new audience. Tots of such tender years do not attend picture shows unescorted, and it has been reported that many adults attend with the children and enjoy the shows as much as the youngsters.

Placed Before Regular Matinees

"While we have advocated that these 'Happy Hour' shows be separated and not shown in conjunction with the usual lengthy afternoon shows, and suggested that these be put on from 11 a.m. to noon, which many exhibitors are doing, we find also that many exhibitors are putting on the units one hour before their regular matinees, from 1 to 2 p.m. The General Federation of Women's Clubs requests that the house lights be turned on immediately after the 'Happy Hour' showings, thereby indicating that the special showing is over, and those wishing to leave or take their children out may do so. The lighted house keeps the youngsters from crying and wanting to stay to see more show. It was felt that a one-hour show for the little children was enough. Besides, the rest of the show which would follow would not be endorsed by these clubs and anyone remaining would do so on his own responsibility."

Rodgers Gets Feist's MGM Sales Mantle

William F. Rodgers, formerly eastern sales manager, has been appointed general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to fill the executive position left vacant by the recent death of Felix F. Feist. Mr. Rodgers was one of Mr. Feist's sales cabinet.

Thomas J. Connors, formerly in charge of southern and Canadian sales for the company, was, at the same time, appointed eastern sales manager. Edward M. Saunders continues as western sales manager. All three of the sales executives are extremely familiar with each other's methods, having worked closely along with Mr. Feist for many years.

The appointments were made known, following the return to New York from the coast of Al Lichtman, by Nicholas M. Schenck, president of the company. Mr. Lichtman, since joining the organization after his resignation from United Artists, has cooperated with Mr. Feist on sales, concentrating his attention on situations calling for special handling. Mr. Lichtman has had no specific title, acting as assistant to Mr. Schenck.

Mr. Rodgers was born in Camden, N. J. He began his selling career with the Havana American Cigar Company and was later connected with General Film Company, Mutual Film Corporation and Triangle.

He has been with MGM for a number of years. Originally a sales executive of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, he became eastern sales manager of the enlarged company with the merger in 1924.

Mr. Connors and Mr. Saunders have been with the organization from the days of the Metro Pictures Corporation, prior to its acquisition by Loew's.

Establishes Dance Award

Arthur Murray, president of the National Institute of Social Dancing, has established an annual award for the dance film designated as best of the year by a judicial committee consisting of Whitney Bolton, Kate Cameron, Don Herold, Irene Thirer, Regina Carewe, Russell Patterson, Larry Reid, Eileen Creelman and Dean Cornwall.

might markedly change children's attitudes toward foreign peoples, peace and war and criminals.

It was deplored in New York this week that the League committee's acceptance of Dr. Dale as a "motion picture expert" was in the absence of representatives from the organized American industry.

As director of motion picture research for the Payne Fund, heavily endowed for the purpose of surveying child welfare, Dr. Daly, with Dr. W. W. Charters of Ohio State University, conducted the Fund's studies on which were based the report of the Motion Picture Research Council relating to the effects of films on children, which has been widely cited by reform groups and proponents of film industry regulation and control. By vocation Dr. Daly is associate professor of the bureau of educational research of Ohio State University.

Deplores Film "Sentimentality"

Among other speakers at the Geneva sessions, Alan Cameron of the British Film Institute declared that sentimentality is the "worst sin" films can commit for the British school child, according to cabled dispatches. Presenting a report analyzing 2,500 school essays, he said that British children recorded a dislike for Greta Garbo and Mae West and criticized Mickey Mouse as "becoming too sophisticated." The children wanted their historical films accurate, he said, and they liked broad comedy and action, especially with backgrounds of everyday life. They also showed a livey interest in machinery and experiments of all sorts.

Miss Charlotte Whitton, representing child welfare groups in Canada, proposed an international exchange of juvenile films.

The League's child welfare committee published answers to a questionnaire showing that the United States was one of the few countries in which there was no general restriction on the admission of children to picture theatres, the others being the Irish Free State, Estonia, Siam and Nicaragua. Most European countries impose age limits, according to the survey, and in many children under 16 are admitted only to those theatres showing films especially authorized for them by censors.

Loew Returns Home After South American Openings

Arthur Loew, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer foreign department, returned to New York by air from South America late last week after visiting Lima, Peru and Santiago, Chile, where he attended to final details in connection with the opening of new theatres in those countries.

David Lewis, newly appointed manager of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office in Japan, left New York this week for Los Angeles, from where he will sail for Tokyo.

Sam Eckman, head of the company's activities in England, is due in New York shortly for his annual visit, and Arthur Field, assistant to Laudy Laurence, is scheduled to arrive in a week or so from Paris.

After Lazare Kaplan, the New York diamond cu and his son, Leo Kaplan, had completed the delicate of cleaving the million-dollar 726-carat Jonker dia yesterday as a preliminary to cutting the great sto a dozen smaller stones, Mr Kaplan's first act was phone his wife, who was anxiously waiting at thei 800 Riverside Drive

"Momma, it's a 'success,' I told her," Mr Kaplan said today in the Rockefeller Center offices of Harry Winston, present owner of the Jonker diamond "Then I remembered to call Mr Winston and tell him it was a perfect job without any splits or cracks in the pieces"

The drama of the cleaving process may be glimpsed in what Mr Winston had to say about the risk of cleaving the great stone.

"My insurance brokers informed me that it was utterly impossible to get coverage on Mr Kaplan's work," Mr Winston said. "Lloyds of London refused to write a policy saying that the risk of splitting the diamond was too great. A mistake might cleave it the wrong way or shatter it, costing a hundred thousand dollars and forever damaging the magnificent stone. We had to trust to Mr Kaplan's skill."

A score of reporters, photographers and newsreel men gathered in Rockefeller Center today to witness the cleaving of a million dollars' worth of crystallized carbon known as the Jonker diamond, fourth heaviest rough stone ever unearthed by man.

However, Lazare Kaplan, bald and mustached Belgian, confessed he had gone ahead and split the 726-carat stone into three neat pieces last night.

That thought struck a chill into the heart of Harry Winston, the owner, who has the diamond insured for $1,000,000 but had to take his own chances with the risky business of cleaving

It fell into three pieces—just as he'd planned—and he breathed a huge sigh of relief

The three pieces will be cleaved again to make twelve cut and polished diamonds, ranging in size from 11 to 165 carats. That will take about six more months, and Mr Winston expects the whole group to be worth about $2,000,000

Mr Kaplan pasted the three pieces together and obligingly did a bit of synthetic cleaving for photographers.

CATACLYSMIC ROAR OF WRITERS IN HOLLYWOOD FAILS TO RUMBLE

Not a Scratch on Studios Though Guild Endorses Move for Shutting Down of Contracts—But Only in Principle

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

The roar that was expected to outdo the eruption of Mount Krakatoa in cataclysmic destructive force failed even to rumble at the meeting of the Screen Writers Guild in Hollywood Athletic Club last Saturday night. True the Guild, as represented by approximately half its membership, voted to ratify the administration and endorsed controversial Article Twelve, which called for a shutting off of contracts after May 2, 1938, and amalgamation with writers in all other organized fields. In doing so the accompanying and ensuing action was about as dynamic as the bursting of a not very big soap bubble in a forgotten Sahara oasis.

For months, and particularly during the immediately preceding week, the event had been ballyhooed as a meeting the results of which would shake Hollywood to its foundations. Hollywood still is standing on the same old foundations and though the meeting did produce two concrete results, apparently the most important thing it accomplished was to prove emphatically that too much ballyhoo is something not always desirable.

In ratifying Article 12, about which as much argument had been voiced as was the lot of ill-fated Article 10 of League of Nations memory, the Guild voted in principle to endorse the plan of its board of directors to seek amalgamation with the Authors League and the Dramatists Guild. It also voted to endorse the other Siamese Twin of Article 12, which in effect has for its intent that no member of the Guild shall sign a writer's contract with a producer that shall have a time essence extending longer than May 2, 1938. Both votes are subject to conditions; in the case of amalgamation, a committee is to be appointed to confer with officers of the Authors League which shall endeavor to procure changes in its constitution which will guarantee the Screen Writers Guild continuance of its identity and separate control over its own peculiarly domestic affairs. This, in actuality, is all that proponents of amalgamation sought. In relation to contractual agreements with the producers, the door is still left open for the amicable settling of any disputes from a standpoint of basic wage theories or working conditions. Authority was voted the board of directors to proceed with negotiation of this question with producers, and bettors today are willing to give any kind of long shot odds that there never will be such an occasion as a May 2, 1938 "Der Tag."

From an atmospheric look at the production effects surrounding the meeting, one got the impression that the Los Angeles police department got the date and locale mixed up. May 1st is the time and the celebrated Plaza is the spot where the police uphold the law in the Angel City to the tune of much club swinging and skull cracking. At any rate an odd looking conglomeration of harness bulls and plain clothesmen were on hand, all experts in the art of applying the heat, to deal fittingly with any reds, radicals, agitators, communists or bolsheviks that might appear. The cops looked sad and downcast when no enemies of law and order showed up.

DISSENSION STRIKES RANKS OF WRITERS

Sharp dissension struck the writers' ranks in Hollywood this week following Saturday night's sedate gathering on the closed shop issue, and numerous resignations from the Guild were reported. To silence rumors that nearly 100 members had quit, the Guild issued a statement admitting 17 resignations, apparently by those objecting to the Guild's closed shop vote. The resignation letters will be answered by Lawrence Beilenson, Guild attorney.

Elsie B. Wilkins, the Guild's assistant secretary, tendered her resignation. Among others quitting were Sam Engel, Bess Meredyth, Kenneth Earl, William Conselman, S. G. Duncan, Mark Kelly, Howard Ellis Smith, Gene Fowler, Milton Sperling, all of Twentieth Century-Fox, and Carey Wilson, William Slavens McNutt, Leon Gordon and E. Richard Schayer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The Guild is reported to have approached the Society of Publicists and Newspaper Correspondents in Hollywood, with 120 members, to join the "one big union" of the Authors League.

Prior to the meeting Hollywood was in a turmoil. Just about anyone who could write or talk hopped into the arena with an expression of opinion as to what would happen to the industry and its individuals, particularly the writers, if the Guild voted for Article 12. Early in the week the Motion Picture Producers' Association let go a blast in which the members promised to oppose the movement in every way and to use every resource at their command to defeat its purposes. Conservative newspapers in Los Angeles, an open-shop town, laid down a terrific editorial barrage. Darryl F. Zanuck and Ernest Pascal, president of the Screen Writers Guild, engaged in a letter exchanging debate. Irving Thalberg expressed his opinion. Walter Wanger had his say. Dudley Nichols indulged himself in an elaborate bit of pro Article 12 cheer leading. Bess Meredith hired attorneys to give voice to her analysis of the situation.

Individual Producers' Preliminary Sessions with Writers Leave Police "Holding the Bag" Instead of Clubs

The buildup was great. The show it was ballyhooing really promised to deliver the goods. Then, Saturday morning, something happened. The producers who had been billed to be the villains of the melodrama got smart. Strategically, without any advance fanfare, meetings of writers employed in the various individual studios were called. Individual producers explained their attitude towards the Guild and advised as to what they thought would be the result of amalgamation. These were the blows that killed the menace of revolt. Word spread. Writers that might have been teetering in the balance found stable ground upon which to stand. Even the most enthusiastic proponents of Article 12 who had been insisting upon its adoption without a single change cooled off considerably. Everybody, but the cops, who had read into the script became aware that instead of a melodrama being booked for the evening performance a sort of light comedy drama would be staged.

After the curtain went down and it came time to write reviews of the show, it was easy to see why nothing that has much significance in relation to present or future motion picture industrial trends happened. Nobody, producer, or writer, group or individual, wants any trouble; nobody, no matter on which side of the fence he stands, wants anything that smacks of the semblance of a strike. While the script was in preparation such a happening might have been the vision of a few. But writing difficulties arose.

When advocates of direct action ascertained that the extras who would be necessary for the complete extravaganza — organized labor in the studios, the electricians, carpenters, painters, teamsters, and so on—were pretty well satisfied with the present parts they were playing and had little desire to become the spear-carrying rabble for the featured players, they realized that now was not the proper time to write in any scenes that would call for any grabbing-the-bear-by-the-tail action.

But so well exploited an attraction had to take the boards on scheduled time. There was no time for a preview or try-it-out-on-the-dogs advance show. Manfully the various players read their lines. The cause of the Screen Writers Guild was glorified. So were its aspirations for future mutual benefit in cooperation with the Authors League and Dramatists Guild painted in glowing colors. But always with the proviso that Little Nell Screen Writers, like Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," should always be Little Nell. The producer is still Simon Legree, but apparently from a consideration of the dialogue and action, he's not such a horrible Simon, inasmuch as it looks as if there's quite a possibility of reforming him along lines the Screen Writers Guild would like to see him reformed. Anti-climaxed by a sequence that showed that no matter how the actors had interpreted their lines in rehearsal, an atmosphere of good fellowship and harmony built up prior to the big scene, the voting took place. In relation to the remainder of the performance, the suspense here was pretty much mechanical. When it was announced that by a vote of 193 to 25 amalgamation had carried, the cast which was its own audience cheered.

With the curtain ringing down with the announcement that Ernest Pascal had been re-elected president of the Writers Guild and Vice-President Seton I. Miller, Secretary E. E. Paramore and Treasurer John Grey continued in office, and James K. McGuinness, Samson Raphaelson, Bert Kalmar, Edwin Justus Mayer, Sidney Buchman, Mary McCall, Jr., and Wells Root were to be included in the board of directors, the consensus seemed to be that the show had been overwritten and oversold.

SOVIET FILM MAY BRING CENSOR LEGALITY TEST

National Council Offers to Carry Fight to U. S. Supreme Court for Detroit Guild

A United States Supreme Court test of the validity of local film censorship on constitutional grounds will be undertaken by the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, if the Detroit Cinema Guild accepts its offer to intervene in the fight against the banning of Russian films on the ground of Soviet propaganda.

For some years the council and its affiliate, the American Civil Liberties Union, have sought an opportunity to go to the Supreme Court to determine the legality under the federal laws of city or state censorship. Fighting censorship of the stage and screen in all forms, the council has offered its legal services to the Guild, which is awaiting a decision from the Michigan supreme court on its appeal from the action of Police Commissioner Heinrich Pickert of Detroit, who rejected "The Youth of Maxim."

Clifton R. Read, secretary of the council, said he believed this would be a good opportunity to obtain the supreme court's opinion on official censorship in general. He said attorneys for the organization have made a thorough study of local and state censorship and maintain that it would be invalidated by the highest tribunal on the ground of violation of the fifth amendment to the constitution by taking the property of citizens without due process of law.

The claim would be that censor boards confiscate a producer's or distributor's property without due process by depriving them of a hearing in open court.

Attorneys for the organization insist that if there are objections to a film, the issues should be decided by a jury, and they declare censorship as now constituted, by a board or local official, to be "star chamber proceedings."

Such a censor law as that in Detroit holds many dangers for the motion picture industry, according to the Council, because it gives the local police censor the power to ban any film under his own broad interpretation of the ordinance.

The Council maintains that while the fact the subject of the Michigan fight is a Russian film may have been an influence in the Wayne County circuit court's decision upholding the police commissioner, and may even be a factor in the state supreme court's attitude, that the United States Supreme Court would not be swayed by such consideration.

Mr. Read said that the Council has gone on record as opposing the Pettengill-Neely bill and all other moves for a federal commission, regulation, censorship or control of the motion picture industry. In such matters the organization offers its support to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, he said.

The National Council recently opposed the New Jersey legislative move for state censorship, and currently is conducting a fight for removal of the "morality regulations" posted at theatres by Paul Moss, New York City commissioner of licenses, banning female nudity and obscenity on the stage under threat of license revocation.

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser to the League of New York Theatres, and Elmer Rice, playwright, have been active in the matter, and the Council now is asking Mayor F. H. LaGuardia to direct Commissioner Moss to remove the rules posted backstage, or at least make it clear that they are advisory and cannot be enforced by revocation of license.

"We have carried on a none too successful scrap with Commissioner Moss over this for some time," said Mr. Read. "Our first victory was the decision of the New York supreme court appellate division upholding our position, in the Republic burlesque theatre case, that the commissioner could not revoke a license for obscenity except after a court conviction under the penal code."

BOOK REVIEW

THE MOVIES ON TRIAL, compiled and edited by William J. Perlman. The Macmillan Company. 254 pp. $2.50.

Says the publisher in his jacket description, "This volume is the offspring of the agitation for cleaner movies." Says the compiler and editor, "Now that public indignation against the movies has subsided, an attempt has been made to present, between the covers of this volume, the issues involved in the current controversy." Whereupon are presented nineteen articles on the motion picture as an art, a business, an entertainment, a moral force, an instrument of civilization, a device of the devil and practically everything else, seventeen of them prepared especially for publication in this book and two reprinted from periodicals.

Of the nineteen ladies and gentlemen whose articles are presented, two or three find in favor of the motion picture and one or two give it the benefit of what they seem to regard as a somewhat shadowy doubt. The others let fly at the subject with hammer and tongs and, when they have finished, the reader has within convenient hand all of the pattern indictment, accusation and vilification that has been uttered, printed or otherwise promulgated against the screen in the forty years of its never dull existence. Barbs are shot from as many angles as there are writers, and documentation, save in the case of defending minority, is characteristically subordinated to eloquence.

Most convincing among the articles on the favorable side of the by no means balanced balance is "What Do Children Think of the Movies?" by W. E. Blatz, director of St. George's school for child study at the University of Toronto, a thoroughly documented report of his investigations over a long professional career and a valuable bit of material for industry spokesmen to have at hand for ready use. Most formidable on the negative side is the slick-phrased "Chewing-Gum Relaxation" by William Allen White and most violent is Upton Sinclair's "The Movies and Political Propaganda".

Contributors of other articles are: The Most Reverend John J. Cantwell, D.D.; Edward G. Robinson, actor; Congressman Raymond J. Cannon of Wisconsin, author of the National Censorship bill; Judge Ben B. Lindsey; Professor Benjamin Horace Hibbard of the University of Wisconsin; City Magistrate Jonah J. Goldstein of New York; Don Maruis, writer; Professor Emeritus William Lyon Phelps of Yale University; Edwin Schallert, dramatic critic of the Los Angeles Times; Seymour Stern, writer, editor and scenarist; Gabriela Mistral, poetess; Marios A. Zeitlin, Spanish instructor; Brock Pemberton, stage producer; Wolf W. Moss, Theatre Guild director; John Haynes Holmes, Community Church founder, author and editor; Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein of the Free Synagogue, New York; and Chapin Hall, correspondent of the Los Angeles Times.

Editor and compiler William J. Perlman is described in his own Addenda as "a playwright and ex-producer. Author of 'My Country', 'The Broken Chain', 'The King Amuses Himself' and other plays. As co-producer of 'Juno and the Paycock' he introduced Sean O'Casey to American audiences". The publisher further qualifies him as "connected with the Cinema Research Bureau in Hollywood".

The book is plainly printed and sloppily edited and occasional footnotes attempt, not very successfully, to keep the more forthright denunciators within the confines of plausibility, at least statistically.

FANCHON & MARCO ACTION AGAINST DISTRIBUTORS SETTLED OUT OF COURT

Government Suit Dismissed When Warner, RKO, and Paramount Agree to Supply Product; Ten-Year Period Covered

Warner Agrees to Withdraw from Disputed Theatre Operation; Sol Rosenblatt Revealed as Mediator in Settlement

The most bitter contest engaged in between the large interests and the independents since the Motion Picture Patents war came to a sudden and dramatic conclusion last week when the Fanchon and Marco circuit in St. Louis won a 16 months fight in the courts to obtain product from major distributors.

Terminating a legal conflict instituted by the United States government and costing the defendants a reputed $1,060,000, Warner Brothers, RKO and Paramount agreed to terms of a petition presented by Russell Hardy, special assistant to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, and signed by Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York on April 30th.

The stipulation, which was approved by the court after a five-minute hearing, assures Fanchon and Marco of Warner and RKO product in their St. Louis theatres for a period of ten years. The stipulation does not bind Paramount for a specified period but states that the film company will not refuse to sell to Fanchon and Marco for any reason other than price, against which eventuality is set up an agreement whereby buyer and seller will each appoint a representative who will select a third party and act in concert with him in arbitrating the difference.

Theatre Operation Involved

In addition to obtaining the service franchises, Fanchon and Marco will take over operation of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres, Warner first-run houses, and twenty theatres in St. Louis controlled by the Warner subsidiary, St. Louis Amusement Company. Under terms of the deal, Warner will be paid $150,000 for leases on and equipment of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres, and Fanchon and Marco will pay Warner $195,000 for its 42 per cent interest in the St. Louis Amusement company plus $40,000 for the Hi-Point, a subsequent-run. The sum of these amounts is payable over a period of ten years, payments to start with the taking over of control, which will follow immediately upon ironing out of details.

Negotiations culminating in settlement of the case, originally instituted in 1934, were started on April 14th with Sol Rosenblatt acting as mediator. That date and April 28th appear on two letters addressed to him by Albert Warner discussing terms. These, together with two letters from Harry C. Arthur, vice-president of Fanchon and Marco, addressed to Mr. Rosenblatt and signifying acceptance of terms submitted, are attached to the stipulation signed by Judge Knox.

Judge Affirms Settlement

The stipulation was signed by Bruce Bromley of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swain and Wood for Warners; Louis Connick of Simpson, Thatcher and Bartlett for Paramount; William Mallard, general counsel of RKO, and George S. Leisure of Donovan, Leisure, Lumbard and Newton for RKO; Louis Nizer of Phillips and Nizer for George J. Schaefer, Sam Dembow, Jr., and Ralph Kohn; and Russell Hardy and Walter Rice for the Government. Because RKO is in reorganization, it was necessary for Federal Judge William Bondy to approve the ten year franchise and the signatures for the company.

MAJORS CHALLENGE GOVERNMENT RIGHT

Defendants in the Government's suit against Warner, RKO, Paramount and subsidiaries question motives of the Department of Justice in a brief submitted May 4th, asking that the Supreme Court review the order of Judge Molyneaux dismissing without prejudice the criminal action brought in the Federal District court at St. Louis. Granting of the review is opposed by the government on grounds that the Supreme Court is without jurisdiction and that the government has an absolute right to dismiss its petition.

After reviewing the steps leading up to the dismissal of the case in St. Louis, the brief says, "If the government is correct in its contention that its right to dismiss without prejudice is absolute, then it can continue the process of bringing suit, trying its case, and then dismissing it before it finally rests, thus indefinitely harassing and annoying the defendants with successive unsuccessful efforts to prove them guilty, first in one court and then in another, on a charge of which they have already been acquitted. By this ingenious procedure the government is at liberty to inflict upon the innocent persons pecuniary loss and damage far in excess of the maximum $5,000 fine provided by Congress for those found guilty of violating the Herman law."

Although all the discussions leading up to the settlement had taken place in the offices of Sol Rosenblatt, he was not present at the final hearing and was represented by his brother, Herman Rosenblatt, in an official capacity. The motion for dismissal of the Government's case was made by Attorney Hardy, who set forth that the petition showed the restraint of trade complained of in the previous petition to have been removed. Attorney Leisure cited Judge Bondy's approval of the RKO ten year franchise and signatures and raised the question of Attorney Hardy's authorty to act. Judge Knox decided in the affirmative and announced, "If the various attorneys are satisfied with the plan, I see no reason why I should take a contrary view," after which he signed the papers.

The Background

"The decree of dismissal," said Attorney Hardy later, "is based on the understanding that the arrangement establishes a situation in harmony with the law and consistent with the essential purposes of the action." Dismissal was "without cost to any party as against any other party" and the Government reserved right to restore the suit to the docket of the federal court if the defendants failed to fulfill the agreement.

The background of the protracted litigation brought to an end by Judge Knox's decision is familiar trade information. With the downcurve of the depression the New Grand Central, Ambassador and Missouri theatres in St. Louis went into receivership and possession passed to the bondholders. Chief among the bidders for operating control of the theatres were Warner Brothers Circuit Management corporation and Fanchon and Marco. The Fanchon and Marco bid was accepted.

According to the allegations made by Fanchon and Marco, which became the basis of the Government suit against Warner, RKO, Paramount and 30 individual members of these and subsidiary companies, the Warners entered into a working agreement with RKO and Paramount which had as its purpose the depriving of Fanchon and Marco of first-run product from these sources in St. Louis. Additional assertions made by Fanchon and Marco were to the effect that threats had been made to build and operate competing Warner theatres, to be operated at a loss if necessary to force relinquishment of the three houses named, and that these threats were carried out and such losses sustained.

Criminal Action Dropped

On the basis of these assertions and charges that an agreement in restraint of trade existed, the Government started action in a criminal suit against the named defendants in the latter part of 1935. This followed a civil action in which the defendants had been acquitted. Witnesses were called and much testimony taken, but the Government sought and obtained a dismissal of the suit without prejudice when it became evident, according to report, that certain individuals whose testimony would be vital to the government case had not been named.

On February 25, this year, Attorney General Cummings filed suit in New York, naming additional defendants and revising the charges in certain particulars. A complete brief of the Government case was published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of February 29th, page 49. This is the suit dismissed by the action of Judge Knox last week.

St. Louis film circles are eyeing with interest the developments in the local situation brought about by the change in operating control. Although details have not been fully worked out by Fanchon and Marco executives, it is believed that they will operate the Ambassador, Fox and Missouri theatres as first-run houses for the remainder of the present season. These are modern houses, the Ambassador seating 3,018, the Fox 5,038 and the Missouri 3,514.

With the beginning of the new season it is expected that the St. Louis, a 4,200 seat house, will join the Ambassador, Fox and Missouri in the first-run field. What will be done with the New Grand Central, the original de luxe theatre in St. Louis and flanked now by the Missouri and the St. Louis, is regarded as problematical. The house, which seats 1,860, has been dark for many months.

It is understood in St. Louis that Harry Koplar, veteran local theatre man, will be associated with Fanchon and Marco in the operations of the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Music Found as True a Part of "Showboat" as Band in a Parade

Songs Play as Definite a role as Dialogue and Action, Says O'Sullivan

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

From the first "shot" of Captain Hawks' Cotton Blossom pulling into shore—whistles tooting, band playing, flags flying, crowd cheering—"Showboat" starts rollin' along on a cruise of romance and melody with its cargo of heart-throbs, whimsies and laughs, as fresh and as enlivening as a decade ago when it made its first appearance on the Broadway stage, and, in many respects, vastly more entertaining.

Edna Ferber's story, lyricized by Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein II, already has achieved the status of a classic in Americana. First produced on Broadway in 1926, it ran for 17 months. Followed a year in London, 1928-29. After eight months on the road it was revived in New York for an additional eight months in 1932. It also was brought back to London for six months. Transcribed for a national radio hour, it has become an institution. The glamor of tradition is beginning to descend on the original cast of the stage production, many of whom reenact the same roles in the screen version.

This film transcription of the stage piece is additional proof of the effective scope of the screen in the fluent exposition of dramatic narrative in motion, and emphasizes the musical motivation that is integral with such a story. This is as evident in the objective as well as the subjective sense; in the purely descriptive and incidental as well as in the interpretive and emotional; for the era of showboats was a blithe, a picturesque and a colorful one, and "Here comes the Showboat!" was the occasion for spontaneous jubilation in the river towns of an earlier day. Sentiment flourished unashamed, and lyrical outbursts in the form of balladry, folksong and dance rhythms were unpremeditated and naive. It is the portrayal of this unsophisticated, if lusty and adventurous, era that makes "Showboat" an authentic, moving musical-romance of real human appeal.

"Showboat" follows no formula. It floats on a melodic stream, stopping here and there to put on its show for the public, while behind the scenes of the itinerant theatre is acted out the real drama. That drama revolves around Magnolia Hawks (Irene Dunne), daughter of genial Captain Andy Hawks, proprietor; Julie (Helen Morgan), the leading lady of the troupe; Gaylord Ravenal (Allan Jones), dashing, mysterious riverboat gambler who joins the troupe as leading man when Steve (Julie's husband) and Julie are compelled to leave the boat; and Kim, the daughter of Magnolia and Gaylord, who carries on the theatrical tradition after their departure.

The familiar "Make Believe" song is sung in duet by Irene Dunne and Allan Jones.

The music is as much an essential of the real romance and drama of the story as it is of the exhibitionalism of the theatrical entourage. The fustian of the make-believe and the spectacle of the ballyhoo parade to blaring brass, thudding drum and crashing cymbal to make a showboat holiday; but there is little of the synthetic in the lyrical sequences that serve as melodic links in the chain of the narrative. The songs in general are as much a part of the fabric of the story as the dialogue and action.

"Ol' Man River", superbly sung by Paul Robeson and given an inspired camera interpretation of the lyrics, assumes the aspect of a tone-picture of imaginative sweep and deep feeling. A background chorus swells the refrain into a sonorous and thrilling climax. It is in such mode of treatment that the audible screen transcends all other mediums—a method too rarely utilized by screen producers, although illimitable in its scope.

Song hits of the original stage production that drop in naturally and motivate the story include those two lilting ballads made famous by Helen Morgan, "Can't Help Lovin' That Man" and "Bill"; the duets sung by Irene Dunne and Allan Jones, "Make Believe" and "Why Do I Love You." New numbers written by Kern and Hammerstein for the Universal opus are "Gallivantin' Around," sung by Miss Dunne and utilized in a thematic manner; "I Have the Room Above Her," a duet by Miss Dunne and Allan Jones, and "Ah Still Suits Me," a characteristic lazy ditty sung by Robeson. Those two old favorites of the nifty nineties, "After the Ball," by Charles K. Harris, and "Goodbye, My Lady Love," by Joseph Howard, are introduced with much eclat in appropriate spots.

The stage play has been extended into another generation, showing Kim (Magnolia's daughter) as a grownup girl who has inherited her mother's talent for singing and dancing. Memories of the old showboat days are brought back to Magnolia when Kim makes her hit on the stage singing the same song, "Gallivantin' Around," that her mother did on the showboat; and on the night of her great triumph as a star, Kim is the means of reuniting her mother and her father, Ravenal, who had disappeared when Kim was a child.

The story of "Showboat," which follows the original version, plus the amplification which the screen affords and the extension mentioned, requires no repetition here. Concisely stated, without the music there would be no "Showboat." There isn't any parade without a band. When "Showboat" is recalled, it is "Ol' Man River," "Can't Help Lovin' That Man," "Make Believe," "Cotton Blossom," "Bill," "Why Do I Love You," and the rest of the music that sticks and that will be sung and played through several generations.

Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein II have maintained the standard of the original score in their new songs for the picture. Victor Baravelle, who supervised the music for Universal, was musical director of the New York stage play. He and Director James Whale have done a very excellent job.

165% GAIN CLAIMED FOR "DREAM" ON TWO-A-DAY NEIGHBORHOOD SHOWS

13 RKO New York Subsequent Runs Complete Showings of Warner's Shakespeare Film; Ad Budget Is Raised 50%

When neighborhood theatres depart from a continuous-run policy to play Shakespearean fantasy at greatly advanced prices on a schedule of two reserved-seat performances a day—that is news.

Thirteen RKO subsequent-run houses in Greater New York, mostly in outlying sections, by Thursday completed showings of Warner's "Midsummer Night's Dream" on a policy which is precedental. Allowing for the higher admissions, grosses soared, on an average, to 165 per cent above normal, the RKO home office said, while the over-all advertising budget was boosted fully 50 per cent.

The problem, of course, was to direct the sales appeal sufficiently to impress the neighborhood patron that here was a picture worth the price. With the groundwork laid by the campaign on which Warner Bros. reputedly had spent $400,000 in advance of the Broadway opening, RKO officials considered that the most effective approach would be to the schools, women's clubs, the cultural and better films groups which widely had given the picture their endorsements.

Many "Sell-Out" Performances

That line of attack was adopted in the first demonstration, said RKO, of what can be accomplished for a picture on a wholesale basis with community cooperation. As a result, many performances were complete "sell-outs," despite the fact that the picture had completed a 14-week engagement at $2.20 top at Warner's Hollywood theatre on Broadway earlier this season.

RKO raised admission scales generally from a matinee price of 25 and 35 cents to 55 cents, and nights from a usual 65-cent top to $1.65 top, with seats also available at 55 and 83 cents. In a few situations the top was set at $1.10. All passes were suspended during the runs.

District and house managers carried out their share of the promotion, and Warners, dividing the gross as well as advertising costs 50-50 with RKO, gave its cooperation.

School Support Obtained

School support for a picture in New York City, called a rare occurence, was obtained when RKO emissaries explained that they asked the privilege because the Shakespearean film had been approved by numerous groups and that the picture had considerable educational value.

Dr. Harold Campbell, superintendent of city schools, and Monsignor Joseph McClancy, superintendent of the parochial school system in Brooklyn and Long Island, with large Catholic populations, agreed not only to make the upper grade and high school students cognizant of the showings, but to permit the sale of blocks of tickets and allow the children to attend the matinee performances en masse during school hours.

A three-day test was launched April 21 at the 81st Street theatre on upper Broadway and at the Alden in Jamaica. The results were considered sufficient to warrant extension of the policy for a three-day run at the Kenmore in Brooklyn and two-day engagements at the 58th Street, 86th Street, Coliseum, Fordham, Franklin, Proctor's New Rochelle, Tilyou, Dyker, Flushing and the Strand, Far Rockaway.

OTHER FILMS MAY GET TWO-A-DAY SHOWINGS

Extensive two-a-day showings of "Midsummer Night's Dream" at advanced admissions is stimulating consideration of a similar policy for other major productions.

The Loew home office is understood considering plans for roadshowing "The Great Ziegfeld" in its Greater New York houses, following an indefinite run at the Astor theatre on Broadway at $2 top. Circuit heads were reported closely checking the results of the Warner picture in New York neighborhood houses. The office of Joe Vogel, Loew national circuit head, said, however, that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture is expected to remain well into the summer at the Broadway run.

Warners have announced that "Anthony Adverse" and "The Green Pastures" will, "failing unforeseen eventualities," be presented as two-a-day, reserved-seat attractions.

Two independent circuits, the Century and the Walter Reade, have booked "Midsummer Night's Dream" into a number of houses on Long Island and New Jersey. Consolidated Amusements is considering similar bookings.

Managers Address Clubs

House managers addressed various neighborhood organizations and succeeded in selling blocks of tickets. In some instances women's clubs were given a 10 to 20 per cent commission for local philanthropies for selling large blocks.

Father James Cunningham, publicist interested in films, spoke on the radio in the picture's behalf, and, among others, Mrs. Rita C. McGoldric of Brooklyn performed yeoman service. A friend of better films since 15 years ago when she was instrumental in founding the motion picture bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, which she formerly headed and of which she is now the honorary chairman, and formerly conductor of the "School and Screen" department in the HERALD, Mrs. McGoldrick, without compensation, contacted various women's clubs, school organizations and numerous individuals. She addressed a personal letter to the priests and sisters in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Long Island, enlisting their support, and followed up with telephone calls.

She pointed out, in effect, that this was a test to determine whether a picture of the type of "Midsummer Night's Dream" in neighborhood theatres under the formulated policy and at higher prices than the patrons are accustomed to pay could be successful.

Campaign Directed at Schools, Women's and Better Films Groups Brings Many "Sell-Outs" at Advanced Prices

"If we support it," she declared, "we many expect and demand more of this type of picture. If we are negligent, then we may not hope for this same outstanding quality to be maintained."

The Brooklyn Tablet, diocese newspaper with a large circulation, printed a letter in this vein from Mrs. McGoldrick and in a box on the first page published Monsignor McClancy's endorsement of the showings for the parents and students of the upper grades and high schools.

Students Crowd Theatres

Mrs. McGoldrick asked for action, and she got action. The parochial schools in Brooklyn and Long Island, where she concentrated her personal contacts, sent youngsters to the RKO theatres by the trolley-load and bus-load. Schools reserved seats in wholesale lots, averaging in the neighborhood of 400. One house manager was delightfully amazed when he received a phone order for 489 seats for the following day. Block sales to the schools were at 40 cents a ticket for 50 or more, and at 50 and 55 cents for less than 50 tickets.

Scenes of high excitement occurred Wednesday morning at the Kenmore theatre in Brooklyn when 3,200 parochial school students showed up with paid-in-advance reservations to fill every seat in the house.

A priest conducting a mission at a church in Brooklyn requested the 900 men attending to ask as an obligation that some member of their families attend a showing of "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Organizations Enlisted

Mrs. McGoldrick enlisted Catholic women's organizations and the Motion Picture Council of Brooklyn, of which she is an executive member, and they enrolled other groups and cooperated in bringing the message to the schools. Study guides on the picture were distributed in the classrooms.

As to the results, they show, said Mrs. McGoldrick, "what all these years of building public relations have done to bring about a consciousness in support of good pictures."

Special Advertisements

RKO increased its newspaper expenditure heavily, running larger than normal space in six metropolitan dailies, and using special media, including Catholic and community papers and such publications as the Columbia Spectator, published on the campus of Columbia University. The copy was dignified, emphasizing the Shakespearean origin, Max Reinhardt staging, the cast and local sponsorship.

Division managers working with the RKO home office on the campaign were Charles McDonald, Louis Goldberg, Russ Emde and Larry Grieb.

The RKO home office concluded that the public will support an occasional innovation of this nature if the proper approach is projected, and that if wide community cooperation is obtained, success may well be assured.

Exhibitor Merger In New York up to Members May 13

The fate of a merger between New York's independent Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and Independent Theatre Owners Association will be placed in the hands of both memberships on May 13th.

Iowa-Nebraska and the North Dakota theatre owners' associations met this week, and New Jersey's Allied set August as the date for its annual convention, probably at Atlantic City.

Ratification of the T.O.C.C.—I.T.O.A. merger by the latter exhibitor organization will not be made until May 13, it was learned this week. A committee composed of Maurice Fleischman, Louis Meyers, Hyman Rachmil and Bernard Barr, appointed at the last I.T.O.A. general meetting to work out the details, will report to the board of directors this week.

The board, in turn, will report to the members at the regular May 13 session at the Hotel Lincoln. At this conclave the membership will formally ratify the amalgamation. Harry Brandt, head of the I.T.O.A., meanwhile, this week, was reelected to head the organization for another year.

Although Howard S. Cullman, trustee of the Roxy Theatre, is being sought to head the combined units, it is understood he will not accept the post, having been offered another proposition which he is said to be considering.

Independent theatre men of Iowa and Nebraska attended the one day legislative conventions held in Des Moines and Omaha last Monday and Tuesday. Leo F. Wolcott, of Eldora, Iowa, presided.

A seven point trade practice program was adopted which opposed publication of box-office figures, commended agencies responsible for clean family pictures; demanded not less than 25 per cent cancellation; recommended that feature pictures be held to reasonable length so that a two hour program might have a sufficient balance of short subjects; demanded elimination of score charges and pledged support to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in its effort to secure standard and understandable contracts and to forward the formation of local conciliation boards.

Salesmen who seek to promote opposition theatres in situations where they are unable to secure representation, regardless of whether these situations warrant or can stand the additional competition were assailed at the meeting of the North Dakota Theatre Owners Association at Jamestown.

Frank Wetzstein of Mandan was elected president of the organization. Other officers chosen were: Mrs. Maude Weaver, Edgely; Mrs. E. A. Moe, Oakes, vice-president; John Kennelly, Mandan, secretary; Gus Wingreene, Bismarck, treasurer; C. F. Hansen, Bismarck, auditor.

Directors are: G. A. Troyer, Rugby; W. Johnson, Dickinson; J. C. Snyder, Williston; Mrs. Helen Lehman, Enderlin; F. P. Aamoth, Fargo; A. B. Cooper, Lisbon; John Piller, Valley City; R. D. Joos, Jamestown; Don Tracy, Carrington; Julius Overmoe, Hillsboro; C. F. Hansen, Bismarck.

SOVIET BUYS ANOTHER $100,000 OF EQUIPMENT

Purchases Total $220,000 in First Four Months of Year; Verlinsky Sailing with Films

Prospects of large-scale motion picture equipment purchases by the Soviets in the United States were borne out this week when Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino Corporation, announced that orders had risen to $220,000 in the first four months of this year.

At the same time he said that Russian importation of American films is to be increased.

On the strength of the findings by the first of two Russian film commissions that American studio and projection apparatus is "the best in the world," Mr. Verlinsky indicated that further large orders would be placed here.

Purchases in the first three months of 1936 totaled $120,000, and additional equipment to the value of $100,000 was bought last week, Mr. Verlinsky said. This compares with a total of $120,000 of such purchases here in the entire year of 1935. Heretofore, the bulk of purchases had been from France and other European countries.

Two members of the second five-man commission from Moscow are now in Hollywood gathering ideas preliminary to construction of the "Russian Hollywood" on the shores of the Black Sea.

The Soviet studios may go extensively to color, having developed their own process, and to that end color cameras were ordered from Bell and Howell Company, Mr. Verlinsky said. Other purchases made last week included Mitchell sound cameras, Simplex projector parts from International Projector Corporation, and Eastman and Du Pont raw stock.

Process Screens Built

Also, two process screens are being built in Hollywood for the Russian studios.

Bell and Howell portable and RCA projectors, of the 16 mm. type, are favored for the 40,000 additional installations called for by the Soviet five-year plan by the end of 1937. This recommendation is contained in the report of I. Irsky, projection engineer, submitted to Moscow headquarters following his recent survey in the United States.

Mr. Verlinsky plans to sail May 28th for Russia on a mission in which he hopes to "sell" the government-administered film trust on increased importation of Hollywood films, which has been negligible since the American industry went wholly to sound.

Taking U. S. Films Along

He plans to take along a number of pictures, and has already bought "Strike Me Pink," United Artists release featuring Eddie Cantor, and several Disney cartoons. Whether "Things to Come" (United Artists) will be available depends on permission from Alexander Korda, the producer. Negotiations also are under way for "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," Paramount all-color production; Columbia's "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and Warner's "The Life of Louis Pasteur."

The contracts are for the use of negatives for one year, during which the Soviet administration will determine the number of positive prints required for the vast country after the initial major runs. Distribution rights are purchased for five years.

All importations are subject to the Soviet film censorship.

In Moscow Mr. Verlinsky will view a number of films destined for American distribution, among them "Nightingale, Little Nightingale," the first Russian all-color production, which is to open there soon.

Option to Nathanson By Famous-Canadian

Shareholders of Famous Players Canadian Corporation have approved a bylaw which permits President N. L. Nathanson to purchase 10,000 shares of Famous Players stock annually for a period of five years, the purchase price being graded. For the first year's purchase the price will be $13 per share. This will continue upward to $17 per share for the fifth year.

If Mr. Nathanson retires from the company, or if he should die, the option will lapse.

An excellent public response has been reported on the new bond issue of Famous Players. All of the three per cent and three and one-half per cent serial bonds, aggregating $2,100,000, were sold immediately, it has been officially announced, and there has been a heavy demand from trust, insurance and other companies as well as private investors in all parts of Canada for the four and one-half per cent bonds maturing in 1951. The amount of these bonds is $5,000,000. No less than 22 bond houses are handling the issue.

Few Deletions by Boston Board

The latest group of pictures to be passed upon by the Massachusetts state censor board finds 35 pictures getting a clean slate and three features being deleted in part. The showing of money during a poker game has been eliminated from "Special Investigator," and five exclamations involving the word "God" from "Things to Come." "Tomorrow's Children," Bay State Film Company release, was cut considerably.

Goldwyn Undergoes Operation

Samuel Goldwyn, convalescing at Doctor's Hospital in New York from intestinal toxemia, underwent a minor operation for an incomplete obstruction on Wednesday. Mr. Goldwyn is expected to leave the hospital in a week or ten days, after which he will return to Hollywood.

FATE OF DUALS PLACED IN HANDS OF EIGHTY MILLION THEATREGOERS

Warner Asks 2,000 Newspapers to Place Before Readers Problem of Long Productions in Double Feature Programs

Aim Is Not to Approve or Disapprove of Doubles But to Solve Present Handling of Films Over Average Length

Eighty million Americans who attend motion picture theatres are being asked to decide the fate of double bills, one of the most perplexing trade problems of a quarter-century.

If the answer spells the doom of the dual, then longer features will be an immediate result, thus enabling the large companies to proceed freely with the filming of classics which require lengthier footage than the average dramatic story. As the situation stands now, full commercial success of the long feature in the 14,000 or more operating theatres is jeopardized by the existence of double bill policies in more than half of the houses, preventing complete exhibitor attention to the long classics or long special productions.

In an effort to obtain a definite, intelligent answer to the problem, Warner Brothers Pictures this week began a national survey of the public attitude toward the practice.

The survey will not be for the purpose of approving or disapproving double features, it was emphasized by Major Albert Warner, vice-president, but an impartial, unbiased attempt to learn the mind of the public.

Every interested person will be invited to present an opinion. Motion picture editors of more than 2,000 daily newspapers will be asked to report the attitude of their readers and to invite frank expressions from them. Representatives of high school and collegiate publications will be polled. Cooperation of members of approximately 1,000 social and civic organizations will be sought.

"Motion picture producers are severely handicapped because of lack of knowledge as to whether they must limit their films to an absolute maximum length, such as is suitable for double feature bills," the Warner management said.

"Significant, perhaps, is the fact that the running time of the ten films selected by the review members of the National Board (of Review) as best in 1935 averaged 106.1 minutes," the corporation pointed out, adding: "By contrast, the running time of 545 films averaged 72.5 minutes. Thus, the 'ten best' pictures averaged 33.6 minutes, or more than 46 per cent longer than the 545 'cross section' films. Whether this reflects a strong public approval of longer pictures is not certain."

Confirming the trend toward longer footages which the outstanding productions of the time appear to require was MOTION PICTURE HERALD's presentation, on April 11th, of: "The Case for and Against Longer Feature Pictures," in which some 30 pictures running 100 or more minutes were listed. That list follows:

STRONG PICTURES NOT TO INTERRUPT DUALS

Despite the list of strong pictures available within the next few weeks, the Loew's and RKO circuits in greater New York will not discontinue their double feature policy.

Among the pictures Loew's intends to double are "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," "These Three," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and "Show Boat." None of these pictures, however, will be grouped on the same program. Although no decision has been reached on the policy to be pursued in the booking of "The Great Ziegfeld," it is reported that Loew houses may show it on a two-a-day policy with increased admissions, following the plan adopted by Warners with "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

RKO within the next few weeks will dual "Under Two Flags" as it did "The Country Doctor."

"We who make motion pictures must constantly seek to learn the will of the public or we fail in our duty," declared Major Warner. "The public is not passive but ever changing. The problem (of the double bill) is complicated for Warner Brothers because their release schedule includes four productions that of necessity must have more than average running time. They are: 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Anthony Adverse,' 'The Green Pastures' and 'The Charge of the Light Brigade.' In greater or less degree, other companies have the same problem."

June 15th Deadline

Warner Brothers launched the poll in the capacity of both producer-distributor and exhibitor. Its theatre minds realized that they cannot arbitrarily abolish the practice of dual features at the company's theatres merely to please the production division with its long features. Hence the poll.

"The cooperation of all persons interested in motion pictures is asked," Warner's home office statement added. "The survey is to be completed by June 15th. Results will be made public as soon thereafter as possible."

Originating in New England, some 15 years ago, the double feature policy swept to popularity during the depression years as a box office stimulation. It became strongly entrenched in various territories and when general business conditions began to improve and it appeared that the incentive was no longer required, efforts to abolish the policy were unsuccessful, except in a few spots, because the independent subsequent-run exhibitors refused to accede on the grounds that the stage show and other benefits enjoyed by the downtown deluxe operations and the first-runs required that the subsequents offer a second feature in order to compete.

Chicago is practically the only large city where a citywide ban on the practice has withstood the years. It was unsuccessfully attempted in a dozen other territories.

Duals Win Court Fight

Unable to make any progress in inducing the exhibitor to stop the practice by persuasive methods, distributors last year began to include clauses in their sales contracts prohibiting the dualing of features embraced in the contract with any other feature. Independent exhibitors in Philadelphia took the matter to the courts on grounds of conspiracy in restraint of trade. They won, after a bitter fight, and the distributors were ordered to cease and desist from attempting to control the practice by contractual limitation.

Letter to 2,000 Newspapers

Further explanation of the machinery of the nationwide poll, and the reasons for its existence, are contained in the letter which is now going forward from Warner Brothers to the editors of more than 2,000 American newspapers, as follows:

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EDITOR:

"For two years the question has repeatedly been asked: Does the American public want single or double features at motion picture theatres?

"To date, there has been no answer of a conclusive nature. About 50 per cent of the 14,000 theatres in operation in the United States are showing single features, the other 50 per cent double bills. We believe there is need for a definite answer to this question both from the standpoint of the motion picture industry and the public.

"Accordingly, we are undertaking a national survey and, because you are directly identified with motion pictures, we request your cooperation, promising in return to report promptly the results to you.

Up to Newspaper Readers

"Do your readers want single or double features? Will you put the question to them through your columns, invite them to vote and relay the results to us? There is strong divided sentiment and thousands of your readers undoubtedly will welcome the opportunity to register their opinions.

"We believe two simple questions cover the field. They are, first, 'Are you in favor of BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 20.—(A) What is a "photoelectric metal"? (B) What is the effect of oil on insulation? (C) Upon what various things does a perfect film splice depend?

Answer to Question No. 15

Question No. 15 was: (A) Explain the construction and operation of a loudspeaker. (B) What is push-pull amplification? (C) Should rheostats be located in the projection room?

To Section A, Evans and Rau reply, "A magnetic loudspeaker consists of a horseshoe-shaped permanent magnet located to the left of the windings, which latter consists of two coils of wire, respectively the voice and speech coils. The primary field is supplied by the permanent magnet. Through the center of these coils extends an armature consisting of a small bar of metal that is pivoted to the center of the diaphragm. The diaphragm employed in most monitor speakers consists of a rather flat paper cone. Current fluctuations in the voice coil tends to increase or decrease the strength of the magnetic field, which same causes the diaphragm to vibrate exactly in accordance with the strength of the field."

W. C. Brown says, "A magnetic speaker of modern design consists of a cone of paper, a permanent magnet and one or more voice coils. The cone, which may be almost any size, has an arm of metal attached to its center, which is acted upon by the field of the permanent magnet before mentioned and the field set up by the voice coil. This causes the diaphragm to vibrate (move in and out) with frequency corresponding to the frequency of the voice coil current."

J. R. Prater says, "Most magnetic loudspeakers, especially the type commonly used for projection room monitors, have a stiff paper diaphragm made in the shape of a cone from six to 12 inches in diameter. Since the magnetic fields produced by the voice current cannot operate directly upon the paper diaphragm, a metal armature is connected to the center of the cone by means of a very small lever. This armature consists of a small bar of metal mounted on a pivot in front of a permanent horseshoe magnet, so that it may move a short distance either toward or away from the magnet and in so doing move with it the paper cone. When the speaker is idle, the armature is constantly attracted toward the permanent magnet, but is held away from it by the cone. The inherent elasticity of the cone exerts a pull on the armature, which opposes that of the magnet, and thus the armature remains balanced between two equal forces. The wire which carries the voice current is wound around the pole pieces of the permanent magnet in two or sometimes in three, coils called voice or speech coils. When the current in the voice coils creates a magnetic field which strengthens that of the permanent magnet, the armature pulls the center of the cone inward. When the voice current opposes and weakens the permanent magnetic field, the elasticity of the cone pulls its center outward. The large surface of the cone enables it to move a considerable body of air, thus producing volume and supplying sufficient load for the disphragm without a horn. While this type of magnetic speaker will produce volume enough for most projection rooms, too much volume will cause the armature to move so far that it will strike the pole pieces and rattle."

(B) Dale Danielson replies, "Push-pull amplification is that type in which two identical tubes are placed in one stage of the amplification, so connected that each grid is biased with the same grid bias. The input to this stage is most commonly through a transformer, the grid of one tube being upon one leg of the secondary, and the other grid on the other leg. As the grid current of one tube swings in one direction, the opposite effect is being produced upon the other grid. This in effect produces a very large plate swing upon the tubes as a whole without producing appreciable distortion."

Barney DeVietti explains it thus, "By push-pull amplification is meant a stage of amplification whereby two vacuum tubes are used in one stage instead of just a single tube. The two tubes constituting a push-pull stage are connected together in such a manner so as to divide the load between them. That is, when the plate current of one tube increases, the plate current of the other tube will decrease and vice versa. From this action is gained the derivation of the word push-pull because that is exactly what happens. A push-pull stage tends to increase sound quality and it will deliver a greater undistorted output than will a single tube."

(C) J. R. Prater says, "Rheostats other than those of small capacity used to control the field current of motor-generators should not be located in the projection room. Ballast rheostats used directly in arc circuits generate a large amount of heat, which may make the projection room very uncomfortable in hot weather. Then there is the ever present danger of film touching hot grids or coils and starting fires whenever the film is handled. The proper location for rheostats is in a well ventilated room adjacent to the projection room."

John J. Cuddy replies, "Rheostats should not be located in the projection room. The reason for this is that they generate much heat, thus adding to the temperature of the room. If, however, they are placed in the projection room, they should never, under any circumstances, be placed on the floor, as their possible contact with film will create a serious fire hazard. Rheostats should be preferably placed in a room near the projection room proper, and an air vent leading to the outside air should be provided. They should not be placed near any inflammable material."

Since the answers to those questions were published, acceptable answers to Questions No. 13 and 14 have been received from D. Danielson; to No. 14 from E. Toedte, H. C. Goodman and N. Gray; to Nos. 12 and 13 from A. F. Sprafke. Acceptable answers to Question No. 15 have also been received from S. Evans and C. Rau; D. H. Danielson; A. Sprafke; B. DeVietti; W. C. Brown; G. E. THREE CIRCUITS REPORT BIG PROFIT INCREASES

KAO, B. F. Keith and Balaban & Katz Show Gains; RCA's Earned Profits Under Last Year

The auditors of three more corporations in the motion picture business this week disclosed the further increases in box-office receipts, while a fourth showed a decline, as follows:

Keith - Albee - Orpheum Corporation earned net profits of $247,049 in the first 1936 quarter, compared with $28,954 in the corresponding period of 1935.

B. F. Keith Corporation earned net profits of $238,326 in the first 1936 quarter, compared with $29,820.

Balaban & Katz Corporation earned net profits of $638,134 in 1936, compared with $425,477 in 1935.

Radio Corporation of America, owner of the National Broadcasting Company and half-owner of RKO, earned net profits of $1,286,691 in the first quarter of 1936, compared with $1,618,024 in the corresponding period of the previous year.

For the 52 weeks ended March 28, 1936, KAO and subsidiary companies showed a net profit of $648,167.49 after all charges. This is equal to $10.07 a share on the 64,304 shares of 7% cumulative preferred stock now outstanding. Compared with the same period last year the profits were:

	13 Weeks ended March 28, 1936	13 Weeks ended March 30, 1935
Profit before provision for depreciation and income taxes..	$521,103.59	$252,203.99
Depreciation	184,014.55	210,414.04
	$337,089.04	$ 41,789.95
Provision for income taxes	63,040.00	12,835.00
Net profit after all charges	$274,049.04	$ 28,954.95

For the 52 weeks ended March 28, 1936, B. F. Keith Corporation and subsidiary companies show a net profit of $673,151.21 after all charges, including depreciation and provision for income taxes, as follows:

	13 Weeks ended March 28, 1936	13 Weeks ended March 30, 1935
Profit before provision for depreciation and income taxes..	$426,751.48	$204,923.81
Depreciation	142,275.08	169.103.68
	$284,476.40	$ 35,820.13
Provision for income taxes	46,150.00	6,000.00
Net profit after all charges	$238,326.40	$ 29,820.13

Balaban & Katz Corporation earned $638,134 in 1935 after deduction of all charges, President Barney Balaban reported at the annual stockholders meeting in Chicago. This figure is the best since 1931 and is equal, after regular preferred dividend requirements, to $1.72 a share on the common stock. In the preceding year the net profit was $425,477 or 92 cents per common share.

Consideration of resumption of the common dividend will have to wait until the end of the year. Mr. Balaban said that the management hopes to retire the balance of the preferred stock in a year or two. One-half of the preferred stock had been called for retirement on May 1st.

Mr. Balaban said that business is better, but added that the recent cold spell cost the circuit $100,000. The company's bank loan, he said, aggregates approximately $3,000,000 after giving effect to the loan made for retiring preferred stock. Publix Great States Theatres, a subsidiary, has retired $250,000 in mortgages through the bank loan and has paid off back dividends.

Another development of the meeting was the election of John E. Otterson to the post of director, succeeding George J. Schaefer.

Radio Corporation of America's net profit for the quarter ending March 31 was $1,286,691.27. This compares with a net of $1,618,024.74 for the same quarter of last year.

Dividends paid and declared on the A preferred stock totaled $431,148.03. Last year for the same quarter the dividends amounted to $4,950,740.66. Surplus at the end of March 31 was $13,256,642.70, compared with $10,185,638.38 for the same quarter in 1935.

Helen Kane Loses "Betty Boop" Appeal

The appellate division last Friday unanimously affirmed an order of the New York supreme court dismissing the complaint in a $250,000 damage suit brought by Helen Kane against Max Fleischer, Fleischer Studios, Inc., and Paramount Publix Corporation.

The complaint, in addition to damages, asked for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from using without Helen Kane's consent any pictorial representation of her in films or animated cartoons, particularly the Betty Boop pictures. She also asked for a temporary injunction to enjoin the defendants from unfair competition. The decision of a higher court pointed out that during the course of the trial of the complaint before Justice E. J. McGoldrick the complaint was dismissed on June 23, 1934, as to Max Fleischer. The decision was an appeal from that dismissal.

Paramount Shifts Managers

A drastic shakeup among Paramount branch managers in New England began this week. Al Kane was shifted from New Haven to Boston, where he formerly was located. J. H. Stevens goes from Boston to Portland, Me., to handle the office there. Edward Ruff has been transferred from Portland to New Haven. The changes were made by William Erbb, Paramount district manager with headquarters in Boston.

"Ziegfeld" in 42 Theatres

Seventeen additional roadshow dates for "The Great Ziegfeld" for the period from May 7th to 22nd will bring to 42 the total of engagements played. The picture had its world premiere at the Astor, New York, May 8th.

Fate of Doubles In Public's Hands

having two features shown at motion picture theatres?' and, second, 'Why?'

"Let us explain briefly how the present situation affects our company. We have either completed or in production four important pictures —'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Anthony Adverse,' 'The Green Pastures' and 'The Charge of the Light Brigade.'

"Do audiences prefer two hours and 15 minutes of 'Anthony Adverse' as an evening's entertainment or two shorter films which, with the usual newsreel, shorts and trailers, probably will total four hours or more? Should 'Anthony Adverse' arbitrarily be cut to fit double feature programs?

Not Seeking "Crank's" Views

"Do audiences want another picture on the same bill with 'The Green Pastures' and, if so, must it be trimmed to an inflexible limit?

"Producers particularly need accurate guidance. Must they hold every production, including truly important ones, within an absolutely rigid span? Or should they be permitted to make longer films if it is necessary to tell the story adequately and if every minute provides genuine entertainment?

"From one standpoint, there is much in favor of the double feature policy. It sharply increases the demand for films, brings more bookings, stimulates the market for all kinds of pictures. But all this does not answer the question: 'What does the public want?'

"We therefore ask your assistance because you represent the public. We are not seeking the opinions of cranks or professional viewers-with-alarm. We are seeking to learn what is in the minds of intelligent men and women such as read your columns. Only from them, and through you, can an authoritative answer come. They attend movies, are interested in their improvement, in bettering screen entertainment generally, and we ask you to give those persons the opportunity to speak their mind.

"We desire to complete the survey by June 15th and we ask that you send us a summary of replies from your readers on or before that date. The results will be reported to you as rapidly as possible.

"The success of this survey, we believe, will constitute a genuine service to the millions who find pleasure in motion pictures."

GB Signs Lorre, Bennett

Peter Lorre, who recently completed "Secret Agent" for Gaumont British, has been signed for another picture by the company, according to Jeffrey Bernerd, production head recently arrived in New York from Hollywood. Constance Bennett, who did "Everything Is Thunder," and who returned to America last week, has also been signed for another role.

International Exposition Set

The fourth annual international cinema exposition will be held in Venice, Italy, August 10-30. Producers from all parts of the world will again participate, it has been announced.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador-Conn

VALLEY OF WANTED MEN: Frankie Darro, Grant Withers, Roy Mason—An independent picture with spots of poor recording. Nothing unusual about this production and nothing new, but it has its moments as all other pictures do. A picture that is passable as a second feature for weekend dates. Played at Ideal Theatre, April 15-16.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Columbia

DON'T GAMBLE WITH LOVE: Ann Sothern, Bruce Cabot—The old complex that still stands, with love in the title. They expect sophistication in a high degree when the word appears. Hence, it does not appeal to the sons of toil that we depend upon. Outside of that it is just another program picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HEROES OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard, June Gale—A typical Maynard western. Did average business. Our audience found it passable entertainment. You can depend on Columbia to bring you good westerns. In my opinion I think that Columbia produces the best program pictures on the market. Played New Liberty Theatre, April 3-4.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Michael Bartlett—Played it weekend to satisfied customers. Columbia did a real job for us exhibitors, for which we thank her. This picture is worth special exploitation on the part of the exhibitor and deserves honorable mention. Give us more of these, Columbia, and it "will happen many nights." Play it by all means. It's got everything.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

YOU MAY BE NEXT: Ann Sothern, Lloyd Nolan —Dealing with radio piracy. Lack of names that mean anything hurt the picture. Nolan is not known. The picture is fair and will go on a weekend and probably satisfy the not too critical.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—An excellent sea story. Several patrons told me they liked it better than "Mutiny on the Bounty" as there was not so much brutality in evidence. However, the business on this picture was just average. Played April 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Excellent air drama. Did better than average at the box office. Played April 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—I can't see where this picture could be compared with former ones from this team, although it is a good show.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER: Kay Francis, George Brent—This seemed to please most of the people.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd —Good western that everyone enjoyed. The B. O. says o. k., too. Played March 31.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Gaumont British

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Another very pleasing musical from G.-B. Did average weekend business at my house in spite of the very cold weather.—James F. Doyle, Dickinson Theatre, Fayette, Mo. Small town and college patronage.

RHODES, THE DIAMOND MASTER: Walter Huston—Had a big Sunday crowd on this picture and they enjoyed it. The picture, while British, can be sold to a large audience. Get behind it and you will make some money. Perfect print and sound. Played April 19-21.—James F. Doyle, Dickinson Theatre, Fayette, Mo. Small town and college patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS: Robert Donat, Madeline Carroll—This is one of the most amusing pictures that I have had the privilege of playing in a long time. Played it on Bargain Days and the public ate it up.—James F. Doyle, Dickinson Theatre, Fayette, Mo. Small town and college patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Here is a picture of the future. People looked forward to it and were well entertained.—James F. Doyle, Dickinson Theatre, Fayette, Mo. Small town and college patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—A deserving picture in every respect, well cast and beautifully done. A perfect booking for National Music Week. Your club women will support it and it's real entertainment for everyone—C. F. Hansen, Paramount Theatre, Bismarck, N. D. General patronage.

ONE FRIGHTENED NIGHT: Mary Carlisle, Charlie Grapewin—Not so good. Only fair program picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton. Ala. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—Excellent cast in a thoroughly excellent production that pleased and pulled to better than average midweek business. Running time, 98 minutes. Played April 8-9.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—I think this is a good small town picture and that it pleased all who attended, but we ran into bad weather nights and barely paid expenses. Running time, 98 minutes. Played April 3-4.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor—A real good musical which did only average business. No fault of the picture if you have a musical town, but our patrons can't even whistle a tune so they came out asking when we were going to have another western.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—The Hollywood version of the famed operetta did not fare too well at the box office nor with the payees. Typical Laurel and Hardy gags, but for some reason this failed to find favor with our patrons. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 10-11.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Right up our alley. They ate it up, as Laurel and Hardy are our national heroes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Very fine picture of its type. Not suitable for a small town. Very poor box office reaction. Should be passed up where possible.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Good picture. Bad business.—Sammie Jackson. Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Dandy picture which did no business. The weather was slightly off but no reason for such a disappointment at the box office. It didn't pay rental.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Rich production that the exhibitors are proud to play; the only complaint was it didn't follow true to the story. As I never read the story, I can only say it did business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—By far the strongest drama for men we have shown this year. Used this one to wind up the prison's present movie season. (In fact, it was a post-seasonal attraction booked in answer to numerous requests.) Made to order for our type of audience, it went over 100 per cent. Extreme cruelty, discipline, hardship, and human stamina, with just enough humor sprinkled through to round it into the best picture of 1936. To those who have been fortunate enough to read the Nordhoff and Hall trilogy, the work of Charles Laughton as Captain Bligh was superb. We owe MGM our thanks for letting us have this for our finale. Running time, 133 minutes. Played April 25th.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—A rough and rowdy picture, and I'll take a few more like it. Harlow does a nice job in this one and so does Tracy. Late in playing and business down for some reason but not the fault of the picture. It has a bang up good story and moves right along, well directed and snappy dialogue.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Harlow in her platinum heyday never meant a thing to this situation. And now that she has changed the color of her hair it seems if we are to judge by this picture she means even less. A very poor vehicle for her. She seemed at loss to know what it was all about. Tracy saved the whole thing, but all in all, the patrons plainly showed they were not interested enough to turn out. Running time, 94 minutes. Played April 19-20-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Oregon. Small town and rural patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow. Spencer Tracy—Jean Harlow in just another one of her pictures, and Spencer Tracy in the same type of "smart aleck" role which soon gets tiresome in picture after picture. Little Mickey Rooney's performance got more laughs from the audiences than any other member of the cast. This is just a fair picture that drew average business at the box office. This picture is good for small town audiences. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 10-11.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy. Spencer Tracy—A mystery drama about a bunch of stolen pearls, and sure the stars put it over in a very good and interesting way of entertainment. Spencer Tracy and Myrna Loy sure played their parts to perfection. Running time, nine reels. Played April 19.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy. Spencer Tracy—Same old gangster story. Wonder if they'll ever stop. Lost money on this picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy—A very good piece of work. A rather different part than those generally played by Myrna, but she shows her versatility by doing an excellent job with it. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 17-18.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—Fine picture. No drawing power. Business off on it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Paramount

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Tom Brown, Sir Guy Standing—A great show, lots of music and good action and excitement on the ocean. Play it and you will be glad you are in the show business. Running time, nine reels. Played April 15.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman—Whoever figured out that this was a special entitled to top allocation sure needs his head examined. It was only a good program picture with us and the drawing power of Crosby is almost zero here. Didn't take in film rental. Running time, 92 minutes. Played April 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Another good one in the Hopalong Cassidy series, all of which have proven popular with our patrons. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Oregon. Small town and rural patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—Audience seemed to get a kick out of this nonsense. Gross above average. Played April 23-25.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon—Wonderful show.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—An excellent comedy. A little far fetched in spots. Played April 9-11.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael— A show that is different, full of pathos and drama, good for Friday and Saturday. Keeps them on edge of the seat all the way through. Have not played Paramount for a year and the first three pictures I played were very good but business is off anyhow. I don't know why. Running time, eight reels. Played April 17-18.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball S. D. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas, Alan Baxter—Excellent entertainment. Outstanding performances by Sylvia Sidney, Alan Baxter and Brian Donlevy, a new star whom our patrons like very much. Another triumph for Walter Wanger, its producer. You can't go wrong when you book this picture, because it is appealing to all types of patrons. We played this picture late but received good results regardless. An outstanding picture good for any day of the week. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 15-16.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—The usual western from Paramount. Gross above average. Played April 16-18.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—"So Red the Rose" is a very good picture. Played April 2-4.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

Republic

FRISCO WATERFRONT: Ben Lyon, Helen Twelvetrees—Another picture where the title kept people from seeing it. This is an average good picture, and all parts are played well. As is often the case, the finale is too short and abrupt and another 100 feet of film would improve the picture immensely. Played April 17-19.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

HOUSE OF A THOUSAND CANDLES, THE: Mae Clarke, Phillips Holmes—Moderately entertaining. Phillips Holmes and Mae Clarke are good in their roles. Irving Pichel makes a good villain as usual, and Rosita Moreno is excellent as Pichel's spy and dancer at the house of a thousand candles. We singled this picture and obtained fair results, but it would be better if it were shown on a double feature program. In some sections, where audiences do not like socalled "mysterys," this picture could be advertised as an adventure feature, because Mae Clarke and Phillips Holmes are on an adventure from one place to another. This picture, however, really contains no elements of horror of "Frankenstein" or "Dracula," as the title may lead you to believe. It is good, moderate entertainment with its locale in and around the House of a Thousand Candles. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 8-9.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

OREGON TRAIL: John Wayne—A good average sort of western. Running time, 59 minutes. Played April 10-11.—G. A. Van Fradenbury, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—A regular old style western, with some good singing. This picture is nothing to rave about, but seems to satisfy the average audience. Played April 24-25.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Town and country patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone, Virginia Weidler—A fair little program picture with Virginia Weidler taking all the honors; her performance is outstanding. Tom Brown and Carol Stone are fair in their roles. The picture should do fairly good at the box office, because of the widely read book by Gene Stratton Porter. We obtained pleasant results with this picture. A good picture for small towns. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 2-4.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

"OUR GANG" MEMBERS ATTACKED BY MEASLES

Measles invaded Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Our Gang" troupe making a personal appearance at a Detroit theatre, and three members were placed in quarantine. "Spanky" McFarland, the seven year old leading man, has the disease, and Darla Hood, four, and William ("Buckwheat") Thomas, Jr., four, were quarantined for lack of immunity.

Supreme

COURAGEOUS AVENGER: Johnny Mack Brown, Helen Erickson—Just another western, but below the average. If you want a western for a second feature, this might get by. We doubled this picture and did only fair business. Our patrons did not enjoy the picture very much—but they do enjoy good westerns. Use your own judgment on this one. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 17-18.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRAIL OF TERROR: Bob Steele, Beth Marion—A little above the average Bob Steel western for this company. This picture contains an excellent wrestling scene between Steel and a wrestler. Our customers, both children and adults, enjoy Bob Steele westerns. Did average business as a double feature. In small towns this picture would be good if singled. Good recording. Played at Ideal Theatre, April 19-21.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson, Louise Fazenda—Vina Delmar's stories make excellent film fare, and her latest story to hit the screen is no exception. This little picture is far above the average of Fox's usual programmers. The clever laugh lines of James Dunn and Louise Fazenda are superb. There's continuous laughs from start to finish This is one little picture that Fox should be proud to have produced; our audience appreciates pictures that are light and entertaining. Direction and dialogue excellent. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 10-11.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—Very agreeably surprised with this program feature. The story was a natural for Cobb, who must have a particular type to get over. Hudson coming fast. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 17-18. —Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—Best program picture we have had for some time. Business off account of local conditions. Weather dusty and dry. Good for your best night or Sunday. Running time, seven reels. Played April 22.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Jack Oakie, Alice Faye—Major companies have made various types of musicals in the past three years, but I have not seen a musical that meets in comparison with "King of the Burlesque." This picture is well-balanced with music, comedy and plot. Gregory Ratoff's small part in the picture is outstanding. The stars are cast perfectly in their roles, and the direction and photography is excellent. Our audience complimented this production very highly. Advertise it as a picture that has everything—comedy, drama, action, music, etc. An excellent A1 picture. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 5-7.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Just about tops in entertainment. Pleased 100 per cent and the box office statement made me break out in a rash of smiles. Played April 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy, Ben Lyon—Fair and light entertainment. Be sure to play up the woman's angle on this picture because it is, more or less, a woman's picture. Warren Hymer is good in his role. It pleased our patrons. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 19-20.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—An excellent production in dialogue, plot, and action. Pleased our customers one hundred per cent, but we did not do the business that we expected; however, it is no fault of the picture, because it is splendid entertainment. Victor McLaglen's performance equals that of his role in "The Informer." An excellent picture for any day of the week. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 12-14.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—This picture very well received and liked by my people. Played March 26-28.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Nebr. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Westerns and George O'Brien have associated together for so long it is difficult for the patrons to get the idea that he is ever cast in something other than his long played role. This picture, while of only program caliber, is entertaining and was well liked generally. Poor recording detracted somewhat from its entertainment value. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 15-16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Our patrons found this picture quite entertaining. They like O'Brien in this type of role as well as in westerns. Nothing wrong with this picture; just an excellent programmer, exceedingly good for Friday or Saturday dates. Played at New Liberty theatre, April 15-16.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—This was a very outstanding picture which didn't do the business "Frisco Kid" did but did above average business. Miriam Hopkins not so popular with us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A very good picture, very dramatic with a good cry. Didn't do any sellout business but feel we played a picture worth while.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—Splendid comedy with the inimitable and favored Horton in a role that suits him to a T. Pleased the patrons. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 10-11.—M. R. Harington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

INVISIBLE RAY, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Good story but horror angle lacking. Weird in parts but Karloff is expected to live up to his reputation as the ace of horror portrayals when he is starred. Good picture but lacked the drawing appeal other horror pictures had. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 26-27.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—One of the most satisfactory pictures we have ever had the pleasure of playing. Pleased more patrons than anything screened in a long time, and they had nothing but the highest praise in their comments. Universal can take the bows plenty on this one and everyone connected with the production deserves some of those Winchell orchids. Running time, 116 minutes. Played April 12-13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Oregon. Small town and rural patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—Fine. Arizona Wranglers furnish a little bit of fine music.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta—Fine. Did not do well on it though.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THREE SHOWMEN JOIN REPORTERS

Three new contributors this week to "What the Picture Did for Me" come from as many states—Missouri, North Dakota, and Ohio. They are:

James F. Doyle, Dickinson Theatre, Fayette, Mo.
C. H. Hansen, Paramount Theatre, Bismarck, N. D.
Emmett Lyons, Nordland Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Read the reports of these showmen on the reactions of their patrons to the film fare offered them.

Warners

DAMES: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell—Played it revival to a nice crowd. Good musical. Powell popular here with the ladies.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Personally I thought this picture was poor but strangely enough most of the customers' comments on this were favorable and it did a good business at the box office so it must be a good picture in spite of what I think. Played April 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Fair picture. Did not please as well as we thought it would—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—Good. Better than expected.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Fine but do not believe it was as good as "Barbary Coast." No business. First picture from Cagney that I have lost money on.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WIDOW FROM MONTE CARLO, THE: Dolores Del Rio, Warren William—Just a fair comedy drama. No great loss to the world if you pass it up. Played April 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

DANGER TRAILS: Big Boy Williams—Better than "Big Boy Rides Again" but just an ordinary western. Running time, six reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ALIMONY ACHES: Andy Clyde—Another good Andy Clyde comedy. There was a continuous uproar from start to finish; it pleased them all. Another comedy with that certain "punch" that Columbia puts into their shorts. An excellent comedy to balance your program. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

"LIL AINJIL": Krazy Kat Cartoons—Terrible. Not a laugh in it and very tiresome to grownups. Ditch this black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PARDON MY SCOTCH: Broadway Comedies—The Stooges, the best of the slapstick comedians. Foolish, crazy and even asinine, but house in an uproar and that is what we wish.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY: Tuxedo Comedies—This short got very few laughs from our audience. It is fair entertainment and should be used when you play a good feature and do not necessarily need an outsanding short to build up your program. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PERFECT THIRTY-SIXES: Musical Comedies—An extra good musical comedy, a swell style show and good singing and music. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PERFECT THIRTY-SIXES: Musical Comedies—This is an entertaining short. Would be suitable to book on any program. The musical numbers are good and the photography is excellent. Educational has a novel way of treating their musical shorts that is good. Played at New Liberty Theatres.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TIMID YOUNG MAN, THE: Buster Keaton—Keaton's comedies seem to find favor with our patrons. This one is up to the standard of his previous releases. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—Fair colored cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DESERT DEATH: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—This is not the best of the Crime Doesn't Pay series and it is not as appealing as the others. MGM evidently did not take much time or patience when they made this short. From the standpoint of production, there were a few things that they were careless about, and thought that the public would not notice. The makeup to distinguish Raymond Hatton from his nephew was very poor. If the company had watched the production angle a little more it might have been more appealing and interesting. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Forth Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DONE IN OIL: Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly—First comedy of this style we have played for a long while, and it was quite well liked, though it was rather of the slapstick variety. Running time, 2 reels.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang—This is the best of Our Gang comedy that has been made to date. Our audience laughed from start to finish. If you have not booked this short, do so. Play it up big, and you will obtain good results. This short should please any audience at any time. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LIFE HESITATES AT 40: Charley Chase—A fair Charley Chase comedy. Not up to the standards of the Chase comedies. The "still" scenes in this short, instead of being funny, soon became monotonous after a while with our patrons. Just medium entertainment. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Harman-Ising—Very good all-color cartoon. Swell music. Running time, one reel. —Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MODERN TOKYO: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another excellent travelogue, beautifully photographed in color. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale Special—Good two-reeler but for me not worth the extra price. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY: Oddities—Metro cannot forget "Mutiny on the Bounty." This one makes about three that they have shown Pitcairn Island and the shots from Mutiny and the public are getting bored with the repetition.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SACRED CITY OF THE MAYAN INDIANS: Very fine colored travel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SPRUCIN' UP: Our Gang—A fair Our Gang comedy, but not quite as good as the majority of the Gang comedies. Played at Ideal Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Our patrons like these crime reels very much. They are different and well done.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TRAINED HOOFS: Pete Smith—Smith injects the necessary enthusiasm in the most prosaic short that keeps the patrons satisfied. His shorts will please them all. Running time, 10 minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—An excellent short with Todd and Kelly in a hospital mixup; it pleased our patrons. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ZEALAND, THE HIDDEN PARADISE: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—All in natural colors and a very good science. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WATER SPORTS: MGM Sports Parade—Thrilling and fast moving with some humorous comments by Pete Smith. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY: Betty Boop Cartoons—A dandy. Best we had for a long time in cartoons. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE STRANGER: Color Classics—An excellent colored cartoon and ranks with the best.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAKING MANHANDLERS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—This is a great one-reeler full of action and music. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PLEASE TO MEET CHA!: Popeye the Sailor—Played this cartoon late. It's as good as all the other Popeye cartoons. Popeye goes over big with our customers. With him the program is complete. Played at Ideal Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

HERMITS OF CRABLAND: Struggle to Live Series—Out of the ordinary nature reel. Educational and entertaining. Give us more of these.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 11—My patrons do not care so much for March of Time. Running time, two reels. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW AND ROBINSON CRUSOE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A fine colored cartoon. Molly Moo Cow is becoming as popular as Mickey Mouse and Popeye.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NEPTUNE NONSENSE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons —A colored cartoon that is just a filler. Will get by and please but not exceptional.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NIGHT LIFE: Gene Austin—We played this short a little late and received a rather "patched-up" print. This short would have made a good one-reeler; this is a two-reeler that is not very good and received very few laughs. There are sequences in this short that are continuously monotonous. Gene Austin's shorts are usually good entertainment, but this is an exception. Just pass this one up. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN?: Silly Symphonies —Don't miss playing this Disney.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WHY THEY CONTRIBUTE TO THE DEPARTMENT

The value of "What the Picture Did for Me" to the exhibitor in providing him with information regarding product and its reception by the patrons of other showmen is pointed out succinctly this week by O. Ingmar Oleson, of the Sons of Norway Theatre at Ambrose, North Dakota. In a note to the Herald Oleson says:

"This department is of great value to us in selecting pictures."

Something of the same reaction is implied in a word from James F. Doyle of the Dickinson Theatre at Fayette, Mo., who writes:

"I am a new contributor to these columns but hope to be a regular one in the future."

DOCTOR OSWALD: Oswald Cartoons—A good single and will get plenty of laughs. Running time, 10 minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SOFT BALL GAME: Oswald Cartoons—Fine cartoon. Wish they would make Oswald as he was last year. I do not like the new Oswald so much. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION, NO. 19—Very, very good. Many patrons ask me why I didn't run a complete show of these shorts and I told them there wasn't enough of them available. Running time, 10 minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BLOW OUT, THE: Looney Tunes—Good cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—An exceptional fine band act and deserves preferred playing time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SEEING STARS: Easy Aces—Just a lot of gabble, gabble. A pair of geese could have done better. At least they don't have much brains at that. I would take an old gander an back him against this pair and the gander would win hands down. And, he wouldn't need a director to pass the buck to.—A. E. J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Dear Herald:

Oh my gosh, gee whiz, we thought that Madam Spring had come to make us a good long visit. The trees had started to send out their leaves, the lawns were getting green, the birds were squawking in the trees, people were making gardens and everything looked like we were going on a paying basis, but last night came a cold blast down from the north to remind us of bygone days. Doggone it, we wish the old guy would go on up north where he belongs and mind his own business.

A few night ago we went down to the Moon theatre and saw "Captain January," with Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee and Slim Summerville. This picture is based on the story of life in a lighthouse.

Shirley has been rescued from the ocean by the lighthouse keeper, Guy Kibbee as "Captain January," who took her and cared for her in the lighthouse. Slim Summerville and Guy were what might be called "friendly enemies," for they were the best of friends and would fight for one another but were always calling each other pet names like "you old skunk, you old reprobate, you good-for-nothing old spalpeen," and everything they could think of except they didn't refer to politics (and we are in a campaign, too), but for all that they were always together and always the best of friends.

While this was a very pleasing picture, and Shirley did her usual good acting, yet we hardly think it was up to some of her former pictures. Anyhow, it is a picture well worth playing and you will find that Guy and Slim did some excellent work also.

Primary election day in this state has just passed, and speaking of primary elections we might say, on the side, that we don't think much of primary elections, for even a bootlegger or a horse thief could file his name and get on a primary ballot. Well, we tuned in on WOW at Omaha and heard the election returns, that is, we heard enough to learn that our five star pet candidate was sucking the hind teat and then the station cut out the returns and turned in a jazz orchestra and a radio crooner and that was more than our weak constitution could stand, and so, after they told us about gasoline, face powder, soap, breakfast food and pink pills for pale Republicans, we turned the damthing off and went to bed.

For several days we have been having real spring weather; in fact it felt more like July weather. The mercury ran up to 89 and stayed around that point for several days, then we got a reverse, the wind same down from the north and brought a cold wave, which was another manifestation of Nature's natural laws. Jevver think about old Mother Nature and how she handles things? There's a girl who knows her business. Whenever the air in a given locality becomes overheated the natural tendency is to rise and this forms a vacuum and the cold air rushes in to fill this vacuum and that's how it comes that we have winds. If there were no vacuums formed anywhere we would have no winds, didja know that? A little common sense applied to Nature's laws is better than most weather forecasts.

Do you like dogs, and if you do, do you like to see them chase foxes? If you don't, then it's a cinch that you don't live in Missouri. Down there the main event of the year is to have a fox chase with a pack of hounds. Let the average Missourian get out in the woods with a pack of hounds trailing a fox and he won't care how the election goes; that's his annual carnival event. This was very well exemplified on the screen the other night by MGM's "Bugle Ann," in which Lionel Barrymore played the part of an old Missourian and a bunch of his neigh-

They mixed a little love stuff with this, of course, and Maureen O'Sullivan and Eric Linden did the "lovin'" while the hounds bellered on the fox trail. Lionel acted just like he was raised in the Ozarks with the hound kennel on one side and the mule barn on the other, and if he wasn't a typical Missourian then "thar hain't no such animal."

A neighbor was supposed to have killed bors were out with a pack of hounds chasing a fox. "Bugle Ann," Lionel's pet hound dog, and that was Lionel's excuse for shooting the neighbor. (And right here we want to give you a little advice. If you ever go to Missouri don't ever shoot a hound dog, for that's dangerous.)

Well, anyhow, it's a dandy picture that will appeal to red-blooded people who love dogs and love to hear them bray on a fox trail. We never chased foxes, but, Oh Boy, how we used to love to hear the dogs beller on a coon trail back in the Kankakee river country in Indiana.

This picture may not have a very big draft on the women folks because, as a rule, they are not overly strong for hounds, but the men folks will most likely like it because the big bulk of them like dogs, and those who don't generally don't like anything. You remember that Chic Sale took old Shep out in the woods once to shoot him but he didn't shoot him, and that raised Chic in our estimation something like 3,000 per cent, although he was already pretty high.

If you want to know how the boys act down in Missouri you better get "Bugle Ann" and play it, and you will not only see a good picture but you will learn a whole lot about a bunch of swell fellows, for they have got 'em down there in Missouri, and Lionel acted just like one. Poor Bugle Ann, the neighbor didn't kill her, but she strayed away and got caught in a wire entanglement and starved to death. But then, that's tellin'. Better see the picture.

Then here comes a letter from Bob Whelen of Mapleton, Iowa, with a check for us to have his subscription to the Herald entered for him. Thanks, Bob, old scout, you betcha we'll do it, and we'll betcha also that you will be mightily pleased with the Herald.

The heavy snow we had this past winter mostly went into the ground, and the moisture we have had has put the ground in excellent condition for spring seeding and this will make the farmers feel good, and when they feel good it will make us all feel good. And now if the politicians will keep off the air this summer and let Mother Nature do her stuff, everything ought to come out all right. But when they go to shooting their political fireworks through the ozone it is liable to sour on the old lady's stomach.

We've struck a snag. Yes sir, we are right out on a limb. The fact is we haven't a doggone thing further to say, and we feel like Uncle 'Leaser Biggs did when he said to Aunt Polly—

Well, Polly, everything looks fine outdoors this morn,
And since you've got your kitchen work all through,
I guess we'll go and plant some early corn
And I think we'll plant some beets and lettuce, too.

"That's all, folks."

STUDIO CENSUS BY BOARD OF TRADE POINTS SCOPE OF BRITISH INQUIRY

Committee on Films Act Wants Figures for Comparison of Conditions Before Quota With the Present

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Evidence of the thoroughness with which the Departmental Committee on the Cinematograph Films Act is to investigate conditions in the British production field is to be found in a questionnaire just circulated by the Board of Trade to every studio, asking for details of activities and plans, under every conceivable head, for the information of the Committee.

Owners of studios are asked to state:

The number, dimensions and cubic space of their stages in 1928 (when the Films Act began to operate) and in 1935-1936, with similar details of stages building or planned.

Comparative figures for these years as regards value of equipment, number of permanent employees, salary and labor costs, amounts paid to artistes, and costs of costumes, props and furniture.

In regard to film, totals of negative and positive used in these years are asked, the number and length of features produced and the approximate annual total production costs.

Separately, approximate cost figures are asked for the studio owners' own films and for those made in the studio by other units, whether or not intended for distribution by the studio owners.

The approximate earnings of the films in overseas markets in 1928 and 1935.

An estimate of the number of features to be produced in the studio in 1936, by the owners or by other units. Similar figures for shorts. Production costs of production planned to Dec. 31, 1936.

Similar questionnaires are in preparation for various other trade interests which have asked to be heard by the committee, and of which the most obviously important are the distributors (for whom the Kinematograph Renters Society will speak officially) and the exhibitors (Cinematograph Exhibitors Association).

The interesting thing about the Board of Trade procedure is that it implies an intention on the part of the committee to accumulate its own statistics, by application to individual interests, and not to rely exclusively on the copious data which various trade associations have accumulated. One thing which seems to follow is that sectional interests will receive separate consideration by the committee, a very important matter having regard to the fact that, for instance, distributors of American films have a viewpoint distinct from that of the distributors of British films with whom they are associated in the KRS.

The question of the economic soundness of British production as at present conducted, which underlies all the committee's investigations, came into the news rather violently this week when Julius Hagen of Twickenham Film Studios came out, in a statement in the Cinema, with the drastic suggestion that there should be a three months shutdown of all British studios "in order to get sanity into the salary and wage schedule."

Hagen Protests Excessive Costs of Producing, but Workers' Unions Answer Him; Newsreel Fight Again Waged

Mr. Hagen made the three assertions that trade unions were killing production by rigid labor rules; that salaries paid to directors were "fantastically extravagant"; and that the salaries paid to artists were also "out of all proportion to their value."

Expanding these arguments, he declared that it was necessary for Sunday work at Elstree to pay double rates on a minimum period of 8½ hours, even if an employee were required for only a three-hour shift. For work after 5:30, overtime was charged even if 17 hours' payment had been made for the three hours. Directors' salaries, he said, should be limited to £500 to £1,500, instead of ranging as high as £7,000 a picture for men who lead to "overspending in each department to satisfy every new whim. Artists' salaries were inflated by agents and 75 per cent of socalled box office draws are not worth any more than nameless artists."

The general conclusion he drew was that production costs were increasing by leaps and bounds while renting grosses were decreasing, but, as was to be expected, the inference that labor demands were chiefly responsible was quickly challenged by employees' organizations. The Association of Cine Technicians, stating that a shutdown would be a declaration of war between producers and staffs, suggested also that inflated costs due to night and Sunday work could be reduced by the abandonment of an uneconomic time-table.

£7,804,000 From Tax

With no increase in the entertainment tax to deplore and no further reduction at which to rejoice, the budget this week was chiefly of interest to the trade by the revelation in the financial statement that receipts from the tax in 1935-36 were £7,804,000 as compared with an estimate of £7,975,000. A reduction of this amount by £400,000 in the current year was foreshadowed by the chancellor of the exchequer.

The budget announced an extension of key industry duties to "activated and discolorizing carbons" (33 1-3 per cent), "parts of arc-lamp carbons" (7/6d per pound) and "parts of wireless valves and similar rectifiers" (33 1-3 per cent).

Film duties, which produced £169,000 against an estimate of £150,000, are expected to produce £180,000 this year.

Newsreels and News Features

An old legal problem is revived as a result of recent controversy in the newsfilm field. There is an agreement between the newsreels and the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association whereby, the newsreel refraining from paying heavy prices for exclusive rights for news events, the association urges its members to decline to book any news "specials" which may be made of any event not covered by the newsreels. The Football Cup Final is one of the big events of the British sporting year. News-

WHEN SHOWMANSHIP STARTED IN FILMS

Following are excerpts from the address by Fred S. Meyer, former Milwaukee exhibitor and now an executive at Universal studios in Universal City, at the Hollywood presentation last Wednesday of the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards for showmanship to Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia theatres publicist, and Lester Pollock, manager of Loew's Rochester at Rochester, N. Y. The Awards competition is conducted by the Motion Picture Herald's Managers' Round Table, of which A-Mike Vogel is chairman:

"Showmanship and exploitation of pictures first came into being about 1913 when a young man named Martin Quigley published a magazine—'Exhibitors' Herald'—in Chicago—long before the 'News', 'Motography' and the 'Herald' became one—and he had a section known as 'What the Picture Did for Me'. I became a faithful subscriber and correspondent of 'What the Picture Did for Me'. Maybe that's what elected me as secretary of the MPTOA. Out of this 'What the Picture Did for Me' came the Quigley Awards, and in eulogy to Mr. Quigley I hate to think what showmanship would be today if it weren't for Martin Quigley and his awards.

"(To the winners:) It is my desire that the circuits you represent will reward you—that your promotion will be steady, so that ultimately you will be managers of these circuits. Let your theatres be operated by showmen, and then tell them to go and exploit the pictures to the limit, as you gentlemen have done. If you do that, showmanship is not a lost art, and when you have accomplished that, not only the 5,000 exhibitors referred to by Mr. Vogel, but every exhibitor, will go back into show business."

reels duly declined to tender for film rights and the Football Association, through Wembley Stadium, arranged to have its own film taken and to distribute it through Featurettes, Ltd.

There was the expected request to exhibitors from the CEA not to book the film, coupled with a statement that the match would be found to be covered by the newsreels. Meanwhile, Wembley Stadium took legal action by applying for an injunction to prohibit the newsreel companies from taking a film of the match. It was refused and an appeal taken on the ground that any film taken must imply trespass on the football ground. The court view was that the correct procedure was for the football authorities to sue for damage after the film had been made and exhibited.

Australia Is Here

Two important Australian executives are here and, behind the considerable amount of talk about British and "Empire" production arising from functions in honor of Stuart F. Doyle of General Theatres and Union Theatres and of Ernest Turnbull of British Dominions, it is possible to sense an approaching crisis in the Australian theatre field which probably will be decided ultimately by factors quite outside British production.

The existing situation in Australia is largely governed by the existence of General Theatres, the operating merger of Union Theatres and Hoyts' Theatres brought into existence in the first place by banking interests common to both groups, for the purpose of economy and elimination of unnecessary competition. A five-year agreement expires in December, 1937.

It therefore seems that Ernest Turnbull was anticipating a vital change in present circumstances in announcing, at a luncheon to the London press, that an amalgamation of interests was planned by Hoyts' Fox of Australia and British Dominions of Australia, with the incidental object of developing Australian production by liaison with leading British producers including Gaumont-British (handled in Australia by Fox), British & Dominion, Twickenham and British Lion (all represented by British Dominions). Twenty million dollars was stated as the value represented by the various factors in this potential merger, but there were no details of the means by which refinancing might be planned.

There was also a tentative note in the Turnbull statement, as regards the British production end, which was supported by later news that neither Gaumont-British nor British Lion definitely had consented to go in; British & Dominions and Twickenham, both with long term contracts with British Dominions, asserted their belief in and adherence to the plan.

With the situation at this stage, Stuart F. Doyle arrived in London. A banquet had been planned for him some time before Mr. Turnbull, coming via America, got in first and broke his front-page story. The banquet duly took place at Claridge's. The Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, secretary of state for the Dominions, was the star guest, with a galaxy of other officials and Dominions celebrities, including Dr. Leslie Burgin, parliamentary-secretary to the Board of Trade and the attorneys general of Australia and of New South Wales, but in a news sense it provided no answer to, or comment on, the Turnbull announcement. It is obvious that if Stuart F. Doyle finds it necessary to make counter-proposals they are being put forward privately. He stays here until May 27th, when he sails for New York on the Queen Mary, and therefore has plenty of time in which to start things on this side.

Tilting for Advantage

The situation, as insiders see it, is that both Union and Hoyts', with the end of the General Theatres arrangement in view, are anxious to avoid either a renewal of the operating merger or its dissolution on terms leaving the other party definitely the stronger. Hoyts' plan is, by means of the Fox distribution-British production tieup, to establish a combination strong enough, with financing from London, either to hasten the end of General or to establish itself so strongly that the end of the agreement will find it in a position of independence, and possibly of dominance.

Union's plans have not been stated even in general terms, but Stuart F. Doyle's visit to New York may have an important bearing on them. Security of product being a very important factor in the situation, any agreements which he makes with American distributors to obtain such security on a long-term basis for Union would be a very effective counter to any arrangements which Hoyts', with Twentieth Century-Fox as its American product asset, might make with British producers.

Though the British film is an asset in Australia, and will be a bigger one, the major box-office attractions are, as in England itself, features from major American producers. Union, tied up with all the majors but Fox, would look strong against Hoyts' with Fox as its only certain American asset. There is also a degree of uncertainty as to how the British product ultimately will be divided. The Doyle company, British Empire Films, already distributes for Associated British, Toeplitz and General Film Distributors. G-B, it seems, has not definitely decided which side it will back, British Lion is similarly undecided, and the growth of production here inevitably will provide a further margin of product even if Australasian quota laws stabilize on the 25 per cent basis described by Mr. Turnbull—15 per cent of these films to be made in any part of the British Empire and 5 per cent to be Australian productions.

An extension of this theory of "Empire Quotas" to the whole of the British Dominions, advocated by Mr. Turnbull, would in his view make possible a $200,000 Empire return per picture to British producers. Australasia already, he said, has returned $75,000.

Federal Aid Assured for Mexico Films

by JAMES LOCKHART

in Mexico City

The young film production industry of Mexico definitely will have the moral and financial assistance of the Government. The aid was assured by President Lazaro Cárdenas during a recent visit to the newest and largest studio in the country, Cinematografica Latino Americana, S. A. (CLASA), located at Tlalpan, near the country's capital. CLASA has completed its first film, "Vamonos Con Pancho Villa" ("Let's Go With Villa"), and has started its second, "Su Gran Adventura" ("His Grand Adventure").

The president expressed gratification that the country's film industry has advanced to the extent where it can maintain a large and modern studio. He declared that the time is at hand for the Government to do something for the industry. President Cárdenas said that he considers the production of good Mexican pictures an excellent advertisement for the country. He favors the production of high class scenics and pictures that depict the folklore of Mexico.

The chief executive has instructed the ministries of the Interior, Foreign Relations and National Economy to draft a program to provide for Government assistance to the industry, but without meddling in it.

Evasion of the local tax of 13 per cent on each day's admission gross will not be tolerated by the authorities. This was clearly indicated in the arrest of the manager, two assistants and the cashier of a Mexico City neighborhood house on charges of regularly holding out on the municipal tax collectors when they made their rounds each night after the performances. The city treasurer claims the evasions have cost the city several thousand dollars.

The public health bureau of the Government has produced 63 two-reel talking pictures on general sanitation, personal hygiene and health education, which are being exhibited free in workers' and peasants' recreation centers throughout the country. The new federal physical education department is producing a six-reeler to demonstrate to the public the benefits to be derived from systematic physical exercise.

Cameraman Touring World

Charles Herbert, March of Time cameraman, sails from Los Angeles this week on the first lap of a tour of all the principal countries of Asia and Europe. According to Roy E. Larsen, president, Mr. Herbert will photograph leading figures and background material wherever it is available and the material he collects will be incorporated in future releases of the reel. The trip is expected to take a year.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended May 2, 1936, from 112 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,066,095, a decrease of $102,377 from the total for the preceding week ended April 25, 1936, when 116 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,168,472.

ILLINOIS HIGH COURT UPHOLDS DISTRIBUTOR

Sets Precedent by Denying Exhibitors' Petition Against Paying Paramount Judgment

by BILL CROUCH

in Chicago

The supreme court of Illinois last week denied the petition of George and Jean Gehring of the Roseland theatre to prevent them from paying a judgment of $3,073 to Paramount Pictures. The judgment was for damages as the result of a breach of contract and was granted by the appellate court.

This is the first time a decision has been made on a film contract suit in this state and has a very definite bearing on contract rulings here in the future. It sets an important precedent in future cases of a like nature and will result in a stiffening of the distributors' attitude as regards contracts in Illinois.

The full amount of the damage claim was allowed Paramount. The film company sued when the theatre owners refused to play pictures contracted for on the grounds that the contract had been canceled.

Mrs. Charles R. Holton, first vice-president of the council and state chairman of motion pictures for the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, reported that 39.3 per cent of pictures eyed by the Council's reviewers in the past year had been found suitable for family consumption, as against 25.4 per cent during the first year of the council's existence.

At the same time, the reviewers found 41.2 suitable for adults and young adults and 19.5 suitable for adults only, as against 27.3 per cent for both these groups in 1932-33.

Mrs. Holton made it plain that the council does not wish to be known as a censoring body, seeking only to act as a general clearing house of film information for club, church, PTA and similar groups.

She said: "We do not oppose pictures intended for the adult audience. We merely attempt to classify pictures according to their artistic merits and the age group to which they will appeal.

"As a matter of fact, I would like to see our present censorship ordinance brought up to date. It was drafted before the war, when girls and boys of 21 hadn't the sophistication that children of 12 and 14 have today. Pink permits ought to be issued on this revised basis, barring only those below, say 16, instead of 21."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THEATREMEN IN HOLLYWOOD

Not the least part of the Award winners' Hollywood trip was the wholly attentive ear given the visitors' boxoffice opinions by producers, directors, stars and publicity heads. From all sides, important names probed for the theatre angle, asked numerous questions that indicated an entirely encouraging cooperation in the business of selling their product.

The bringing of the Quigley Awards so directly into the heart of the studio country has been hailed in Hollywood as a most progressive step in narrowing the gap between studio and theatre. Producers who through their welcome to the Award winners have expressed a desire for yet closer cooperation between these vital forces would be wise to encourage further and more frequent journeys of this kind.

MINOR MIRACLE

Trip through a major lot in Hollywood last week with the Quigley Awards party brought forth the sage comment from one astounded outlander who remarked: "Considering what these folks have to do to make pictures, it's a minor miracle that finished pictures ever reach the screen."

After viewing the operation of some of the million and one departments in production that solve the most aggravating of problems by a smooth and efficient routine of execution, this declarer is inclined to say of the above—"there's something in that."

That the picture makers have been able to create a machine to turn mere words into screen stories with sufficient speed to supply the world's insatiable appetite is reason enough indeed to regard this amazing studio-land with deep and increasing respect.

"THE LION AND THE LAMB"

The current article by Round Tabler Joe Kinsky, Tri-States Theatres, Davenport, Iowa, district chief, on the successful operation of the "Quad City" Theatre Managers' Association should be cause for general eyebrow-raising among those who profess to see little good of cooperation between manager and manager, and especially cooperation between circuit and independent theatremen.

Here are 14 showmen in four adjacent cities who recognize the ever-present and dangerous encroachments menacing theatre grosses by getting together to do something about it and doing it in a handsome manner indeed. Says Kinsky:

> " . . . Our members have just as many individual viewpoints as any group of 16 or 20 persons. We have many a hot and bitter argument, but we have never had an argument that has not been satisfactorily concluded. . . . That our association is stronger today than it was two years ago when it was formed of necessity is ample proof that it has been a distinct benefit. What can be done here can be done anywhere. . . ."

There are too many spots where any effort to build a strong managerial defense against outside influences is frowned upon. Careful analysis of Kinsky's article might prove that the "lion and the lamb" may not only "lie down together" but that both can get a good night's sleep.

FELLOWSHIP AND HARMONY

Encouragement of good fellowship and harmony among members of the personnel most often marks the well-conducted theatre. These virtues are emphasized in a recent issue of "The Projector" put out monthly by the service staff of the State Theatre, in Portland, Maine.

Intelligent in makeup and interesting in subject matter, this most recent addition to our list of circuit and house organs reflects a fine spirit of cooperation, indeed.

The editors of the Portland publication are to be commended for their endeavors and an extra bow voted Round Tabler Harry Botwick, listed modestly as advisor.

146 Top Newspapers Run Advance "Girl" Serial

Typical of the cooperation received by MGM on the nationwide newspaper tieup of the serial on "Small Town Girl" was the hookin made with the Knoxville News Sentinel, which organized and conducted a unique contest based on the serial. Thirty-nine all-expense trips to Knoxville and two trips to Washington were awarded by the paper to girls in Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia who received the most photos in a "Small Town Girl" popularity contest, conducted by the paper.

In some cases the serial appeared in 20 installments, while in others it was divided into 30 or 40. All papers featured the illustrations by James Montgomery Flagg on the picture. Many of them used full-page reproductions of these drawings.

MGM reports a total of 146 papers throughout the country running the story, representing some of the most influential publications in the United States.

Fruit house up in Yorkton, up in the Canadian Saskatchewan, in error received a shipment of fresh spinach from California and for which there did not seem to be much demand from local retailers. So what to do?

QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD WINNERS OBSERVE THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Philadelphia Warner-ite Tells of What They Saw at Studios; Finds Producers Receptive to Ideas That Help the Boxoffice

by HARRY GOLDBERG

Warner Philadelphia Theatres Publicist

To a Quigley Award Winner every door in Hollywood is open. In a week one can only skim through the vast areas of the studios and catch but glimpses of plans, publicity programs and productions under way. There was so much to see, hear and learn, with studios competing for the privilege of hospitality, that seven days of Hollywood leaves a veritable welter of impressions and information.

It will take time to sort them out but as Mike Vogel insists upon an immediate report for the members of the Round Table, herein is rendered a brief summary.

Ed took us around the back lot where Nick Foran was singing a song to Paula Stone, and between songs we set up a camera and hooked our heels in the bar with the principals.

With an eye and an ear on Errol Flynn and Olivia De Havilland rehearsing a scene from "The Charge of the Light Brigade," Michael Curtiz made us welcome, and we also stood for photographs.

Then we wandered over to a broad avenue where Pat O'Brien and Beverly Roberts were reading lines for a shot in "China Clipper" while the director was arranging a welcome home parade.

Frank Whitbeck, at the Metro lot, gave us the impression that he had nothing to do but show us a good time, so we looked in on Joan Crawford and Melvyn Douglas preparing a scene for "The Gorgeous Hussy," and then traipsed over to watch Walter Ruben build up a shot for "The Suicide Club."

Call on Irving Thalberg

Arranged next by Frank Whitbeck was a visit to Irving Thalberg, and after an hour there then to Al Lewen, who patiently explained some of the problems connected with screening "The Good Earth," which he is producing in association with Thalberg.

The studio visits were interrupted by the mid-week luncheon given by the Quigley Publications at which the awards were presented to Lester Pollock and to me.

As one who covered too many banquets and luncheons in his newspaper days and looks upon them with an ironical eye, it was quite flattering to see that so many prominent personages had come from the studios to attend the lunch in our honor.

At the Paramount lot Gabe Yorke took us from desk to desk, analyzing in detail the work of the highly organized publicity department and urged us to spend an entire day roaming around the lot.

Barney Glazer discussed his new Bing Crosby picture, "Rhythm on the Range" and we tramped off to watch Eleanore Whitney in a lovely scene of "Three Cheers to Love"; walked on the Ida Lupino-George Raft set while the cast was chanting a facetious nursery rhyme to kid a zealous property man and finished up with Gertrude Michael and Sir Guy Standing.

On the way to Bill Pine's office saw Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll and Lewis Milestone stopping traffic on a street so the cameraman held it up a bit longer while we were photographed with the stars.

Jesse Lasky wanted to ask some searching questions regarding exploitation and to discuss his new production "One Rainy Afternoon." Walter Wanger arranged for a talk which ranged from "The Case Against Mrs. Ames," the creation of new stars, why is a producer and his important plans for the immediate future.

Fred Myers took the better part of a day to entertain us on the Universal lot, where Bill Koenig and Charles Rogers gave us time for reminiscences and the exposition of their ideas for forthcoming product. Johnny Johnston found Irene Dunne on one of the sets and the inevitable still cameraman exposed us jointly to posterity.

On the Warner lot again, to be photographed with Jack Warner and the Quigley plaque. He described his new productions and when he learned the plaque was won for work on "Dream" he ordered a special screening of "The Green Pastures" and "Anthony Adverse."

A debt of gratitude is owed Mike Vogel, the guy that invented the Quigley Awards, and boys, if you can go to Hollywood via Quigley—try it next year. It's the only way to really see the place.

In Kansas City, between planes, hospitality was extended by John McManus, of Loew's Midland; Bernie Bernfield, United Artists' district exploiteer, and Stan Chambers, at the Uptown. Missed with regret were Larry Lehman and Louis Mayer, of the RKO Mainstreet, and Barney Joffee, among others, and we hope to see them next time.

J. Lloyd Dearth, now at the Pantages, Hollywood, and Rodney Pantages, welcomed us to the Studio City and while there had time for a bit of a chat with Jack Gross, of the RKO Hillstreet. Dean Hyskell, of Fox West Coast, was another member we were glad to meet, and said hello by phone with Al Hanson and Charley Skouras. Renewed old times with Doc Howe, of Fanchon & Marco, who saw us off at the airport, and Tom Soriero dropped in at the hotel to say "howdy."

Hollywood sure threw open wide the gates and this occasion is taken to express the warmest thanks for a grand week. —A-MIKE

Rochester Loew-man Discourses on the Mechanics of Making Pictures as Is Explained by Heads of Various Departments

by LESTER POLLOCK

Manager, Loew's, Rochester, N. Y.

Frank Whitbeck of MGM showed us how production is started before it reached the direction. It begins with the script and then goes to the artist, who in turn visualizes how the players will look and from that makes his layouts. There is also an art department in which is made miniatures of every set that goes into production. These then go to the engineering department, which prepares a scale that is forwarded to the scenic department and used as the basis for the final scenes.

The director is in no sense responsible for the setting of scenes—this is entirely out of his jurisdiction and on him rests the sole task of the direction of the players themselves.

Each studio tries to incorporate into every picture, good or bad, some exploitation angle on which the managers or press agent can make tieups. The attitude of the studios is that no one picture will sell itself; that task, they realize, remains in the hands of the theatreman and gratefully acknowledge the part he plays in making grosses soar at the box-office. This statement was extremely gratifying and shows that the Coast recognizes the part the manager assumes in putting over pictures.

Trailer Department Interesting

Particularly interesting was the trailer department, watching them pick out the "punchiest" parts of the picture for the benefit of the patrons to see what they can expect when the picture actually plays the theatre.

Not to be forgotten by any manner of means is the property man, on whose shoulders rests the responsibility of seeing that all sets are accurate in every detail so far as period decoration is concerned. He must also stand prepared at a moment's notice to bring forth like a magician anything from an antique setting dating back to Louie the 14th to the latest in modernistic settings that will be the rage next year.

And speaking of carrying out details, much was our surprise to learn that in all scenes where players are shown eating, honest-to-god food is served. It was explained that it is much cheaper to serve real edibles than papier-mache or whatever other substitute.

In addition to the pleasure of meeting the various players at the studios and witnessing actual production, it was our distinct pleasure to talk with Eddie Mannix, general manager of the Metro lot, and casting director Grady. The trip was one grand and glorious thrill—the thrill of a lifetime—from beginning to end.

Exton Hosts Parents Of Dorothy Peterson

Bill Exton's "Country Doctor" campaign at the Kenosha, Kenosha, Wis., was distinguished by attendance of Dorothy Peterson's family, residents of nearby town, at the opening. Bill received wire of greetings from the star which was placed on poster together with her photo and planted ahead in Western Union offices. Papers were generous with stories and photos on the stunt.

Eight merchants cooperated in presenting the first baby girl born after the opening with gifts. Cook ran page two days and merchants tied in further on windows as illustrated.

Large cut of bankbook was blown up and displayed in bank, copy imprinted across front reading "the Crown authorities save for the Quins, why don't you get the habit yourself?" Bottom of display carried photos of the starlets. For his lobby Bill strung an infant's wear clothesline across entire front.

Lester Stallman, College Theatre, Bethlehem, Pa., conducted the baby contest with Bethlehem Globe-Times and cooperating merchants for first female child born during run and christened "Rose Marie." Co-op ad page broke day ahead and a reported first time was the use of the mayor's name in connection with the stunt.

Various window displays were secured, letters were mailed to women's organizations, fraternities and musical societies, imprinted paper bags were distributed and papers were generous in their stories with art.

Front Page Art Drawing Tops Salmon's Program

Neat bit of program-selling on "Country Doctor" was turned out by Joe Salmon, at the Riverside, New York. House being a neighborhood situation on upper Broadway, lot of effort is put into the house programs as best means of advertising in that sector.

Front piece of number referred to is drawing of Canadian countryside with flying stork carrying basket of quins and doctor behind team of sleigh dogs on way to the Dionne house, with theatre copy below. Inside pages are reproductions of press book mats with some "see" copy and quotes from newspaper critics.

Candid Camera "Goes Round" For Rosenthal in Bridgeport

Highlighting his "Music Goes Round" date at the Majestic Theatre in Bridgeport, Morris Rosenthal used candid camera to snap pedestrians at random, shots running in the Post with tickets to those recognizing themselves and presenting clipping at theatre.

For his lobby display Morris used various musical instruments with bass drum revolving on movable drum (see photo), and squirrel in cage with revolving table and sign reading "round and round he goes." For the first time in over a year, transportation company was tied in to banner street cars with copy "why travel 'round and round' to find a place to park?" etc., etc.

Loudspeaker attached under marquee plugged song hits and during showing of picture when Richman asks audience to join in the chorus, two ushers walked down aisles with megaphones singing the number and asking audience to join in.

Theatre telephone number only was given and gag evoked a lot of response. Pressbook membership cards were distributed entitling the holder to wear the official emblem (the kurky klip) and to vocalize the infectious strains at will.

Bowling alleys, basketball games, dance spots (see photo) were covered with "Music" banners, and six-foot cutouts were planted at entrance to office building entrances and local schools. Taverns featured a "round and round" highball, fountains plugged sundaes and for his street bally Ralph resurrected an old car, had it lettered and towed about town.

Golf Game Contest Idea Features Fox Midwest Drive

Current 13-weeks spring campaign instituted by Elmer Rhoden, Fox Midwest circuit head, is built around a golf game idea, with birdies, bogeys, etc., bogey being minimum budget. This is arrived at by taking expenditures for previous 13 weeks and cutting down as much as possible. Par shooters are those who do 150 to 175 per cent of bogey; birdies from 175 to 200 and eagles over 200.

Managers are given leeway in setting in pictures and other matters of policy. Participation in profits and prizes are to be given winners.

Managers in the "Quad City" Run Successful Association

Theatres in Four Cities Band to Build Grosses, Protect Interests

by JOSEPH KINSKY

Tri-States Davenport District Manager

There are probably many local associations of exhibitors in various cities throughout the United States. We exhibitors in the "Quad Cities" (Davenport, Iowa; Rock Island, Moline and East Moline, Ill.) are extremely proud of the Quad City Theatre Managers' Association because we believe it is one of the few organizations of its kind that actually works.

Perhaps one of the biggest reasons why we have been successful with this association in the "Quad Cities" is because the circuit theatres (Tri-States Theatre Corporation controlling the Capitol and Garden in Davenport, the Fort and Spencer in Rock Island, the LeClaire Theatre in Moline, and the Mort. H. Singer Theatre Corporation controlling the Orpheum Theatre in Davenport) have greatly taken into consideration the needs of the smaller independent houses, and have done everything within reason to help them.

Reviews Association's History

Possibly the best way to explain our association and its workings is to review a little bit of its history.

While the writer has been associated with the exhibitors in the "Quad Cities" for only about two and a half years, it is our understanding that the Quad City Theatre Managers' Association has been organized for quite a number of years. However, it has only been during the last two years that the organization really has had "teeth." As a matter of fact, we look back upon the Fall and Winter of 1934 as being the time when the association, in its present form, actually came into being, and it was at that time the NRA forced exhibitors into line with its rulings concerning fair trade practices. It was apparent that if anything was to be done to bring extra revenue into the theatres, it would have to be done together. And so, at the instigation of the Tri-States Theatre Corporation, a meeting of the Quad City Theatre Managers' Association was called, and it was suggested by the writer that all the 14 theatres then in the association cooperate in giving away a car. While this seemed unusual at first to many, it was finally agreed upon, and our first cooperative giveaway was held on the night of January 11, 1935, which, I believe, was the first occurrence of its kind in the United States.

So great was the success of this venture, a total of 24,000 admission tickets were sold at theatres having a total capacity of about 16,000, that it was immediately decided we should continue these cooperative giveaways at frequent intervals. Taking a cue from our success, associations were formed in various other mid-western cities and exactly the same plan of cooperative giveaways were adopted by them.

Among the most effective of its kind is the Quad City Theatre Managers' Association, the membership embracing 14 theatres in Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Moline and East Moline, Illinois. A fine example of "one for all and all for one", the organization has done a lot of good in bringing business to the boxoffice, building morale and holding off "invaders" in general.

One of the guiding spirits is Joe Kinsky, district chief in the Davenport sector for Tri-States Theatres. What the association has accomplished in the past two years and how the boys go about it is detailed herein by the Iowa Round Tabler.

—A-MIKE VOGEL

With the passing of the NRA, many of these other associations faded out of the picture with the theatres in each of these towns battling against the others for their own interests. However, this was not true in the "Quad Cities." All of us down here recognized the fact that we were deriving more benefit from the association than we could ever hope to as individual theatres. As a result, we have all stayed in line and have actually added two new theatres to the association since the NRA was declared unconstitutional.

It might seem to many outsiders that the Association has taken upon itself the task of running each individual theatre. This is not true in any way. We have made it a very strict ruling never to discuss our bookings, film costs, or in any way do anything that would cause one to hint at conspiracy.

The association has very definitely controlled giveaways. We have absolutely outlawed individual theatre giveaways in any and all forms; even to the extent of refusing children's candy giveaways, and promotions of that type. We have seen fit to do this in order to eliminate all misunderstandings and all possibilities of "chiseling" on the part of any member. Each member of the association, of course, has the privilege of asking for special permission for individual giveaways, and this has been granted in a number of cases when these were intended solely for the exploitation of a certain picture. During the two years we have had this ruling in effect we have never had a serious violation, nor have we had a member leaving the association, with the exception of one small neighborhood exhibitor who was unable to meet the financial obligations he owed the association.

OSTATNIE DNI
POMPEI

REPRODUCE SCENE. Sequence of "Last Days of Pompeii" was motif for lobby decoration on the date at the Lyceum, Sydney, Australia. Idea was executed by Ben Bernard and Ralph Doyle.

When we say "financial obligations," it might be well to explain. By this we mean that the Association purchases all merchandise to be given away. Each theatre then pays its share in proportion to its seating capacity. To this, of course, is added the cost of coupons and advertising.

At the present time, we are having giveaway nights once every two weeks. We found that in this way we kept interest at a maximum and the people do not tire of them as they have in other cities where they are conducted once a week or more.

Association Activities Extensive

However, the good work of the association has not confined itself strictly to giveaways. Only last Fall we were faced with a threat of a Walkathon in Rock Island, promoted by a company who was operating Walkathons in several Illinois cities. We were confronted by certain officials, who for some unknown reason were greatly in favor of having this Walkathon in the city. The city ordinances in Rock Island strictly prohibit the issuance of a license by the city to a project of this kind. However, the city was willing to issue a special license designating the Walkathon as a legal dance hall, restaurant, or even a garage, if necessary. The association immediately hired two or three lawyers, and its Rock Island members, headed by H. D. Grove of our Fort Theatre, contacted every civic, church and social organization. Finally, the pressure brought by these organizations upon the city, together with the threat of legal action on the part of the State's Attorney was so great that he was forced to deny the Walkathon permission to come into town. Subsequently, the same bunch of promoters tried to force their way into Moline where our lines were already formed, and they had no chance whatsoever to break through. Fortunately, in Iowa there is a State law against Walka-thons, and we have had no trouble in Davenport.

Just a few weeks ago there was a movement afoot in the "Quad Cities" for the adoption of Eastern Standard Time, such as is now in effect in Chicago. Meetings for the purpose of discussing this change in time were only in the primary stages when each and every member of the association got busy fighting it. It is doubtful if there was a manager who did not have four or five prominent persons personally backing him and his theatre against the adoption of the new time. As a result, entire action was dropped, and those parties trying to see it put through found they were faced by a stone wall of opposition from the theatres.

We are now in the midst of a fight to eliminate the "Bingo" evil in the "Quad Cities." "Bingo," as you may or may not know, is nothing more or less than a variation of the Corn Games so popularly used by concessionaires at county fairs during the summertime. This is played in various places ranging from benefit card parties in churches to the dirtiest beer taverns in town. It is really a serious menace to our theatres, and one which we are having great difficulty in overcoming, due chiefly to the fact that the "Bingo" games are sponsored by those very social organizations to whom we usually appeal to stop gambling. This will be by far our toughest fight, but we have every reason to believe that we will ultimately be successful.

Raise Funds Via Ball

Naturally, an association like ours must have funds with which to conduct these campaigns against rackets. At the present time, our treasury has more than $1,000, none of which has come out of the pockets of any independent exhibitor, or the treasury of any theatre circuit. During the past two years we have conducted an annual dance called the "Quad City Theatre Managers' Movie Ball." In 1935 we held this ball at the Coliseum Ballroom in Davenport, with Art Kassel and his orchestra as the attraction. Attendance at this dance was approximately 2,200. Just a few weeks ago we held our second annual movie ball, this time in the Moline Field House, Moline, Ill., with Jan Garber and his orchestra furnishing the music, and a Wilbur Cushman unit furnishing the entertainment for a floor show. Our attendance at this dance consisted of over 4,000 persons, and we realized a profit of about $700. We have heard some criticism of our sponsorship of these two dances since it would appear that we were driving people out of our theatres and into a ballroom. It is significant, however, that the theatre grosses on the nights we have had these dances have been at least average, and in some cases better than average. Further than that, we have so staged these dances that it has been impossible for local ballroom enterprises to follow us with similar events. Indeed, this year we were refused permission to use the Coliseum ballroom in Davenport, the finest in the "Quad Cities," because of the fact that the owner, last year, declared his business, following our dance, suffered because he was unable to present his attractions in the same way we did ours.

Officers of the Quad City Theatre Managers Association are as follows:

Barney Brotman, president.
Charles Carpenter, vice-president.
William Prass, secretary.
Julius Geertz, treasurer.

Seventeen theatres in Davenport, Iowa, Rock Island, Moline and East Moline, Ill., are represented in the Association. They are in Davenport:

Capitol, Orpheum, Garden, Uptown, Zenith and State.

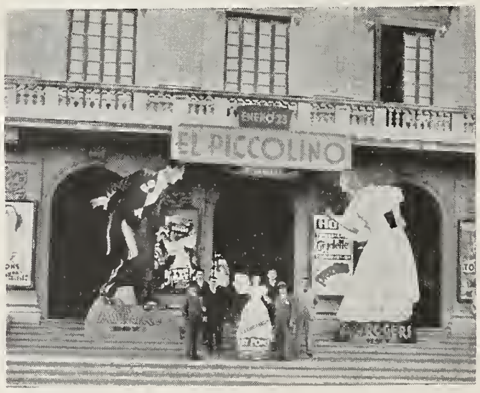
In Rock Island—the Fort, Spencer, Riviera, Rialto and Ritz.

In Moline—the LeClaire, Paradise, New Orpheum and Roxy. And in East Moline, the Strand and Majestic.

We are now in the midst of a campaign to increase admission prices. We first experimented with the Capitol and Orpheum, two opposition theatres in Davenport, where the night price on Saturdays and Sundays was increased from 36 cents to 41 cents. This was also done at the Fort Theatre, Rock Island. This move proved so successful that the LeClaire and Paradise Theatres in Moline increased their evening prices from 25 cents to 30 cents just a few weeks ago. As a result, all our first run theatres in the Quad Cities are now getting a nickel more on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and we intend to soon try to extend this increase to all seven nights. As yet, we have not seen fit to tamper with admission prices of subsequent run theatres, but at the first opportunity an effort will be made to increase these also.

Since the reorganization of our association two years ago we have had no such thing as a "price war." If and when an exhibitor thinks he should lower his admission price, he brings it up for discussion at our meetings, and usually some adjustment is made along the line to make it unnecessary to cut prices. We would like to make it clear that the association does not make it a point to strictly control admission prices, for if we were to do so it would virtually amount to the association's running each theatre. However, we do have a sort of gentleman's understanding that if there is to be an adjustment in prices, exhibitors so contemplating will inform the association.

"Show of Showmanship Coming."



MARQUEE ANIMATION. Motor-driven and brightly illuminated were the animated figures of Astaire and Rogers on giant top hat on marquee of the Saga Theatre, Oslo, Norway.

We believe that the above will give readers of the Motion Picture Herald at least a rough idea of what an exhibitor's association can accomplish when selfish interests are subordinated to the general good of everyone. We are no miracle workers here in the Quad Cities. Our members have just as many individual viewpoints as any group of sixteen to twenty persons. We have many a hot and bitter argument, but we have never had an argument that has not been satisfactorily concluded, and the fact that our Association is stronger today than it was two years ago when it was formed out of necessity, is ample proof that it has been a distinct benefit to its members. What can be done here can be done everywhere.

It has not been so long since independent exhibitors in the Quad Cities looked upon the circuit theatres as their most brutal enemies. Today there is a definite feeling of friendship between the circuits and the independents; in fact, it is the opinion of the writer that the circuits are more friendly with each individual independent than the independents are among themselves.

Independents Express Appreciation

Naturally, the load promoting these various giveaways has been for the most part on the shoulders of the circuit theatres, and particularly the Tri-States Theatre Corporation, since we control the greatest number of seats. The writer has had any number of independents come up to him and warmly express their gratitude for the cooperation they have received from our theatre company, for they realize what we have done for the association we could very easily be doing only for ourselves, if we wanted to be selfish. However, it is the opinion of our company that there are no benefits which we could derive outside of the association that we cannot get by being in it, and in addition, we have the friendship and goodwill of the independent exhibitors which has been extremely valuable to all of us in combating the rackets as discussed above.

Wire was sent to Pat O'Brien inviting him to the special Birdmen show in his native Milwaukee and return regret wire was reproduced in paper. Ceremonies at theatre included speeches by aviation experts and the presentation of loving cup by Jimmy Mattern, famous round the world flier.

Model plane contest was also conducted with cooperation of the paper in which entry blanks were run and boys bringing planes to theatre for lobby display. Loving cup was promoted from jeweler who also plugged the contest in window display and ads.

Monty Salmon Sponsors Theatres' "Times" Drive

Sponsored by Monty Salmon, general manager Quaker Theatres, Philadelphia, the following campaigns on "Modern Times" were put on in cooperation with managers Joseph C. Dougherty at the Tower, Harry Knoblauch at the Nixon and George Fishman at the Roosevelt. Special displays were planted in all three theatres consisting of Chaplin shoes, cane and hat in glass cases with sign reading "The most famous outfit in the world." Clever lamps were constructed made with the shoes as a base, hat as the shade and cane for the stand, with globe painted to represent Charlie's face.

Theatre fronts were decorated with immense cutouts of Chaplin head, and accompanying photo showing Dougherty's clever use of derbies around marquee, each containing cutout letter of star name and title. These hats were illuminated at night.

Tieup with radio station's Melody Man program brought passes to first 25 sending in correct titles of songs sung and picture was given play in the broadcast. Chaplin impersonators, one for each house, covered streets, railway stations and schools distributing heralds, and special announcements were made from stages to kiddies at morning matinees. The boys wound up with special parades by the American Legion drum and bugle corps through principal streets and ending at respective theatres.

Richmond Plants Stories On Quins in Papers

S. L. Richmond, Keith Theatre, Portland, Maine, planted a syndicated serial on the Quins for his "Country Doctor" date, with front page story first day and five days ahead, continuing through engagement. Merchants came through with full-page co-op in Sunday Telegram with streamer on picture and theatre. Cereal displays with picture and theatre credits were used in large food markets and window displays five and tens.

New York Florist Tieup on "Gold"

(Right) CARL ROGERS, assistant to MANAGER JOHN NEWKIRK, of Loew's Granada, Cleveland, promoted a "Rose Marie Rose" given to early matinee women patrons. In addition, floral decorations were also furnished to set off announcement, in exchange for mention on poster.

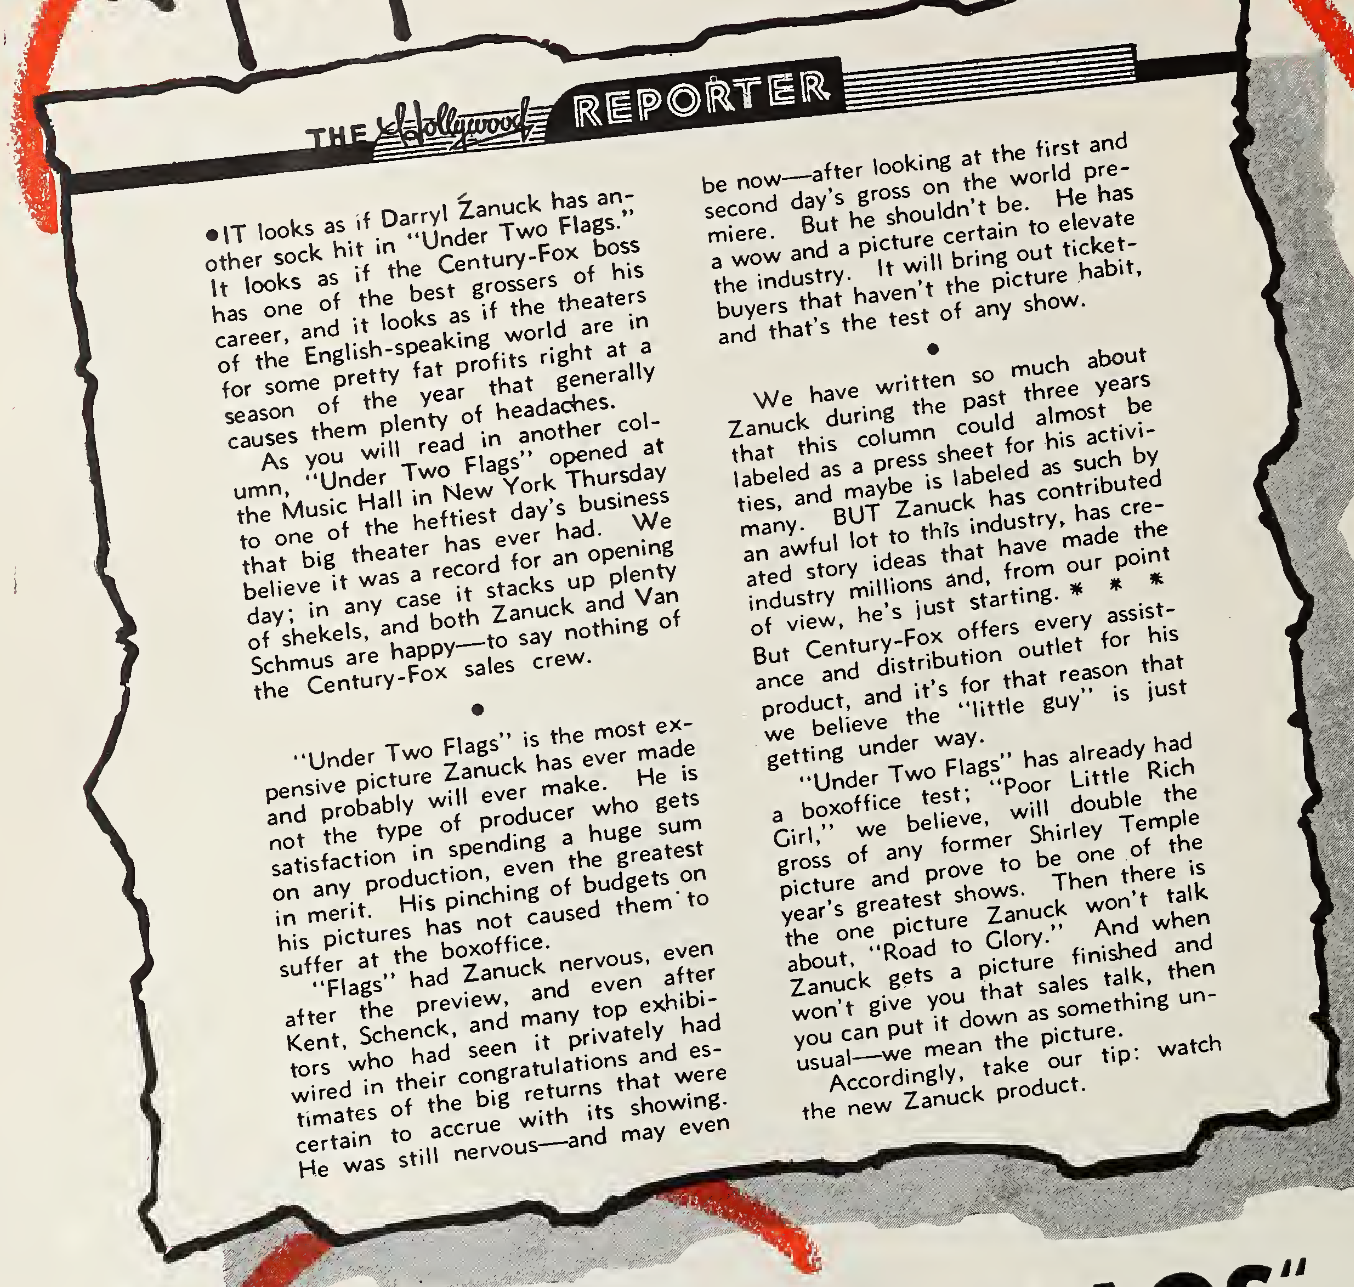
Right you are—Hollywood Reporter—



THE Hollywood REPORTER

•IT looks as if Darryl Zanuck has another sock hit in "Under Two Flags." It looks as if the Century-Fox boss has one of the best grossers of his career, and it looks as if the theaters of the English-speaking world are in for some pretty fat profits right at a season of the year that generally causes them plenty of headaches.

As you will read in another column, "Under Two Flags" opened at the Music Hall in New York Thursday to one of the heftiest day's business that big theater has ever had. We believe it was a record for an opening day; in any case it stacks up plenty of shekels, and both Zanuck and Van Schmus are happy—to say nothing of the Century-Fox sales crew.

"Under Two Flags" is the most expensive picture Zanuck has ever made and probably will ever make. He is not the type of producer who gets satisfaction in spending a huge sum on any production, even the greatest in merit. His pinching of budgets on his pictures has not caused them to suffer at the boxoffice.

"Flags" had Zanuck nervous, even after the preview, and even after Kent, Schenck, and many top exhibitors who had seen it privately had wired in their congratulations and estimates of the big returns that were certain to accrue with its showing. He was still nervous—and may even be now—after looking at the first and second day's gross on the world premiere. But he shouldn't be. He has a wow and a picture certain to elevate the industry. It will bring out ticket-buyers that haven't the picture habit, and that's the test of any show.

We have written so much about Zanuck during the past three years that this column could almost be labeled as a press sheet for his activities, and maybe is labeled as such by many. BUT Zanuck has contributed an awful lot to this industry, has created story ideas that have made the industry millions and, from our point of view, he's just starting. * * * But Century-Fox offers every assistance and distribution outlet for his product, and it's for that reason that we believe the "little guy" is just getting under way.

"Under Two Flags" has already had a boxoffice test; "Poor Little Rich Girl," we believe, will double the gross of any former Shirley Temple picture and prove to be one of the year's greatest shows. Then there is the one picture Zanuck won't talk about, "Road to Glory." And when Zanuck gets a picture finished and won't give you that sales talk, then you can put it down as something unusual—we mean the picture.

Accordingly, take our tip: watch the new Zanuck product.

"UNDER TWO FLAGS" HAS PROVEN ITSELF THE YEAR'S HOLD-OVER STAND-OUT!

SUNBATH SCHOOL

AND now the advertising world, due to considerable discussion breaking into the publications of the craft, is made suddenly aware of the prevalence of the nude in copy illustration. Just why a girl garbed mainly in discreet shadows, or mayhap strategically garlanded with gauzes, should have any relevancy to the merits of a magneto, a motor car, or a new brand of fruit juice, does not appear, but there she is.

The plea ever is that the purpose is to arrest attention. The effect is to suggest that everybody concerned should be arrested, too.

Just fancy for a moment finding the high-powered office of the president, or even the sales manager, of some of these august corporations decorated in the manner of their display copy in the Sunday papers and the magazines! Maybe they are but they do not print pictorial reports on that.

Meanwhile, of a certain relevancy to a not unrelated problem which sometimes more than delicately presents itself in our own graphic industry, Advertising Age editorially observes that the copywriters' alibi is "the trend" as evidenced by the dialogue of plays, revues, stories in fiction magazines and the like, but remarks:

> True, this kind of copy gets attention—but after all that is merely the first phase of a successful advertisement. . . . And perhaps the shocker advertisement merely spurs a jaded appetite which demands more thrills. Contrasts with the advertising of ten years ago have revealed that most of it was in slower tempo, and most of it, likewise, was in good taste. . . . It would be a mistake, in our opinion, to abandon standards of good taste . . . merely because the public tolerates exhibitions of bad taste elsewhere. After all, most advertisers want acceptance and orders from the whole public, and not merely the liberals. There are still too many conservatives to disregard.

That goes for motion picture copy, including lobby displays, too.

SERVICE

A FRIEND from Kodak Park related the other day a bit of a character story about the late George Eastman, bearing on the subject of discipline and policy. It seems that Mr. Eastman, fishing on a remote northern lake, chanced to drift past a boat containing another fisherman, who sat with a kodak in hand at which he was swearing softly but continuously, and inclusively covering in his imprecations the entire genealogy of the instrument.

Mr. Eastman stopped his boat. "Trouble?"

"Trouble!" the stranger exploded. "Why the ——, etc., ——, etc., shutter is busted —— —— and here I am with the best fish I ever caught ——, etc. I'd like to get hold of the guy that made this ——— !"

"Here, take my kodak," Mr. Eastman offered.

"No, I want my own; it's supposed to work."

Presently Mr. Eastman took the offending instrument ashore, sat on a log with a penknife for a tool kit and repaired the camera—in silence, without introduction or comment. He tested it, handed it over and rowed away.

"STRAIGHT NEWS"

WHEN the august House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, in session assembled, greeted its Hon. Mr. Zioncheck of the State of Washington with a round of applause, it expressed something extremely significant about popular government that will not be set down in the Congressional Record. The official occurence, considered along with the decidedly unofficial record of Mr. Zioncheck, is something to smile about, if you can, while reflecting on the desires of the Administration to suppress columnist commentators and restrict reports from the nation's capital to "straight news." More and more it is becoming apparent that even the straightest of news is in itself sharp commentary.

LITTLE BLUE EAGLE

OF the encroachments of government there is seemingly no end. Just at the moment the special annoyance is the tidings of the introduction of a bill for amendment of the constitution of the State of New York for the creation of a state "Department of Commerce and Industry," the notion being a presentation of Mr. Joseph A. Esquirol, state senator. In a publicity release from his office it seems that this new department would tend to everything, from freight rates to employment. Industry possibly about now could do with an opportunity to tend to its problems itself. The supervisory attentions are getting a bit thick.

SAYS Maurice McKenzie, experienced of cinema and the garden, that whoever it was that made the pansy a symbol of effeminacy never saw how it can weather a Connecticut winter. It is really tougher than a film buyer—and much prettier than most.

Copyright

Changes in the existing International Copyright Union provisions which are believed to be subjecting American film producers to grave dangers are sought by the motion producers' copyright committee.

Furthermore, adherence of the United States in the world copyright union would practically repeal our copyright laws to the detriment of the film industry, the committee declares.

While the United States is expected to send a delegation to the Brussels copyright convention next fall, entrance in the international union is considered to have been delayed by wide opposition. See page 14.

Public Domain

The United States supreme court at Washington refused last week to give relief to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the entire industry in its appeal from an action involving plagiarism of material that had been taken from the public domain. The supreme court's procedure caused quite some consternation in producers' ranks where much attention already has been directed to the public domain as a source of material. Now comes an explanation of the extent to which the industry may resort to that field as a channel of story supply. See page 17.

Writers' Fight

Developments in the Screen Writers Guild-motion picture producers fight in Hollywood were highlighted this week with the secession of more than 100 members of the Guild to form their own organization. Led by Rupert Hughes, the group pledged full cooperation with their employers. For particulars, see page 16.

Suits Dismissed

On application of Attorney General Roy McKittrick, the Missouri state supreme court in St. Louis on Tuesday dismissed anti-trust ouster proceedings against Warners, RKO-Radio and Paramount, removing the last obstacle to perfection of the agreement worked out by Sol Rosenblatt in behalf of all parties on April 30 and signed by Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York. On the same day the circuit court at St. Louis dismissed the attorney general's injunction proceedings against the same companies.

Papers transferring the Shubert-Rialto, Orpheum and Hi-Point theatres in St. Louis to Fanchon and Marco, in accordance with the stipulation approved by Judge Knox, are now being drawn. These will consummate, also, the transfer of Warners' 42 per cent interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Marco Wolff is in New York with Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice-president and general manager of Fanchon and Marco, to discuss details for the new line of local first run and second run houses involved in the federal anti-trust "peace pact" with Warners, Paramount and RKO, recently approved by Federal Judge Knox in New York.

The first definite result from the settlement of the legal warfare was the return of the Ambassador to a direct first run house.

"Ecstasy"!

"Ecstasy's" checkered career in the United States recorded another court chapter this week when the Baltimore city court reversed a ban of the Maryland censor board. The court ruled the film may be shown with the objectionable parts deleted. See page 40.

French Trade

Stabilization of the situation existing in France with respect to American motion pictures is guaranteed in the reciprocal trade agreement with that country which goes into effect June 15th.

Under the terms of the agreement, France confirms the abandonment of proposals to control and restrict more severely the trade in foreign films and their exhibition in the country, and gives the assurance that present treatment will be continued.

The American companies may consider themselves "very fortunate" to get what they did, commented Major Frederick L. Herron, manager of the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. See page 53.

New Trial

Reversing the lower court on a plea of prejudice, the Washington state supreme court on Monday handed a decisive victory to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers when it ordered a new trial of the state attorney general's case seeking to oust the Society on charges of monopoly.

In the rehearing the society will ask that the receivership in which it was placed last year be dissolved. At the instance of broadcasters and other music users, the attorney general had obtained a court order declaring ASCAP in restraint of trade and restraining it from doing business in the state or collecting fees.

The supreme court upheld ASCAP's contention that the lower court was motivated by strong prejudice, as evidenced by what was termed a drastic decision.

ASCAP in New York this week said it was planning further legal maneuvers, which it expected would result in dissolution of the ouster suit and, hence, criminal proceedings against organization officials in the state of Washington on charges of intimation and conspiracy.

E. C. Mills, ASCAP general manager, returned Monday from a six-weeks' swing around the country, during which he con-

Clearing House

As a clearing house of information on motion pictures for the metropolitan New York area, and to provide machinery for voluntary cooperation among social, educational, and other agencies interested in films, the Metropolitan Motion Picture Council has been formed. Representatives of many community, educational and better films groups are the sponsors. Membership is barred to persons employed in the industry. Details on page 60.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Canon Chase Sued

Canon William Sheafe Chase, superintendent of the International Reform Federation, Inc., and who for years has been militantly campaigning to "reform" the industry via federal legislation, was sued this week in Washington, D. C., in the district supreme court by J. Raymond Schmidt, for $100,000, charging he was libeled.

In his suit, Mr. Schmidt described himself as an author, lecturer, editor and writer engaged in the business of publishing "moral reform papers." He based his suit on charges he alleged were made against him of embezzlement and larceny, both of which he denied. In addition to Canon Chase, the federation was also named as a defendant. The action, in two counts, charged both libel and slander and asked $50,000 on each count.

Letters allegedly written by the federation and remarks made by its officers, in both of which Mr. Schmidt was charged with either embezzlement or larceny, were cited in the complaint.

Merchandising

Some 36,211,395 Americans belonging to 16 national community, social and educational organizations comprise the market toward which MGM and the MPPDA are aiming a special merchandising campaign for "Romeo and Juliet," in line with the industry's efforts to call the public's attention to pictures which set a high standard. The campaign and its relation to the motion picture as a whole, are described on page 51.

Lincoln Trial

The trial date of the conspiracy action of Independent Theatres in Lincoln, Neb., against major companies has been set for May 18 in the federal court at Lincoln. Independent, through its principal stockholders, G. L. Hooper, Topeka, Kan., and Carl Bard of Lincoln, asks $1,353,000 in damages from United Artists, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal, RKO, Warners, Twentieth Century-Fox, Lincoln Theatre Corporation, its head, J. H. Cooper of New York, and Robert Livingston of Lincoln.

The defendants are charged with having controlled 90 per cent of all feature films while only operating half of the local theatres. Independent controlled the Rialto, Orpheum and Liberty and was the chief stockholder in State Theatres, Inc. State, after introducing a similar action, asking $440,000, caused its suit to be dismissed without prejudice early in April after a trial date had been set for May 11. Representing the plaintiff is Paul Good, former state attorney general, who obtained a $25,000 verdict for William Youngclaus in the protection case of several years ago.

State Aid

Creation by constitutional amendment of a department "chargeable with the responsibility of helping business" is the purpose of a senate bill introduced in the New York state legislature by Senator Joseph A. Esquirol. It would be known as the Department of Commerce and Industry and, to become a part of the constitution, would have to pass this year and next and be voted upon in the election of 1937 to become effective in 1938.

In a statement setting forth the motives of the bill Senator Esquirol this week asserted, "The wealth of the state depends upon healthy, thriving commerce and industry. Tax collection depends in a great measure upon the prosperity of industry and business. Therefore, it would seem that business should receive as much attention as any other activity or phase of the life of the state."

Exhibitors Elect

Highlighted by a pre-convention meeting of Allied States national leaders in Cleveland, exhibitor organization activities this week included the reelection of Ray Morrow as president of the Arkansas Motion Picture Theatre Owners and a legislative discussion by Allied of New Jersey.

Allied leaders held a conference Sunday at the Hollenden hotel in Cleveland to make final arrangements for the national convention of the organization, June 3-5, there. Among those who attended were Abram F. Myers, Sidney Samuelson, Nathan Yamins, H. M. Richey, Martin Smith, Peter J. Wood and local directors, including M. B. Horwitz, John Kalafat and Henry Greenberger.

At Little Rock, Mr. Morrow was reelected president of the MPTO of Arkansas. L. F. Haven, Forrest City, was chosen vice-president and J. F. Norman, England, secretary-treasurer. Ed Kuykendall, president of the national body, attended and delivered an address. Other speakers included Leo Nyberg, Helena; R. X. Williams, Oxford, Miss., and Eli Collins, Little Rock.

Meanwhile, in Trenton, Allied of New Jersey met at the Stacy-Trent Hotel and discussed pending legislation in the state in addition to the forthcoming annual conventions of the local and national units; the local to follow the national meet.

"One Union" Blow

Discussion of proposals for "one big union" of actors in all fields at the annual meeting of the Associated Actors and Artists of America in New York late last week disclosed the general sentiment that the time is not ripe for such a move. An Actors Equity Association spokesman said "developments may be expected next year."

Having effected a working agreement with the American Federation of Actors and with Equity, the Screen Actors' Guild is completing a similar arrangement with British Equity.

Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors, resigned as head of the newly created division of musical comedy, vaudeville and circuses of the WPA federal theatre project because of restriction of his vaudeville circuit plan to the New York area. He continues in an advisory capacity.

Frank Merlin, former stage manager, who succeeded Mr. Whitehead, said the plan is to put vaudeville into theatres.

Schiller Returning

E. A. Schiller, whom ill health compelled to suspend activities as a vice-president of Loew's, Inc., will resume his duties as operator of the circuit's theatres outside the New York area as his health allows.

Mr. Schiller has been recuperating for about two years. During that time Joseph R. Vogel, his assistant, has assumed full charge of theatre operations outside New York.

Share Holdings

Edward L. Alperson and associates have acquired 66,667 shares of Grand National Films, Inc., stock out of 200,000 shares now outstanding, it was disclosed in a notice to common stockholders of Pathe Film Corporation on Wednesday.

The remainder of the outstanding shares is held by Pathe, but 117,000 shares will be required for a stock dividend to Pathe stockholders, reducing Pathe's holdings to approximately 16,333 shares, the notice said. This would indicate that Mr. Alperson, president of Grand National, and associates subscribed approximately $266,000 of the company's capital, and Pathe approximately $535,000.

Provisions for additional capital will be made by offering Grand National stockholders subscription rights to additional shares. Under the provisions of Pathe's stock dividend, one share of Grand National will be issued for each five shares of Pathe stock, payable to holders of record May 22. Dividend certificates are expected to be available about June 5.

WIDER CANCELING, LOCAL BOARDS VIRTUALLY SET

Distributors Unofficially Reported Ready to Grant Unrestricted 10 Per Cent Elimination of Films Under Contract

Warner Joining Conferees as Exhibitor Committee Meets with Individual Distributors; Doubt Score Charge Elimination

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Theatre owners representing majority exhibition interests of the country, and the large distributors finally sat down this week in New York to the serious business of adjusting sales policies and procedure in order to alleviate operating burdens complained of by exhibitors in their relations with exchanges, contractually or otherwise.

The exhibitors' spokesmen started on Tuesday morning to confer with each individual distributor, at the companies' home offices, to determine, after weeks of fencing in the preliminaries, exactly how far the companies will go in granting the concessions asked for by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, on behalf of all owners in order to establish (1) voluntary self-regulation; (2) fair trade practices; (3) machinery for perpetuating harmonious relations between the buyers and sellers of motion pictures and among competitive exhibitors.

The MPTOA, led by its president, Edward L. Kuykendall, of Mississippi, would accomplish the desired results through a ten-plank platform constituted as follows:

1. Removal of all restrictions on cancellation privileges, and an increase in the present 10 per cent elimination to 20 per cent.
2. Establishment of local conciliation boards for adjusting trade disputes.
3. Creation of fair and reasonable uniform clearance and zoning.
4. Elimination of unfair overbuying that reduces the product supply of a competitive owner.
5. Abolition of unfair "cut-rate" competition in the forms of premiums, giveaways, lotteries, two-for-one coupons, merchant and "advertising" tickets, pseudo-contests, double and triple featuring, unreasonably low admission prices, and such.
6. Control of unfair nontheatrical exhibitions.
7. Creation of a standard form of exhibition contract reduced to essentials in language and text.
8. Elimination of the score charge.
9. Discontinuance of arbitrarily designated playdates.
10. Elimination of the practice of forcing short subjects with features.

The exhibitors' committee, composed of Mr. Kuykendall, Oscar C. Lam, of Georgia; L. C. Griffith, Oklahoma City; Jack Miller, Chicago, and Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia, started the series of sessions with Paramount, on Tuesday, meeting with Neil Agnew, general sales manager. From the Paramount Building at Times Square they next traveled, on Wednesday, to James R. Grainger's office at Universal Pictures, in Rockefeller Center. The itinerary from that point stood as follows, subject to change: Radio-Keith-Orpheum, meeting with Jules Levy, Friday; Columbia Pictures, Abe Montague, either Friday afternoon or Saturday morning; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, William F. Rodgers, Saturday; United Artists, George Schaefer, Monday; Twentieth Century-Fox Film, Tuesday.

BULLETIN!

An unofficial admission came late Wednesday from distributor spokesmen that there will emerge from the present exhibitor - distributor trade practice conferences (1) an unrestricted 10 per cent cancellation privilege, and (2) local conciliation boards for adjudicating trade practice disputes.

Warner Brothers, which previously had refused the MPTOA's bid to participate, "on advice of counsel," is now understood to be flirting with the idea of meeting the theatremen's committee. The company originally was understood to be reluctant to meet jointly with all companies because of possible anti-trust repercussions. The present procedure of meeting individually with each company would seem to eliminate that objection.

Republic Pictures, which did not sit in on the preliminary "round table" conferences, notified the committee last week that it would participate from this point.

Score Charge Elimination Doubted

Although both sides this week proceeded cautiously in bargaining, refusing to disclose publicly the extent of their concessions to the points at issue, the meetings barely had got under way before it became apparent that the distributors favored an unconditional 10 per cent cancellation privilege, and believed that most of the remaining demands could be adjudicated locally by the proposed conciliation boards in each territory—with the exception of the score charge and a new standard contract.

Elimination of the score charge undoubtedly will not be forthcoming, nor is a new contract form likely to result.

Score Charges and Grosses

Distributor spokesmen pointed out after the first exchange of proposals at this week's meetings that those distributors still charging for music scores felt their elimination would lop off too much in gross rentals.

Paramount, for one—and its attitude is understood to be held by other companies—is willing to accede to the unrestricted cancellation demands on the basis of a ten per cent elimination, on condition that the exhibitor buy all the pictures offered him by the distributor at the one time, with the exception of westerns and foreign pictures. The exhibitor would not be required to purchase either the westerns or importations in order to take advantage of the 10 per cent elimination. The privilege, however, would not apply to selective contracts after the contract is signed, this because of the obvious reason that the exhibitor in negotiating the selective contract makes his elimination before signing.

New Contract Opposed

Nor do the distributors feel they are in a position to write a standard form of exhibition contract, because of anti-trust conspiracy possibilities and the growing tendency of distributors to proceed differently on sales plans and policies.

Paramount, however, told the MPTOA committeemen, and the other companies are expected to do likewise, that they are willing to consider substitute clauses in the company's own present contract for those clauses which the exhibitors believe are not clear or are "tricky." The MPTOA delegates were told to return later with newly-phrased clauses for substitution, and thus the contract matter was returned to the laps of the petitioners.

Probably reflecting the attitude of a majority of others was Paramount's agreement to aid in establishing the local conciliation boards, not as a complete solution for the problems, but as the best idea advanced to date. The company agreed to give such boards a "fair trial" and to do everything within its power to develop their growth.

At the Universal meeting on Wednesday, Mr. Grainger, acting for his company, agreed to support the formation of local conciliation boards.

Would Be Distributor-Financed

The distributors, it is assumed, would finance the establishment and operation of the boards, which, in the opinion of most distributors, are the logical mediums for meeting the MPTOA's complaints on clearance and zoning, overbuying, "cut-rate" competition, nontheatrical exhibitions, designated playdate problems and the forcing of short subjects with features. However, at least seven of the nine companies participating (including Warner and Republic) probably would have to agree to the board's establishment in order to clear the way, financially, for their creation.

Concessions Next Year

The concessions would be made effective with the new contracts for 1936-37, with definite plans for the boards' operation coming almost immediately following the present conferences.

The negotiations were formally launched the afternoon of April 16, when the MPTOA committeemen met at the Cinema club in the Hotel Algonquin, New York, with sales managers of all large corporations, except Warner, who listened to the exhibitors' suggestions for effecting the desired self-regulation.

The conferences will proceed in New York, the while independent exhibitor organizations, principally Harry Brandt's Independent Theatre Owners Association, are "demanding" admission to the meeting chambers. The distributors are answering these demands by referring them to Mr. Kuykendall's group. It is unlikely that the present committee meeting with the distributors will be enlarged.

U.S. INDUSTRY SEEKS COPYRIGHT CHANGE AS WORLD'S LARGEST USER

Wants Removal of Provisions Subjecting Producers to Lawsuits for Heavy Damages Over Foreign Material

The American motion picture industry, the largest user of copyrights in the world and with the largest investment at stake, is seeking changes in the existing international copyright laws to remove provisions which subject the producers to law suits for heavy damages and otherwise hamper the American industry with respect to foreign sources of material.

The producers' copyright committee, headed by E. P. Kilroe, attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox, is holding a series of meetings out of which are expected to emerge recommended amendments to the Berne copyright convention, in advance of the convention of the International Copyright Union to be held September 7th in Brussels, Belgium.

While the state department is exerting pressure for America's adherence to the Berne convention, such a move appears distant at the moment because of the wide opposition, but the United States is planning to send a delegation to the Brussels meeting.

Moral Rights Clause Attacked

The danger to the American industry from affiliation with the international union, Mr. Kilroe pointed out, is that our copyright laws then would be abolished, and there are features in the Berne convention which hold serious hazards for the American industry.

The clause governing the moral rights of authors is one of the main points in the existing international law attacked by the producers.

"The moral rights clause in its present form is obnoxious to the industry, and the industry could not operate at all if the new proposals are granted," Mr. Kilroe said this week. "For one thing, we could not possibly meet the censors' objections in the various countries of the world.

"Another new proposal to be offered at the Brussels convention would extend the moral rights clause to public domain material. If that passes, even Shakespeare's works could not be changed without violating the treaty.

"Enforcement of the present international provisions is according to the laws of the country where the right is sought to be enforced. Under the new proposals the rights must be enforced all over the world as set forth in the convention."

Placed Before Senate Committee

Mr. Kilroe and other industry representatives expressed the industry's position on this score before the committee on foreign relations of the United States Senate in 1934, and took a similar position before the House patents committee during the copyright hearings last month.

The moral rights clause, as revised at the Rome convention in June, 1928, provides that even after the author assigns his rights, he retains the right to claim the paternity of his work, "as well as the right to object to every deformation, mutilation or other modification" of the work, "which may be prejudicial to his honor or to his reputation."

In other words, the producers' copyright committee points out, the author's moral rights are inalienable. He may enforce these rights even after he has made an assignment of them for a valuable consideration.

MUSIC "CHASING" ATTORNEYS SCORED

Attorneys retained directly or indirectly by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers who frequent places where music is used "with the hopes that they may hear a composition played upon which they can base a case and obtain a fee, and then take the witness stand to prove the alleged violation," were censured in a decision by Judge Frederick H. Bryant of the Northern New York United States district court at Syracuse.

The decision, given over the weekend, dismissed a suit against Elm Lodge, Inc., operators of a night club near Syracuse, filed by Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, and the Famous Music Corporation.

"Cases of this kind have received considerable adverse criticism," Judge Bryant said. "The method used by the plaintiff in the present case will not tend to allay the criticism."

The right to make changes in an author's work is of the utmost importance to the motion picture industry, the committee maintains. "A dramatic play or story is usually written with an appeal to a particular class, while a motion picture is intended to have entertainment value for the great masses and its financial success depends upon its mass psychology entertainemnt value; the wider the appeal the greater its value," the committee said in a recent statement.

Cites "Wonder Bar" Case

"A limitation on the right to change the plot, theme, sequence, and description of the characters in literary works would bring havoc to the film industry. An example of this danger will be found in the case of the production of 'Wonder Bar' by Warners Brothers. The company purchased the film rights to the story from a foreign publishing house to whom the authors had previously sold these rights.

"After paying a substantial sum to the publishing house, Warners paid an additional sum to the authors for the right to change the story and interpolate music. After the picture had been in distribution in the United States and ready for distribution in foreign countries, the authors made a demand for an exorbitant additional sum of money, $100,000, under the moral rights clause of the Rome convention, threatening that if they did not receive an adjustment of the claim they would enjoin the distribution of the picture in Europe and seek money damages."

Meanwhile, attendance of United States observers at the Brussels convention depends upon action by Congress on a joint resolution authorizing the participation of the state department and providing $6,500 for the delegates' expenses.

The resolution has been given a favorable report by the House committee on foreign affairs, but has not been acted upon by the Senate committee on foreign relations. However, there is seldom much opposition to the presence of Government representatives at international conferences on important questions, and the United States has been represented at previous copyright conventions in Europe. For these reasons it is expected that if the resolution is brought up no difficulty will be encountered in obtaining approval.

Moral Rights Clause Permits Author to Sue Even After He Has Made Assignment of Rights of Money

The state department, committed to a policy of internationalism, is anxious for both the enactment of the Duffy copyright bill, under which this country could join the Berne convention, and the approval of attendance of its representatives at the Brussels meeting. Wallace McClure, assistant chief of the treaty division, appeared before the House patents committee during its hearings on copyright legislation to press for the adoption of the Duffy bill, seeing no reason why the barring of American authors in some of the European countries and the discriminations practiced against American books, films and plays should preclude the United States from taking advantage of the benefits which he declared would accrue in other countries which are members of the convention.

Copyright Legislation Form

The future course of this country with respect to participation in the International Copyright Union depends upon, first, the enactment of copyright legislation and, second, upon the form such legislation would take.

The Duffy bill, as passed by the Senate last year, would permit adoption of the treaty. Amendments proposed at the House hearings, however, if adopted, would make adherence impossible, and a number of patents committee members themselves oppose adherence in the world copyright union.

If the necessary legislation is passed, it is believed immediate action would be taken by the Senate to ratify the treaty, which was sent to it by President Roosevelt Feb. 19, 1934. The treaty was favorably reported by the foreign relations committee on April 18, 1935, and was approved by the Senate without dissent the following day, but was subsequently put back on the calendar when it was found that changes in our present copyright law would be necessary to bring it into conformity with the union's regulations.

Such amendments as are necessary to bring the law fully into conformity with the treaty must be enacted contemporaneously with the entry of the United States into the copyright union, it was pointed out.

Automatic Copyright Issue

Of these amendments, the most important is considered to be the provision for copyright without formality, known as automatic copyright, but certain interests which would be affected consider other necessary amendments equally important, among them the elimination of the requirement for the domestic manufacture of books in this country.

While ratification of the treaty by the Senate is all that is necessary to make this country a party to the international copyright convention (no action by the House of Representatives is necessary or permitted), the amendment of existing law to permit such entry must be acted upon by both Houses.

Frank J. Rembusch, Pioneer in Exhibitor Organization, Dead

Shelbyville Showman Led First Successful Fight for Sunday Shows

Seventh son of a seventh son, and frequently a figure in affairs conceivably creditable to such a circumstance, Frank J. Rembusch died May 6th at his home in Shelbyville, Ind., city of his nativity and base of operations during the sixty years of a life vividly coloring and colored by the industry to which more than half of it was devoted, sometimes vitally, always vigorously. He is survived by a married daughter and son, Trueman Rembusch, who has been in active charge of his theatre interests for several years. Burial was on May 10th from St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Shelbyville.

Of "Indiana Frank" Rembusch the exhibitor politician and organization pioneer the trade knows much. He was long a headline personality—as prominent among the promoters of the first exhibitor organization, the National Exhibitors Association, as principally active in the formation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as a storm center in the councils of the MPTOA in 1926 with his "Monroe Doctrine" booking plan which was defeated at the great peace-pipe convention in Los Angeles that year.

Frank Rembusch was four years old when his mother died. His father owned a glass factory. The family lived next door to Charles Major, the novelist, and Mrs. Major mothered the boy. Decades later, widowed and in pressing circumstances, she entrusted the then exhibitor with the sale of picture rights to her husband's works—"When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," "Yolanda" and others. Said Mr. Rembusch early this year, "Miss Beebe Davies, sister of Marion Davies, helped me to sell them to William Randolph Hearst; the sum total received was about $60,000."

Played Violin and Bass Drum

Mr. Rembusch's six brothers and his sister were musicians. Frank played the violin, indoors, and the bass drum on parade and at political rallies, where, marching tonight for the Democrats and tomorrow night for the Republicans with only a change of cap to mark the difference, he early sharpened the political wits he was to exercise generously in later years.

At adolescence the glass business summoned the bass drummer and life took on a more substantial significance. The young factory executive began to notice the Nickolo that had been opened on the local Broadway. Two more appeared shortly on Public Square and one of them, the Crystal, was operated by M. Switlow, a restaurateur, who didn't like to be bothered with rearranging his tables and chairs every evening. He offered the place to Mr. Rembusch to operate for a trial period of three weeks. It paid the proprietor pro tem a net profit of $80 the first week and Frank J. Rembusch was in the motion picture business.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH

Among the "firsts" claimed for this phase of Mr. Rembusch's career are the personal appearance of Francis X. Bushman at one of his Shelbyville theatres, and the first exhibition of a motion picture ("The Birth of a Nation") in a small town at $1 top. These are undocumented assertions, naturally, but there is ample substantiation of the fact that Mr. Rembusch was the spearhead of another "first" of vastly more import — the successful campaign by which was brought about the passage of the first state legislation legalizing the Sunday operation of motion picture theatres.

Prohibition had come to Indiana, as to certain other states, in 1915. Mr. Rembusch discussed the matter with a young lawyer of the town named Charles C. Pettijohn and both discussed it further with Robert Lieber of the Circle theatre at Indianapolis. Charles A. Olson and A. C. Zaring, then and now exhibitors of the same city, joined in. Out of these conversations emerged a proposal fully equipped with supporting logic and timely fixtures.

It was set forth that humanity, being what the demon rum had shown it to be, could hardly be expected to give up the alcoholic scourge happily if something suitable were not substituted, and why not good, clean amusement? There was more in the same vein. It became the basis of a bill presented to the Indiana legislature.

On the day the legislators were to vote aye or nay on this bill three barrels of red apples appeared magically on the state house steps, each bearing the sign: "These apples are wholesome and good for you on Sunday as well as the other six days of the week—and so are motion pictures." This type of exploitation might move a modern legislature to summary action. It moved the solons of 1915 to a swift passage of the bill, which was signed forthwith by Governor James A. Goodrich, famous as teacher of the world's largest Sunday school class.

Whatever the industry at large, and particularly the organized branches thereof, may have thought of Mr. Rembusch's latter-year activities in its professed behalf, this accomplishment was regarded highly and with not a little hope by the NAMPA. Wherefore its president, William A. Brady, invited the several gentlemen responsible to New York to attend a banquet given in observation of the 10th anniversary of The Moving Picture World, now a component element of this publication.

"Let Them Babies Walk Out!"

Mr. Pettijohn didn't go back to Shelbyville. He became general counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, a step in the direction which was to lead him in 1922 to the corresponding post which he still occupies with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. But the hot summer of 1915 found the Rembusch delegation from Shelbyville attending a Chicago convention of the exhibitor body and opposing, with Harry Crandall, Jake Wells and others, the election of the late Lee Ochs, New York candidate for the presidency.

The steam roller had been geared to function for the New York delegation, which dominated the credentials committee. This body was quite stubborn about seating delegates who did not pledge themselves to vote the Ochs ticket, although there were no vacant chairs. Some said a good many of these were occupied by taxi-drivers more familiar with meter tricks than politics. There were rumors of a walkout and these stimulated Candidate Ochs to a rostrum defi that echoed for years in the trade—"Let them babies walk out!"

Many of "them babies" did, but Delegates Rembusch and Pettijohn sat tight, whereupon the chair made the mistake of inviting the Indiana delegation to address the convention and Mr. Pettijohn, pointing to an ornate chandelier that graced the scene, uttered his likewise to-be-echoed declaration, "You fellows remind me of a flock of dusty swans, flying around that chandelier, trying to kiss yourselves in the back of the neck." The Indiana delegation departed forthwith and joined with their kindred spirits in a rump convention which formed the American Exhibitors' Association, merged with the parent body 11 years later in the present MPTOA.

HUGHES LEADS WRITERS' REVOLT AGAINST GUILD'S "CLOSED SHOP"

Says Proposed Merger with Authors' League Would "Create Amalgamated Soviet of Writers" with Autocratic Powers

Revolt in the Screen Writers Guild ranks precipitated by the move for a closed shop and affiliation with the Authors League of America this week led to a definite schism among the writers and the formation of a new writers' organization in Hollywood.

The new group took form Monday night with a nucleus of more than 100 former Screen Writers Guild members attending an open meeting at the Beverly Wilshire hotel. Rupert Hughes, who led the revolt, as spokesman for the secessionists sketched the background of the Authors League and the Screen Writers Guild, of which he was one of the founders, and pointed out "prevalent evils" in these organizations which have cropped out in recent months.

Outlining plans for the new organization, Mr. Hughes disclosed it was formed as a protective group "devoted to furthering the interests of the motion picture industry and whole hearted cooperation, within all reason, with the producers."

Leeway for Other Writers

Although the association, which had not been named by midweek, will be made up of persons who do most of the writing for the industry, others who write or wish to write for the screen are invited to join as associate members and when they prove their worth will be made full-fledged members, it was announced.

The first step in the group's formation was the appointment of Mr. Hughes to draft a constitution. A committee of seven was named to draw up a code of fair practice and work out preliminary details. This committee consists of William Slavens McNutt, Frank Butler, Waldemar Young, Kubec Glasmon, Bess Meredyth, Tom Reed and William Conselman. Neil McCarthy, attorney, will serve as counsel for the committee and for the organization in meetings with the producers. Ratification of the proposed constitution and election of officers will be held at the next meeting.

An announcement said that the chief purpose of the organization was to protect writers from interference by the Authors League and the Dramatists Guild, a chief component of the League. The group would prevent no one from obtaining a job as a screen writer, it was said.

Critical of Guild Moves

Explaining the mass walkout from the Screen Writers Guild, spokesmen for the new group asserted that the Guild had acted in recent developments without proper authority.

Sharply critical of the Guild's moves for a closed shop, Mr. Hughes over the weekend charged that merger with the Authors League would create "an amalgamated soviet of writers, which, if it got mad on me, could forbid me every form of writing in every field."

PRODUCERS SQUELCH WRITERS' CLOSED SHOP

A move by organized writers to impose aspects of closed shop conditions on the Hollywood studios was scotched this week when all large producers banded together in a decision to refrain from purchasing material for the screen which carries any conditions governing the writer to be employed to prepare the material.

The producers said, in a statement, that they had agreed that no play or manuscript would be acquired now or in the future with restrictions as to who shall write the screen play.

The decision is understood to be an outgrowth of a plan by the Dramatists' and Screen Writers' Guilds to ban all but writers' Guild members from adaptations.

Of the 125 writers who severed their Guild connections within a week, a majority were employed by Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount and Warner. Scattered secessionists are with Universal, Columbia, RKO and Republic. Those tendering their resignations generally explained that they felt the Guild no longer was acting in the best interests of the writers. The Guild membership is now reduced to about 800.

Sign Long-Term Contracts

Meanwhile, surprising members of the Guild, Allen Rivkin, long identified as one of the Guild leaders, and Leonard Praskins signed a new long-term contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, in direct contravention of the Guild's Article 12 which forbids the signing of contracts for services beyond May 2, 1938. Their contracts are for five years, with one year's option, calling for 40 out of 52 weeks of work. A number of other resigning members were reported accepting long-term contracts.

The controverted Article 12 was rescinded by the membership at a meeting over the weekend. The Guild lost considerable ground in its fight with the studios by the move, which was described as a "strategic retreat." It was not expected to affect the affiliation with the Authors' League, however, and it is understood the Guild has no idea of withdrawing its closed shop campaign.

Hollywood dispatches early this week said that as a test to determine how much power the Guild has over its members, William Rankin, Paramount writer and one of the first Guild members to resign, has instructed his attorney to file a suit for declaratory relief from his Guild contract, unless his resignation was immediately accepted.

New Organization To Be Protective Group for Cooperation, "Within All Reason," with Producers of Films

The Guild's membership contract specifies that if any member violates any provision concerning relations with the studios, the member would be liable to a fine of $10,000. There is a question concerning the validity of the penalty, which Guild leaders claim they can impose on resigning members.

The group of 19 high-bracket writers issuing the call for the formation of the independent writers' organization, to cooperate fully with the producers, consisted of Rupert Hughes, Bess Meredyth, Tom Reed, William Slavens McNutt, Frank Butler, Bert Kalmar, Herman J. Mankiewicz, Waldemar Young, John Lee Mahin, E. Richard Schayer, Grover Jones, Roy Chancellor, James K. McGuiness, Carey Wilson, William Conselman, Patterson McNutt, Kubec Glasmon, Leon Gordon and Howard Emmett Rogers.

Ernest Pascal, president of the Guild, asked William Koenig, Universal production executive, to participate in negotiations that might lead to a general settlement. Mr. Koenig rejected the overture within an hour.

Meanwhile, with the Guild officially acknowledging that 118 resignations had been received by Tuesday, the script situation was in turmoil, and it was feared that some production schedules would be delayed a month.

Dorothy Parker and Donald Ogden Stewart were elected to the executive board, succeeding James K. McGuinness and Patterson McNutt, resigned.

Roy Howard, head of the Scripps-Howard chain of newspapers, entered the fight when he wired Mr. Hughes, who will be asked to head the new group, commending him for his stand against the attempted "creation of a writers' Soviet." He said he had instructed his newspapers to keep close watch on the situation.

No Swope Successor Set On Metropolitan's Board

Although Herbert Bayard Swope resigned some time ago as chairman of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum board, he has not been replaced on the directorate of Metropolitan Playhouses. KAO owns 20 per cent of the Metropolitan Playhouses stock and because of this interest has had a representative on the board.

With the Metropolitan board scheduled to meet May 20, there is no certainty a successor to Mr. Swope will be named. Officially, the circuit has not been advised of Mr. Swope's resignation and until it is no moves will be made. If, and when, it is decided to replace Mr. Swope, directors of Metropolitan will ask Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey, who approved of the original setup, to officially sanction the new man. It is possible that Leo Spitz, head of the RKO circuit, will fill the Swope vacancy.

U.S. COURT SETS RIGHTS OF INDUSTRY IN "PUBLIC DOMAIN"

Not Entirely Free As Story Source, Is Ruling in Refusing to Uphold MGM in "Letty Lynton" Plagiarism Charge

The United States supreme court's refusal a few days ago to uphold Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the "Letty Lynton" plagiarism case against it, has a significance of industrywide import in determining the highly controversial question of the extent of the rights of the industry to use the "public domain" as a source of supply for screen entertainment.

By its decision the highest tribunal in the nation served notice on the whole industry that the public domain is not entirely free as a story source, that the material in that field is governed by certain restrictions.

Refusing to review a decision of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals awarding damages to playwrights Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes, against MGM, for alleged infringement of their play, "Dishonored Lady," in Metro's motion picture, "Letty Lynton," the supreme court left producers who have used or are now using public domain material in a serious quandary as to the legal standing of such themes until the companies' attorneys had thoroughly digested the court's opinion.

Virtually the entire industry, represented by all of the large producers and nine independent companies, had joined the defendant Metro in petitioning the high court for relief. The decision, therefore, was an upset to all. The case was considered one of the most important brought to Washington in recent years on the question of plagiarism, suits for which are filed against large companies with growing frequency.

See "Heavy Burden on Industry"

Among those signing the petition as amici curiae were Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner Brothers, First National, Paramount, RKO, Columbia, Republic, Liberty, Resolute, B. F. Zeidman Productions, Stage and Screen Productions, Spectrum, DuWorld, Academy, Talisman, Aeolian and Aladdin Pictures.

The refusal of the supreme court to grant a review in effect affirms the decision of the lower circuit court, regarding which these 17 petitioning companies said in their appeal: "If the decision below stands, it will impose a very heavy burden upon producers and distributors of motion pictures, upon the motion picture industry in general and upon the public which resorts to it for amusement."

The industry is particularly concerned in the interpretation of the law as it applies to the public domain, the interested companies explained to the high court. "If this source of material is restricted or its free use rendered hazardous or doubtful, the effect upon the industry will, indeed, be very serious. The law as it affects the rights of prior and subsequent adaptors of a public domain work is of immediate importance to them as producers of motion pictures."

The playwrights Sheldon and Barnes brought the action against MGM, charging plagiarism of their copyrighted play, "Dishonored Lady," in 1934, in the federal district court in New York. That court returned a verdict against the plaintiffs, in favor of MGM, but on January 17, 1936, the circuit court of appeals reversed the lower court, acting on the plaintiff's plea. MGM then petitioned the United States supreme court for a review, which last week was denied, leaving the case standing as a decision against MGM for plagiarism.

ACTION EXTENDED ON PLAGIARISM ACTIONS

Echoes to charges of plagiarism against large companies were heard this week on both coasts:

Zachary Zemby, New York dramatic writer, in a suit in Los Angeles, charged that Warner Brothers and George R. Bilson, a writer at the studio, used the theme of his play, "Alimony Nuts," for Warners' motion picture, "We're in the Money." Plaintiff Zemby desires to get "in the money," asking $2,990 damages and an accounting of the profits of the film.

Asserting that the motion picture "The Ghost Goes West" was a plagiarism, Wallace Irwin filed suit in federal court in New York Tuesday, asking an injunction and an accounting for damages against the London Film Productions, Ltd., United Artists Corporation and Robert E. Sherwood, author.

Federal Judge Murray Hulbert, in New York, directed United Artists and affiliated defendants in a copyright infringement action for $500,000, involving "Roman Scandals," to submit to examination before trial and provide the plaintiffs with a copy of the motion picture script and a positive print of the film. The order was in connection with an action brought by Mort Eisman, Clara Dellar and Robert Louis Shayon against Samuel Goldwyn, producer of "Roman Scandals," Eddie Cantor, the star, and United Artists, which distributed. The defendants this week denied the allegation.

Both the motion picture and the stage play were based upon an account in the public domain of a famous poisoning case and sensational trial in Scotland in the 1850's. In appealing the decision to the supreme court, Metro pointed out that the question involved also affected many other plays and pictures, all taken from the public domain, including such pictures as "Abraham Lincoln" and "David Copperfield." Many of the stories in the public domain have been picturized many times.

In its petition MGM also pointed out that on the minimum damage clause of the copyright law's penalties for violation, it might be subject to penalties running as high as $2,000,000 on the basis of a $250 fine per violation at each of the 8,000 theatres which played the picture.

Can't Excuse Use of Another's Dramatic Adaptation by Plea That Plaintiff Lifted the Material From Public Domain

"The questions decided are of great importance because they involve the construction of the copyright act, and their decision directly affects the purpose of said act as declared by the constitution, and because of their effect upon a great industry of international scope which through the medium of motion pictures is engaged in the dramatization of historical events and standard works in the public domain," MGM asserted in its petition. "They are of great importance in the trial of all copyright cases in the federal courts."

"The film industry could not long live nor progress without the free use of public domain material and treatments; nor do we think it was the purpose of the copyright act to restrict the legitimate use of the prior art nor the free and untrammeled use of existing dramatic rules and natural forms of treatment," the producers told the high court in their plea.

In their brief opposing the granting of the review, the complaining authors declared that, "if even a 'very modest grade of art has in it something irreducible which is one man's alone,' the apprehension of amici curiae seems unwarranted, and if authors can be secure for limited times to the exclusive right to their writing, the useful arts will be promoted and the dearth of material visioned by the petitioners and amici curiae will in some measure be alleviated by stimulating their own writers to individual effort and encouraging other authors by the protection thus afforded."

Based on Murder Trial Incident

The specific public domain incident on which both the motion picture and the play were based was the celebrated trial of Madeleine Smith in Scotland in 1857 for the murder of her lover, Emile Pierre L'Angelier.

Metro had purchased the play, written by Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes, but its production was banned by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in 1931. Thereafter, the producers obtained rights to a novel, written by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, and based on the trial and filmed a picture acceptable to the MPPDA.

Madeleine Smith was a beautiful girl who charmed L'Angelier, a guitar-playing, handsome young Frenchman. Tiring of him, she became engaged to a young Scotsman. The lovers arranged a final meeting, at which he died of arsenic poisoning.

She was tried for murder, acquitted through false testimony by her new fiance and her sister. She spent the rest of her days, according to the play, in dishonor. The motion picture version has a happy ending, with the death of L'Angelier caused by his accidental taking of poison she intended to take herself.

Cite Confusion

Motion picture attorneys say that the new supreme court decision has caused considerable confusion within the industry. For an understanding of the case, it is important to note, as the circuit court of appeals pointed out, that copyright protection is different from patent protection, they said. A patent must not only be new and original and never be anticipated by anyone before its invention, but once obtained the patentee can for 17 years exclude any future inventor of the same device, no matter if the future invention is independently conceived without knowledge or copying of the first patented invention.

COURT LIMITS USE OF "PUBLIC DOMAIN"

"Anticipation" is of no importance in the case of copyrights, they said. A copyright must be originally conceived by its author, but this does not mean that it necessarily has to be new or that it was not anticipated by other authors, whether in the public domain or subject to copyright. Hence, the copyright owner's protection is limited to preventing others from "copying" his creation. Therefore, a vital part of every copyright case is proof, circumstantial or direct, that the alleged infringer had "access" to the copyright work in order to accomplish the alleged "copying."

Negotiated for Play

Access was an undisputed fact in the "Letty Lynton" case, according to the circuit court of appeals, it being pointed out that J. Robert Rubin and Irving Thalberg, both Metro officials, had negotiated for the play and had various treatments of it, prepared by the authors, in their hands from time to time. Also, the MGM scenario writers assigned to preparing the play admitted that they had seen performances of the play, and one of the scenario writers had in fact read the manuscript of the play.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, however, claimed that it did not use the play, but a novel, "Letty Lynton," written and published in England at about the same time the "play" was copyrighted in the United States, resemblances being due to the fact that both "novel" and "play" depended for source material upon the famous public trial in Scotland in 1857 which was in the public domain. The novel itself was admittedly not an infringement upon the play.

Differences of Interpretation

In the United States district court for the Southern District of New York, Judge Woolsey first dismissed the complaint upon the ground that the basic plot was in the public domain, and therefore it was not important to determine whether or not the defendants, having admitted access thereto, copied from the play. In other words, the basic plot not being part of the private domain secured by the copyright for the play, no objection could be voiced to any alleged trespass on such domain. Judge Woolsey pointed out that without such basic plot, but with merely the picture and play before him, together with the admitted access, he might have held for the owners of the play, because he felt there was a substantial taking of the plaintiff's "arangement" of literary material, particularly in the sequence of the threat scene, the poison scene, and the investigation scene.

Then, on appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the Second Circuit, Judge Woolsey's decision was reversed.

The attorneys said the circuit court of appeals held that, a copyright, being unlike a patent, a man might by some magic become an original author of and secure copyright for a work, such as Keats' "Ode to a Grecian Urn," which is, of course, in the public domain. Yet such author would be entitled to prevent others from "copying" his Ode although such infringers would have a perfect right to copy directly from Keats' work in the public domain. In other words, the public domain is only important to lend plausibility to the infringer's argument that his access was accomplished by direct consultation with the public domain material and not with the complaining author's copyright. The court cited the cases of copyrighted maps, charts, and encyclopedias, based extensively upon compilations or compendia of public domain materials, where it has been held that the infringer must not use the short cut of appropriating the copyrighting compiler's labor, but must directly consult the public domain source materials. The circuit court of appeals concluded that, since infringement of a play is not limited solely to the appropriation of its dialogue to the exclusion of other factors giving it dramatic meaning, there was evidence that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had lifted, "perhaps unconsciously," substantial parts from the play.

PUBLIC DOMAIN— WHAT IT MEANS

The term "public domain" may literally be considered to mean "public property."

All literary or musical works on which no copyrights exist are in the public domain, meaning that they may be put to any purpose, in any manner, without restriction.

The United States copyright laws provide that a work which is copyrighted is protected against infringement for 28 years. Upon expiration, the copyright may be renewed for an equal period. If not renewed, the protection expires and the work enters the public domain.

All works of foreign origin not copyrighted in the United States are in the public domain here, though they may be protected by copyright abroad. Works originating in countries with which we have no reciprocal treaty also are public property in this country.

The circuit court of appeals directed an injunction against the picture, together with a decree for damages and an accounting. The damages have not yet been calculated or assessed. This will be done by the lower court, probably after referring the same to a master for a report.

The plaintiffs have set forth in their complaint 84 causes of action for which damages of, at least, $250 for each exhibition of the picture are demanded, or a total of a minimum of $21,000. It has been stated that similar damages may be demanded for the exhibitions of "Letty Lynton" in approximately 8,000 theatres throughout the United States.

This does not necessarily mean that such a sum will be recovered, it was pointed out. While there is no limit as to the amount of actual provable damages, plus profits, which the copyright proprietor may recover from the infringer, "statutory in lieu of" damages are, as their name implies, an optional alternative for the copyright owner. Under a 1912 amendment to Section 25 of the United States Copyright Law, the entire sum of statutory damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from an infringing maker of motion pictures and his agencies for distribution to exhibitors shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 nor be less than $250 where the infringer shows that he was not aware that he was infringing and that the infringement could not have reasonably been foreseen. After actual notice, however, there is no limitation as to amount.

The awarding of any amount above $250 is, however, wholly in the discretion of the trial judge, and as the supreme court held in 1935, (Douglas v. Cunningham, 294 U. S. 207), the circuit court of appeals has no power to review the trial judge's discretion. The hearings by the U. S. Patents Committee in 1912 on the Townsend bill which resulted in this amendment to the damage section, as well as the debate on the floor of Congress just preceding its enactment, are considered to indicate clearly that one of the purposes of this amendment was to avoid liability for statutory damages on the part of the thousands of innocent exhibitors who show the plagiarized picture, and to limit such liability to the maker and his agencies for distribution. Whether or not this intention of Congress was carried out by the language in the amendment has never been adjudicated, and there is a conflict of opinion among copyright lawyers.

Urge Distinction

In Metro's petition for the writ of certiorari to the supreme court of the United States, which has just been denied, the defendants claim that there should be a distinction between imaginative literary compositions and maps, charts, directories and compendia. In the latter type of case, say the defendants, the law merely protects the labor of compilation and requires the second comer to consult the original sources; thus, there can be no "unconscious" plagiarism. By failing to observe this distinction, the defendants claim the circuit court of appeals extended copyright protection to public domain material and denied to the defendants the right to make use of such material; and, further that the limitation of proof of the public domain only to those works actually consulted during composition sets an impossible standard which can only be made by the inexperienced who copy the works of the masters instead of drawing upon the old materials through their own knowledge and experience.

As the situation stands today in the case, the circuit court of appeals opinion would appear to be the law. Briefly this would be: (1) one cannot excuse "conscious" or "unconscious" substantial lifting of another person's dramatic adaptation of public domain material, where "access" is indisputed, by a defense that the complaining author himself lifted a portion of his material from the public domain and that he was preceded in time by similar materials in the public domain or subject to copyrights held by others; (2) that the only way one can bring in proof of such public domain or other copyrighted materials is to negative the fact, by direct evidence, that the plaintiffs' adaptation was consulted during composition of the alleged infringing work rather than the public domain or other materials.

A New Day

When Edward Sedgwick, director of Hal Roach's "Mr. Cinderella," opened negotiations with the manager of the Coronado hotel, the manager was all smiles over the idea of his hostelry being used as a background for a film.

He offered full cooperation. Terms were easily arrived at, and Sedgwick felt that he was bringing delight to the southland until the name "Hal Roach Comedies" turned up.

The manager's face became a mask of horror.

"Never!" he cried. "I can't have all those people running over my flower beds, breaking my doors, jumping out my windows!"

And the argument lasted long, until Sedgwick finally convinced him that those comedy days were over.

The incident is funny in itself, but it also carries a strong hint to the exhibitor as to exploitation and advertising angles of the new Roach output.

Much more attention and time is being put upon production values in the forthcoming features. "Mr. Cinderella" boasts sets of modern charm that would not be excelled in a major studio production. And the cast reads like that of a major production, even the smaller parts being filled by wellknown players not commonly associated with the comedy field.

Five-Year Pact on Film-Backed Plays Ends Controversy

The dispute between playwrights and the Broadway legitimate producing-managers ended Tuesday night when the League of New York Theatres and the Dramatists Guild of the Authors League of America came to terms on a five-year basic agreement which differentiates between plays produced independently and those backed with Hollywood money.

The settlement was described as a compromise, though the managers accepted many of the Guild terms which they have been fighting for two months. The Guild prevailed in its insistence on a 60-40 split of the proceeds from sale of plays to motion picture companies, with the playwright receiving the larger share and the playwright retaining title.

The League's membership approved the pact and the Guild members are expected to ratify it at a meeting on or about May 25. The councils of both organizations have given their blessings.

Protective provisions to safeguard the interests of film companies are to be worked out by a joint committee of producing managers and playwrights.

The provisions will be in the form of instructions for the guidance of Joseph P. Bickerton, who serves as negotiator in sale of film rights. These instructions will be subject to change in advance of expiration of the basic pact if they fail to work to mutual satisfaction.

Disposition of film rights to a play independently produced shall be negotiated in the open market. Safeguards are expected to be included to prevent the forcing down of bids for film rights by limitation of outside bidders.

"Both parties want picture money in the business and both parties want pictures to get a fair deal," said Brock Pemberton, chairman of the League's contract committee. "Neither party wants to give the film interests an edge on the independent manager."

Other Problems Settled

Other points of settlement are:

1. A manager participates in the sale of film rights after a play has had 21 performances, not more than five of which can be matinees.

2. A dramatist does not have to share the proceeds of film rights if they have not been bought within 10 years after production.

3. Date of the release of the motion picture version of a play shall be set by producer and author.

4. The director of a play must be approved by the author.

5. The title page of the pact is to note that this is a "basic agreement negotiated by the Dramatists' Guild, the League of New York Theaters and other producers."

6. The manager has a six months' period during which he can arrange for London production. For the seventh month, he must pay $100, and up to $400 for the tenth month, or a total of $1,000. He receives the option for the last two months of the second period free.

7. The producer can produce one British play a year outside of the Guild contract. Foreign plays may be bought outside the pact, but adaptors and translators must be Guild members.

8. The Guild can make managers post a bond, providing it is not done arbitrarily. The Guild will make public a list of league members exempt from being required to post bonds.

9. The league can sign contracts for managers, providing it has the manager's power of attorney. Contracts between the league and the Guild must be separate for each manager.

The Poor Little Rich Girl

(20th Century-Fox)

Whimsy Comedy

This forthcoming Shirley Temple feature is being looked upon by studio officials as not only the best entertainment in which the little star has appeared but also as a picture that will be crammed with showmanship material. The basis for their opinion is the popularity of the star, quality of the story which is continually light, happy and gayly carefree, the production settings, the worth of music and dancing as included, and the strength of the supporting cast, providing practically all that is necessary to back up their anticipations.

It's a story of a rich girl who went on an unplanned vacation from her palatial Long Island home, met up with an organ grinder and his family of kids, became associated with a pair of at-liberty vaudeville and radio hoofers, and as her father is frantic in his fears that she has been kidnaped, causes a situation that brings him a highly favorable commercial and romantic merger.

From title, theme of story, star importance, quality of supporting cast, prestige of director down to music and dance credits, the picture seems to have more than enough showmanship leads to suit the fancy or desires of anyone. Names in the cast are Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley, Michael Whelan, Sara Haden and Jane Darwell all of whom have appeared recently in important 20th Century-Fox features. Additionally there is Henry Armetta, prominent in many recent pictures and whose work in the soon to be released "Let's Sing Again" will enhance his popularity, Claude Gillingwater, Paul Stanton, Arthur Hoyt and John Wray. Additionally there are about a dozen more players.

Based on stories suggested by Eleanor Gates and Ralph Spence, screen play being credited to Sam Hellman, Gladys Lehman and Harry Tugend, direction is by Irving Cummings, who made "Curly Top." Music and lyrics are by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel and the dances were arranged by Jack Haskell and Ralph Cooper.

Fatal Lady

(Paramount)

Drama and Mystery

Aptly titled, this is the story of a woman in whose trail followed tragedy and death. It features Mary Ellis, noted grand opera star, who made her screen debut in "All the King's Horses." Though romantic love interest is the motivation for its drama, the reaction to this quality is melodramatic mystery. The men who sought to find favor in the affections of the fatal lady met sudden and violent deaths. Everywhere she went tragedy followed. Built of essentials that have definite dramatic appeal, the story provides but little comedy contrast, but in the place of this supposedly necessary ingredient is an atmosphere of song and music that the producers are counting upon as being sufficiently strong to assure the contrast.

Locales of the story are the Argentine and Paris. Miss Ellis, an aspiring singer, joins a small time touring operating troupe. Eventually playing a dual role, the first meets Allan Mowbray, a rich rancher, who falls in love with her. He uses his influence to have the company booked into more prominent theatres. There is romantic conflict as the girl meets and falls in love with Norman Foster. Mowbray is mysteriously killed and Miss Ellis is tried and exonerated. Against the wishes of Walter Pidgeon, Foster follows the fatal fascination to Paris and he is killed. As Pidgeon falls in love with her both combine their efforts to uncover the mysterious assassin in the climax.

Based on a play by Harry Segal, the adaptation is by Samuel Ornitz and Horace McCoy. Edward Ludwig is the director. In addition to the names mentioned, the cast includes John Halliday, Ruth Donnelly, Guy Bates Post, Samuel Hinds, Edgar Kennedy, Albert Conti, Irene Franklin, Otto Hoffman and Jean Rouveral.

On Secret Service

(Warner)

Action Romance Drama

Being geared to a thrill action, dramatic suspense key, here is a story of espionage and guerrilla warfare during the Civil War. A combination western-war story, it is full of those elements presumed to be appealing to those who like their entertainment plenty exciting.

A young operative is commissioned by President Lincoln to get information about a guerrilla band that is playing havoc with the Union cause in the Midwest. Breaking up a stage coach robbery he falls in love with a charming young woman passenger. Robbed of his credentials, he gets a job in a saloon gambling house and is amazed to find the girl also working there as an entertainer. Various depredations ensuing with the fraudulent possessors of his credentials taking full advantage of them, the operative is arrested on a robbery charge. About to be executed, he overhears information, and making his escape he turns the tables on the guerrillas and during the ensuing melee also learns that the girl is a government operative. Back in Washington, he is rewarded with a higher ranking commission and marriage.

The story is an original screen play by Anthony Coldeway and is being directed by Noel Smith.

It features a familiar list of players with Dick Foran and Paula Stone in the leading roles. Others are Gordon Elliott, Joseph King, Addison Richards, Eddie Shubert, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Stuart Holmes, Henry Otho, Frank Prince and Milton Kibbee.

And Sudden Death

(Tentative title)

(Paramount)

Topical

Several months ago Reader's Digest published an article, subsequently it was picked up and made the subject of news and editorial comment by a great number of newspapers and magazines, the public reacted to it in a manner seldom approached from a point of interest and action, March of Time made it a subject of its pictorial release, and Paramount was quick to realize its value as screen material that would be highly educational. Primarily the forthcoming "And Sudden Death" (tentative title) looms as a sensational exploitation feature. Nevertheless a sincere effort is being exerted to assure that the picture shall also be entertaining drama.

The theme of the picture is death on the highways, tragedies and heartbreak directly attributable to careless and criminal automobile driving. For romantic and dramatic purposes the picture is built around a situation in which a speeding auto with a maniacal driver at the wheel almost ruins the life of a beautiful girl. That instance is the awakening of a civic warfare that enlists the cooperation of every organization in the perils of reckless driving.

Bringing the graphic action story to screen realism is a cast that numbers many prominent names. It lists Randolph Scott, Frances Drake, Tom Brown, Billy Lee, Fuzzy Knight, Charles Quigley, Terry Walker, Porter Hall, John Hyams, Joseph Sawyer and Oscar Apfel, and others.

Regardless, however, of screen name, director, writers or other credit values, the picture is concerned with a topical theme that is always of supreme interest in any community. On its merits as an educational feature, as it continually stresses carefulness and consideration of rights of others, it merits a chain of civic contacts seldom available to picture exploitation.

Guns and Guitars

(Republic)

Action Romance Drama

The title and the name of its leading player Gene Autry, identify this production's character. It is a western, retaining all the thrill action, romance, dramatic menace and conflict elements, but it does not follow formula. In line with the new style of making outdoor action pictures different, it has a musical content which, as presented instrumentally and vocally, gives the feature a refreshing departure.

Based on a story by J. P. McGowan, with Joseph Kane, who has handled several recent Republic pictures and director here, the music presented is credited to Autry, Smiley Burnette and Oliver Drake, the last two of whom also appear in the picture.

Photographed almost entirely outdoors, the locale being Texas and the time when it was a great cattle breeding state, the action precipitates Autry and his troubador cowboy cohorts into the midst of a dramatic cattleman's war. Coming to the rescue of a girl whose father is believed to have been slain by outlaws, a truce is declared while the cattle folk prepare to settle their differences by vote rather than by gunfire. As the woman's vote prevails over the forces of the outlaws, the stage is set for an action packed gun fight, in which the desperadoes are overcome, brought to justice and proved guilty of rustling and murder.

As Autry and his horse Champion are starred, he shares the romantic context of the story with Dorothy Dix. The supporting cast is made up almost exclusively of players who specialize in westerns. Included are Burnette, Tom London, Charles King, Earle Hodgins, Frank Marvin, Jack Rockwell, Ken Cooper,

MAYOR ON SIDELINES IN OPERATORS' CLASH

Mayor Leaves Handling of Revived Issue of Rival Unions to Police Commissioner

Determining that the public is not seriously involved, at least for the time being, Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York City is pursuing a policy of inactivity in the current operators' union fight, which last week brought from Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, an urgent appeal to the mayor to intercede.

A spokesman for the mayor said this week that the chief magistrate had referred Mr. Brandt's plea to Police Commissioner Valentine, inasmuch as the situation was one that the police department was fully capable of controlling.

"If the commissioner asks for the mayor's help or if the situation gets out of hand, the mayor will then probably step in," the spokesman said. "The fight is an internal one between unions, and right now is purely a police matter."

In respect to Mr. Brandt's request that Mayor LaGuardia use his influence to effect peace, the mayor's office recalled that last summer he appointed as arbitrator Frank Tichenor, publisher, who recently withdrew after unsuccessful negotiations.

"There is more in this situation than appears on the surface," the mayor's spokesman said.

Meanwhile picketing by Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, continues full force at 46 theatres in metropolitan New York, with cross picketing by Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union in the Times Square section and in the Bronx.

Charges and counter-charges are rife on all sides, and observers consider the situation deeply muddled.

Mr. Brandt's intimations, in his letter to the mayor, that at a time when Local 306 complained of an unemployment problem it advertised in the newspapers for prospective members with a view to using them as pickets, brought the explanation from the union that it seeks additional members to replace the Allied and Empire State operators' union men "when they are ousted in the drive of Local 306 to create one powerful union in New York City."

The local said that with two men in a booth and "decent working conditions" at all houses, there would be sufficient jobs for the city's 5,000 licensed operators, other than those who have not practiced their trade for some time.

Picketing Is Peaceful

While Local 306 anticipated considerable disturbance, the picketing, which is on a schedule of from 11 A. M. to 10 P. M., generally has been peaceful. At each of two houses in Brooklyn, the Parkway and Mapleton, both non-union, Local 306 posted 50 men over the week-end for mass picketing.

The ITOA has taken the position that it will not participate in any peace moves or further negotiations toward a merger of the three unions unless George E. Browne, international president of the IATSE, takes charge.

The amenities of labor warfare as conducted in the Brooklyn section of New York City came to light this week with the granting of a temporary injunction by Judge Alonzo G. McLaughlin in New York supreme court against Mollie Bender and 26 others who had banded together as a "women's auxiliary" seeking the rehiring of three operators.

The men, members of the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union, were discharged for inefficiency at the Midwood, Patio and Sheepshead Bay theatres, according to the plaintiffs' attorneys, and were replaced by others from the same union. Thereupon, the wives, mothers, sisters, other relatives and friends of the discharged operators, calling themselves a "women's auxiliary," launched a picketing campaign against the Oceana theatre, operated by the Triad Holding Corporation, in the same neighborhood.

The burden of their demand was that Rugoff and Becker, operating agents of the Triad corporation, use their influence with the Century circuit officials to reinstate their relatives. The true names of some of the defendants were not known, and aliases were given.

The court ruled that since the Oceana was in no way connected with the other theatres and not involved in any labor trouble, it would be unjust to permit the picketing, which created a false impression that a strike was underway.

Holding that this was not a labor dispute within the meaning of the civil practice act, Judge McLaughlin ordered that the defendants and "their members, agents, confederates, associates, servants and employees," and all persons acting in concert or conspiring with them, be restrained, within an area of two blocks from the Oceana, from interfering with the operation of the house, intimidating prospective patrons, distributing handbills containing untruthful statements, holding mass meetings near the theatre or displaying signs such as "Protest the firing of three union operators by the owners of this theatre" and "Do not patronize until the fired men are reinstated."

The case is scheduled for a hearing in the fall.

Garvey; business managers, Vincent Jacobi and Frank Powderly; board of trustees, William F. Hall, chairman, and Morris Fox and Joseph Gehlman; sergeant-at-arms, Charles S. Murphy.

Sins of Man

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

"Sins of Man" is a class picture. In theme, as acted and in morale it points its primary appeal at those who understand and appreciate fine things. In content it is a somber toned, sympathy-inspiring, human interest drama. Bare of embellishing details, it is the character drama of a man, his joys and disappointments, his hopes and his disillusionments, his tragedy and his triumph. There is no romance, as that quality is commonly understood, in the picture. There is, however, a love interest, the affection of a father for his sons, the drama this love precipitates, and the happiness it finally brings that transcends by far the potency of banal love affairs in its power to play upon the more tender emotions. The picture will not be an easy one to sell. Though it presents Jean Hersholt, star of "The Country Doctor," in a magnificent role, introduces Don Ameche, popular radio favorite, to the screen, and has many accomplished actors in its cast, name value as judged by ordinary standards is not very impressive. The title, furthermore, is hardly one that seems capable of inspiring quick interest. The character of the story is such that it is not easy to explain to average audiences. But for the exhibitor who seeks something apart from the formula standbys to sell, "Sins of Man" provides plenty with which to exercise his showmanship ingenuity.

In all its phases, even where comedy predominates, the picture is pitched to an impressive key. Greyman is a simple and deeply religious peasant. His great loves are his home, family and the church in which he is the bell-ringer. His dream is that his first son, Karl, will follow in his footsteps. His first tragedy is the death of his wife upon the birth of the second son, Mario. As years pass his lot becomes drearier. Karl is interested only in aeronautics. No pleas that Freyman can make can change the boy's ambitions. Mario is deaf and dumb, an affliction forever debarring him from taking his father's place.

Leaving home, Karl goes to New York. Temporary success leads him to invite his father to join him, to the end that together both can acquire the finances necessary to cure the younger son's affliction. Karl is killed in a crash. Freyman is told that Mario has been killed in an air raid at the outbreak of war. Discouraged, disillusioned, clinging only to his simple faith, Freyman, a stranger in a strange country, is reduced to the status of a bum, acceptor of any menial task, living in a flop house, butt of rude jokes and befriended only by Crusty.

Years pass. Janitor in cruel, unfeeling Twicheleska's pawn shop, Freyman hears a phonograph record. Over the strains of a symphony, he hears the melody he once played on his church chimes. With Crusty he attends a concert which the famous musician Singarelli is conducting. Again he hears the old notes. He knows that there must be some connection between himself and the great maestro. The world conspires to keep them apart, but a man who has suffered much cannot be denied. Singarelli learns of the old man who has been bothering his retinue. Seeking him out, father and son are reunited. Dreams that the vicissitudes of years have shattered come true. His boy, who was believed dead, has become the great musician that was the hope of Freyman's life.

Because of its character, "Sins of Man" is that kind of worthy entertainment that may prove difficult to sell. Ordinary procedure is hardly applicable in connection with it. As the picture is different from any late or current trend, it is necessary that different methods be attempted in selling it. Concentration of attention on the depth of feeling and drama of the picture undoubtedly will arouse the interest of the class patronage. But in most cases, where it probably is not possible to devote much time or money to exploitation, the stunt of showing the picture to the community's opinion-makers may prove effective in stimulating word-of-mouth advertising based upon their comments to create interest among the average theatregoers.

Previewed in Chinese Theatre, Hollywood. The audience watched the showing with much attention. The work of Hersholt impressed it greatly. Unon conclusion it demonstrated by applause that it appreciated entertainment that is distinctly different.

Three Wise Guys

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Comedy, romantic love interest and light menace drama are the ingredients of this picture. Following the style of its author, Damon Runyon, it is well put together. For the field in which it is likely that it will be most played, it affords the advantages of better than usual production values, an attention holding story and an adequate group of cast names, all of whom play their parts with sincerity and conviction.

The premise of story is unique. Wise guy trio Clarabelle, Doc and Blackie believe in making their living by their wits. Breach of promise suits with Clarabelle as the lure is their standby racket. They try it on Joe, son of railroad magnate Hatcher, but Clarabelle falls in love with him and an elopement marriage ensues. Joe disowned by his father and Clarabelle in wrong with her partners who think she has double-crossed them, move east. The boy gets a job, but always there is the menace of Doc and Blackie around who can't believe that Clarabelle wants to go straight. The pair pull a robbery job for which Joe is arrested. Convinced that that's vengeance enough on Clarabelle, the duo go to an old barn on Joe's farm to recover the loot. They find Clarabelle there awaiting childbirth. Doc reverts to his old profession as a doctor to save her life. At it's Christmas season, their hearts are touched, the bonds are returned, the little family is reconciled with Hatcher, and Doc and Blackie pass out of Clarabelle's life forever.

The show is nicely paced, situations move to the tune of engaging dialogue and action, and a spirit is created that gives the picture an unusual amount of human interest.

The Princess Comes Across

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

A mixture of farce comedy, differently concocted love interest and murder mystery melodrama, this picture provides much to engage the attention of both exhibitor and show-goer. Fresh in concept, played against an atmosphere of easy gayety, its amusement quality is a worthy follow-up to "Hands Across the Table," in which its stars recently appeared. The story character, though sometimes seemingly complicated, particularly in the melodramatic chapters, carries a quickly interest-creating appeal. Well acted and directed, produced against good looking settings, moving to the pitch of smart dialogue and rapid action, it makes available for commercial purposes the exploitation worth of a popular screen team, an amusing yarn in which there is no lack of variety and a list of supporting players, name worth of which is high ranking.

Humor is the picture's keynote. There's fun in the situation that brings show-girl Princess Olga, masquerading as a Swedish noblewoman, and her companion Lady Gertrude, likewise a shamming trouper, into romantic conflict with bandleader King Mantell and his handy man Benton. Hitting a satirical pitch as Olga burlesques a wellknown screen star, the atmosphere of fun continues into the melodramatic murder mystery sequences. As Darcy indulges in a little blackmailing and the escaped convict, The Stranger, supplies menace, a murder is committed. Aboard the liner where all the action happens are a group of old world police officials. With the murder, they are beseeched by Captain Nicholls to capture the criminal and prevent further killings. As Olga is drawn into the case as principal suspect, Mantell takes a hand not only to protect the girl with whom he has fallen in love, but also to aid the famous sleuths.

Purposely complicating the action in order to maintain suspense, permit the comedy contrast to continue and forestall advance solutions, dramatic tempo approaching the finale has an attention arresting smash until in a farcical way Mantell tabs the killer and sets himself in solid with the Brooklyn princess.

The kind of picture that affords something to sell in addition to routine leads, it is one that can be expected to benefit by word of mouth advertising. Introduced to audiences as a comedy worthy of their attention, the prestige of the Carole Lombard-Fred MacMurray popularity can be looked upon as an initial lead to stir primary interest. Directing efforts to getting a good audience for first showings should result in word of mouth advertising advantageous to subsequent presentations.

Previewed in Fox Village Theatre, Westwood. Inattentive audience found much to appreciate in the picture's comedy and plenty to hold the attention in the mystery melodrama.

Devil's Squadron

(Columbia)

Aviation Drama

Modern aviation has been pretty well covered, cinematically, during recent months, but this is not just another aviation picture. It deals with those men without whom there would be no ships to fly and who are the real unsung heroes of flying—the test pilots.

The picture is a gripping, although too often grim, affair with romance and comedy relief shoved into the background by the stern and dramatic business of testing a new airplane—the film's villain. Drawing the women may be the exploitation job; appeal is there for the men, particularly those who appreciate a good fight against what appear to be unsurmountable odds.

Showmen are presented with excellent exploitation material, for the picture goes behind the scenes, pushing aside all the thrills, frills and glamour of flying, and shows how planes are made and tested before the general run of flyers are allowed to even see them. More than that, the men usually unknown who build them and make them safe are glorified by a pictorial record of their too often short-lived existence.

For name values there are Richard Dix, Karen Morley, Shirley Ross, Henry Mollison and Gene Morgan. Dick Grace, glorified by numerous fan magazine stories and former premier stunt flier for pictures, wrote the story.

Against the background of a commercial airplane plant, and adjacent flying field, the tragic air parade goes on, with one experimental plane cracking up after another through some fault of design, killing the pilot or maiming him for life. Into this comes Dix, ex-Marine living under another name in an effort to hide an unfortunate experience of the days when he was a soldier. Dana Kirk, chief engineer on the new job, and former Marine pal of Dix, is giving him another chance as chief test pilot of the new ship.

The first of the series of fatalities at the field, after Dix arrives, is the sudden death of Colonel Dawson, designer of the plane, in its first test flight. The colonel's daughter, Martha, tries to make Kirk, her fiance, and her brother give up the whole thing.

More tragedy stalks into the midst of the fast dwindling group when Martha's brother loses his nerve and commits suicide on the eve of tests before Army officials. Dix, to save the family from such a stigma, places the dead boy in the plane, takes him up and bails out after setting it afire. He is tried by the Department of Commerce for leaving his ship before the copilot and at the hearing the story of his similar experience in the Marines comes to light. Dix loses his flying license and the respect of Kirk and the woman he loves, Martha.

He exonerates himself, however, by taking Kirk's place for the final test, the dangerous power dive at terminal velocity, and successfully putting the plane through its paces to the amazement of the Army officers. Before he reaches the ground, however, another pilot tells of the suicide and the true version of the Marine affair. Thus Dix is cleared all around and wins Martha for his wife.

Interspersed through the story are scenes in which a speedy Northrop plane does amazing stunts all over the sky in a most authentic fashion.

We Are from Kronstadt

(Amkino)

Russian Drama

Produced by Mosfilm, Moscow, and supplied with English titles that interpret the moderately apportioned Russian dialogue, "We Are from Kronstadt" depicts at length and in detail the fighting between the Red and White armies in 1919. The part played by the sailors from Kronstadt is emphasized and a slender love interest is sharply subordinated to the war theme.

Early footage graphically establishes the historical setting with dialogue held at minimum. Humor is used briefly in a recruiting sequence leading up to the grim scenes of fighting, execution and rescue which make up the major portion of the picture. The end comes abruptly and violently.

Artem Balashov, a sailor of Kronstadt, is the principal character. At the start of the picture he is rebellious against discipline. When his company marches to the defense of Petrograd the White army surrounds them, kills all but a few and throws these from a cliff into the ocean. Balashov is the sole survivor. He returns to Kronstadt, tells of the condition of the Red army, which is outnumbered by the Whites, and leads the remaining members of the garrison to the rescue, ultimately driving the Whites over the same cliff to death.

The Singing Cowboy

(Republic)

Western Comedy Drama

Gene Autry's singing of western ballads, with which this picture opens and closes and to which approximately half of the screening time is given over in between, is its dominant exploitation factor. Another unusual angle consists of the presentation of television as a realized, commercially practiced and generally accepted medium for the dissemination of entertainment and advertising sales copy. Nevertheless, the setting is the west and there is lots of riding, shooting and a reasonable amount of murder, arson and related villainy. The performance of Lon Chaney, Jr., as the bad man in the plot, may serve as a focal point of incidental copy in certain cases.

The story is about Gene Autry, cast as Gene Autry, top cowhand in a ranch outfit owned in partnership by one Stevens and his partner, Martin. Stevens catches Martin stealing their own ponies and is murdered, fire destroying the barn and escaping horses trampling upon Lou-Ann, Stevens' small daughter, whose guardian Autrey becomes by terms of Stevens' will. Her injuries require an expensive operation and Autry organizes his fellow cowboys into a radio feature which he sells to Covered Wagon Coffee to earn money to pay for it. Martin, knowing there is gold on the ranch property, seeks to break the program, which has been joined meanwhile by Helen Blake, missing daughter of the Covered Wagon Coffee Company president. Autry is given reward money offered for discovery of her whereabouts, finances the operation, marries Helen, saves the ranch, effects arrest of Martin and makes everything come out even without missing a broadcast.

(Franco-American)

French Melodrama

The unusual if not unnatural love of a matron for her godson turns out, after much detail pertaining to the influence of environment upon a boy reared by a professional overseer of roulette tables, appears to be the principal theme of this importation. It is not a kind of subject matter in use in American pictures and the production has been supplied with English titles that make clear but do not emphasize the nature of the affection that prompts the godmother to extreme material sacrifices in behalf of the young man. A secondary implication is that professional gamblers always lose money, but a hard-pressed amateur is likely to do quite well at the wheel. A decidedly loose woman tress who turns cinema star. tress who turns cinema star. The picture ends

The story: Mons. and Mme. Noblet are godparents of Pierre, son of an old friend, who shares his godfather's love of roulette, which his godmother, who operates a small hotel near the casino, opposes. Pierre goes to Paris, falls in with members of a gangster's mob and enters upon an affair with the gangster's mistress. He is beaten up and returns to his godparents, his godmother concealing the facts from her husband. When Nelly, the gangster's mistress, wants to join him, Mme. Noblet pawns her jewels to obtain required funds, encourages the association and misrepresents the nature of it to her husband. Pierre obtains employment and Nelly acquires paying suitors whose attentions Mme. Noblet conceals from both Pierre and Mons. Noblet. Pierre gambles away his employer's money and comes home to find Nelly has left him. His godmother steals the funds of a hotel guest, goes to the casino and wins enough money to repay her godson's defalcations, but not before he kills himself.

Jail Break

(Warner)

Murder Mystery

A drama of murder and mystery in jail, generally moving to the tune of tense suspense, many of its sequences packed with thrill action, this is geared to sate the appetites of the sensation seekers. Mainly melodrama that has definite novelty, the picture also tells a romantic story of more than ordinary interest. Though the cast contains no outstanding names, the various players perform their allotted parts with convincing realism. Direction, likewise, demonstrates a constant intent to make the attraction vivid.

The picture opens to the tune of straight gangsterism. Ex-racketeer Big Mike, rather than get mixed up with criminals again, commits a minor crime on the advice of his secretary, Jane Rogers. He lands in a penitentiary, but for a stretch longer than he had expected. Really in jail as a matter of self-protection from crooks led by Slayden, who know he has a large fortune cached away and who have been rounded up and sentenced to the same jail by reporter Williams, Mike finds himself in a dangerous predicament. During a jail riot, his life is menaced. Follows a series of killings, climaxed by the escape of Slayden's gang. As detective Rourke comes into jail to investigate the killings, romance picks up between Jane and Williams. Convinced that someone other than Slayden, or his mob members, is guilty, he combines with Rourke to solve the mystery, with the comedy relief assitance of sob sister Gladys Joy. The solution, alive with all the elements to make it stand up, is totally different from what might be expected. Told to audiences it might spoil their interest in the picture.

Authentically portraying dangerous criminal characters and the dynamite-packed atmosphere of desperate men in prison, the picture has plenty of quality to suit the average thrill action devotees.

Previewed in Warners Hollywood Theatre. Following "Golden Arrow," the preview audience reaction indicated that the show should prove acceptable contrast to any kind of romantic dramatic feature.

Ourselves Alone

(Wardour)

Comedy Drama

This story of the Irish Revolution of 1921 is very reminiscent of "The Informer." It is a gripping story, very well directed, scenically beautiful, and well interspersed with comedy.

Acting honors go to John Lodge, as County Inspector Hannay of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and John Loder, as Captain Wiltshire, Intelligence Officer attached. Harry Hutchinson's work as the informer is excellent, and Jerry Verno as Private Parsley supplies the comic element very satisfactorily. Antoinette Cellier as Maureen Elliott has a sympathetic role which she plays quite well.

The story deals with the search of the Constabulary for the rebel leader, Michael O'Dea, who turns out to be the brother of Maureen, to whom Hannay is engaged, but with whom Wiltshire is also in love.

The informer tells of a meeting of the Rebels to take place at deserted Ballyfinnon Castle. Not knowing that her brother is the Rebel Leader, but suspecting that he is going to the secret meeting Maureen motors after him, but is caught by the Patrol who arrest her for being out after curfew.

The Rebels are surrounded at the Castle and O'Dea in trying to escape is shot down by Wiltshire, the man Maureen loves. In the excitement two other Rebels escape and going to Maureen's home force her at the point of a gun to decoy Wiltshire to them so that they can revenge the death of their leader. Maureen manages to get a code message through to Hannay, which was previously arranged between them in case of trouble, and Hannay and his Patrol arrive in the nick of time to save Wiltshire who is being taken away to be shot. Although Maureen loves Wiltshire she cannot forget that he is responsible for the death of her brother and Hannay realizing the situation releases her from her engagement to him and takes the blame for killing O'Dea, so that they may live happy ever after.

This picture would appeal to the same type of audience as "The Informer."

Lady Jane Grey

(Gainsborough-Gaumont British)

Historical Drama

The romance of history, rather than the romance sometimes forcibly imported into historical pictures, is offered in this British production. It is, artistically, one of the best yet sent over from London; it definitely succeeds in creating the atmosphere of Tudor London and, in presenting a tragedy in which the leading actors are historical figures, it makes them flesh and blood women without caricaturing history. Since "Henry VIII," nothing quite so colorful, so fresh and so picturesque in its settings, or so effectively grim in its incident, has been offered to American audiences from this side.

Acting, production and art direction are all cultured, vivid and convincing. The sixteenth century is, in fact, really made to live again in this true story of rival ambitions, intrigues, and violence, which surpasses in suspense value the efforts of most fiction writers and which transports one, in pictorially outstanding scenes to a London dominated by the Tower—and the execution block on Tower Hill. In these facts lie many exploitation possibilities; centralizing them all is the fact that it is the historical story of the life, love and tragedy of England's "nine day's Queen," Lady Jane Grey.

The film opens with the deathbed of Henry VIII and his curse on any of his ambitious nobles who shall interfere with the order of succession his son Edward, his daughters Mary and Elizabeth and, only if they should die, the Lady Jane Grey. The short reign of the boy King, Edward VI, opens with the Protectorate of his uncle Edward Seymour and the attempt of the Protector's brother, Thomas Seymour, to make a protegée of the innocent young Lady Jane Grey, whom he brings to Court to await the moment when the ailing Edward shall die, in the expectation that Mary will be barred from the throne as a Catholic and Elizabeth as illegitimate, leaving the way clear for Jane.

The Protector discovers his brother's plans and executes him. The Earl of Warwick heads a rising, sends Somerset to the block, and forces Lady Jane into a marriage with his son, Lord Guildford Dudley. She falls in love with him.

The young Edward VI dies. Warwick has Lady Jane proclaimed Queen, but the nation rejects her. Mary Tudor's troops easily defeat Warwick and enter London in triumph. Warwick goes to the block and, after an ineffectual plea to Mary, the innocent Lady Jane follows her husband to Tower Hill.

It is history, told by the re-creation of a series of historical crimes; overshadowing every episode is the raised ax of the headsman, the boom of cannon announcing another violent death and the sense of innocent lives hopelessly in the toils of plots of which they know nothing. In the creation of that atmosphere almost all is due to the brilliant direction of Robert Stevenson and the excellent acting of Nova Pilbeam as Lady Jane Grey, John Mills as Dudley, Desmond Tester as Edward VI and Gwenn Ffrancon-Davies, Leslie Perrins and Felix Aylmer. Art direction has added magnificent reproductions of old house-lined London Bridge, palace interiors and costumes all perfect of their kind.

You can sell this as authentic history (though minor liberties with fact have been taken) or as glamorous, colorful costume-drama.

Press-shown at the Tivoli, London; prior to a New Gallery run, it had high praise for its atmosphere, settings, and characterization and for the exceptional level of all the acting. "A good one for America" was a common expression from those who should know.

Speed Mad

(Columbia)

Vehicular Review

From camel-back to Cadillac was a somewhat longer step than it is made to seem in this brisk review of human conveyances, but amusing shots of pioneer motors and motorists build up effectively to the dramatic automobile racing sequences and these register strongly, without preachment, the always commendable suggestion that speed and safety are things apart. A number of speedway crashes, obviously although unannouncedly resulting in death, are graphically pictured. The presentation is adroit and there is no emphasizing of moral by narrator or by closeup of maimed and dying, a technique which adds conviction to the point that cannot be too forcibly and widely made. The subject warrants widespread exhibition.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Undersea Kingdom

(Republic)

12-Episode Serial

The "lost continent" of Atlantis sank gradually instead of instantly into the sea, according to the story employed as basis for this serial, and the inhabitants had time to wall off the encroaching waves and have lived and developed their own civilization under the ocean bed ever since. But one of the monarchs competing for supremacy seeks to destroy the earth-surface civilization we know and has rigged up scientific apparatus for doing so; it is he who causes our earthquakes. Ray "Crash" Corrigan is cast as a naval officer who accompanies a scientist and a girl reporter and others on a submarine voyage to this sunken continent and at the end of the first episode the party is in plenty of trouble.

The futuristic gadgets popular in contemporary comic strips, ray-guns, disintegrators, etc., are utilized early and often in working out the action, but the star's physical prowess is not overlooked at any time and even the advanced citizens of the nether world still use bows and arrows, chariots and horses, so physical conflict figures prominently in the general strife.

The serial is directed by B. Reeves Eason and Joseph Kane from a screen play by John Rathmell, Maurice Geraghty and Oliver Drake based on a story by Tracy Knight and John Rathmell. Among the members of a big cast are Lois Wilde, Monte Blue, William Farnum, Jack Mulhall, Boothe Howard, C. Montague Show, Lon Chaney, Jr., Lee Van Atta and Smiley Brunette. The first episode runs 26 minutes.

Share the Wealth

(Columbia)

Political Comedy

Bearing directly upon an economic doctrine still receiving considerable public attention, and keyed by content to contemporary interest in the ballot, Andy Clyde's latest comedy has a good deal in its favor as a commercially vendible product. It would have a good deal more if a certain amount of incidental, offside, extraneous and ineffective gag material were deleted. The story presents Andy as a small town candidate for mayor on a share-the-wealth program. The day before the election he inherits $50,000 and tries to leave town but is restrained from doing so by his gangster backer. He is elected and the pleased citizens share his possessions with him to the extent of wrecking his store and creating a riot. The picture ends with him telephoning the president to say he has tried the share-the-wealth plan and it didn't work. Unfortunately, the action is slowed up in spots and stopped in others for the gag purposes mentioned. Probably the damage isn't fatal.—Running time, 17½ minutes.

Color Cartoon

Chiefly juvenile as to point and performance, this ComiColor cartoon sets forth the adventures of a feline which escapes death twice by fortuitous circumstances and wins for its baker's-boy master a chest of gold, reward for ridding an Oriental potentate's palace of mice. The subject is especially suitable for children, adequate for adults.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 9

(Columbia)

Excellent Fan Food

The consistently high average of entertainment value maintained over a long period in Screen Snapshot releases is substantially exceeded in this number. The entire subject is given over to the photographing of the Santa Anita race track, with preliminary shots presenting the magnificent course, the major portion of the footage devoted to closeups of thirty or forty stars in attendance, and a satisfactorily dramatic conclusion showing the running of a race. Widespread interest in the track augments the normal attraction of personalities pictured and suggests special exploitation of the picture. It is sound material in every sense and well qualified for program inclusion with any type of feature-length production.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Changing of the Guard

(Warner)

Color Musical

Several years back, in 1931 to be exact, Florence Ziegfeld produced his last "Ziegfeld Follies" at the theatre bearing his name in New York. Perhaps the most spectacular, and certainly the best remembered, ensemble number of that production was Bobby Connolly's "Changing of the Guard," featuring Mitzi Mayfair and Hal LeRoy. Warner's, here, in Technicolor and again under Connolly's direction, bring that scene to the screen in two reels. The manner in which it is done, on a broader scale in this version, should prove more than satisfactory to audiences.

As the film opens it is New Year Eve in London and a retired army officer is amusing his young granddaughter with stories of his glamorous past. Excitedly, the child says she will be a King's Grenadier when she grows up. She marches up the room giving orders and the scene fades to the front of Buckingham Palace as the royal guardsmen are to change watches. The youngster, played by Sybil Jason, sings and dances her way through the scene, leading some thirty chorus girls. Throughout are interspersed several other excellently handled musical numbers.

The cast also has Halliwell Hobbes and Sidney Bracey.

The combination of the cast's performances, the brilliant colors and songs and dances makes this short subject worthy of a good spot on practically any program. Running time, 20 minutes.

Major Google

(Columbia)

Color Cartoon

In common with contemporary custom, the producers of this color short borrow copiously from the popularity of Major Bowes' amateur hour and, again in common, extract quite a bit of practical humor from their burlesque of the same. Barney Google is the microphone maestro, of course, and Snuffy, Little Bunkie Hill and others do their stuff, the whole affair ending somewhat madly but not unamusingly in a takeoff on a marry-me-or-pay-the-rent melodrama. The short is above average technically and is without age restriction as to interest.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Football Bugs

(Columbia)

Color Comic

The theory underlying manufacture of this item seems to have been that a football game between teams made up of bugs would be very funny because bugs have so many legs. Accordingly, gaudily colored distortions of divers insects were devised and sent through dizzily paced and uninspired conflict against a gridiron setting. When it didn't seem to be getting anywhere, resort was had to the veteran gag about the alcoholic stepping up of the drinking water and after that it didn't much matter what was done, anyway, so came the end. There may have been something in the theory, but it didn't work out.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Frankenstein Stuff

Tom Kennedy and Monte Collins, cast as dumb detectives, do what they can with a slapstick revival of the familiar Frankenstein monster idea, and there are Chinese cutthroats tossed into the thing for good measure, but nothing very funny comes of it. Maybe the Frankenstein idea is dead for comedy purposes, or maybe the idea of detectives being stupid isn't as funny as it used to be before J. Edgar Hoover began exploding the myth on front pages, but probably the chief fault of the comedy is its extraordinary lack of humor. For whatever reason, it's very dull.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Horse Operas Found Ridin' Back To Favor in Hell-a-Mile Fashion

Edwin C. Hill, the "Globe-Trotter," Reports the Rebirth of Early Screen Favorites

"Horse operas" are recapturing popular favor in the motion picture houses the country over—those good old-fashioned "westerns," slam-bang, six-gun, hell-a-mile screen "mellers" of rangeland and cattle country that have truly delighted the more judicious ever since the days of the old shooting galleries.

Thus does Edwin C. Hill, the "Globe-Trotter" of Hearst Metrotone News, report, in his Hearst-syndicated editorialization, the rebirth of one of the motion picture's earliest institutions.

Mr. Hill confesses "without the faintest glow of a blush," that horse operas are his favorite dish when it comes to screen entertainment. "And now," he says, "they are going back to the old formula, with better story material, better writing and, on the whole, better acting."

Early studies of product schedules proposed for the new 1936-37 season appear to verify Mr. Hill's reportings on the subject of extended activities in the "western" market, and, too, that more attention now is directed to that type than in many a recent year. Musical backgrounds are being added to western stories of popular-novel rating.

"You can take your problem plays," observes Mr. Hill, and "you can have those weird conjunctions of matter and spirit which we saw in Mr. Noel Coward's last effort; you can have your big, splendiferous De Millish billion-dollar historical pageants, and you may take all your blue-eyed, golden-haired, satin-skinned cuties.

"But for me," he declares, "the tall, lean, bronzed chap under the six-gallon hat, with a .45 in his holster, a good horse under him, all set to hang the rustlers on that big cottonwood over the gulch, and to save the gal and her father's ranch from the dirty wiles and machinations of the sleek, black-haired, smooth-spoken scoundrel who has been pursuing and persecuting her.

The "Stuff" of Real Dramas

"That's the stuff! That's the stuff of which real dramas are made.

"Westerns are coming back," Mr. Hill reports, "because there are several million people in the United States who want to see vital aspects of the old west, when the country was in the making, preserved.

"The hard-riding upholding of law and order, the punishment of villains, rescue of maidens in distress—all against a background of desert and mountain—constituted a form of screen entertainment which often may have been crude, but which was always clean, vigorous and exciting.

"Seldom did we see in any western pictures the stuff that hurts moral fiber. For some years westerns receded in popularity because impatient producers demanded new situations. They grew weary of the same old situations, demanded new angles and even fancy dress.

EDWIN C. HILL

"They got away from the authentic western story. They failed to realize, perhaps, that this type of picture was actually preserving a phase of American life which was truly heroic, and which could not be transplanted or twisted out of its natural environment.

"And now they are going back to the old formula, with better story material, better writing and on the whole, better acting. The formula for a good western is fairly simple. Along comes the hero on his paint horse, his palomino or his blood bay.

"He is probably a stranger in the land 'riding the chuck line'—not a saddle bum but a young fellow out to see new country, to find out what lies on the other side of the desert.

"And so he rides into the tough town, the outlaws' hangout. He clashes with the No. 1 bad man, endeavors to prevent this scoundrel from annoying the young school teacher or perhaps the ranch owner's daughter, just back from school in the east. And presently he finds himself involved in a range war over sheep or water rights or rustling. And in the end, virtue and manliness triumph against vice and failing, as always these things should be.

Elements "Startlingly Primitive"

"The elements of a good western are startlingly primitive. There are no fine psychological shades, or should there be, love is love and hate is hate, goodness is white and badness is black.

"The hero, the he-man of the picture, has no important vices. He rolls his own, but his thirst is cared for by nothing stronger than an occasional glass of beer. As a matter of fact, Tom Mix, for example, never smoked and never drank.

"His influence upon the small boys of the land has been more profound, I think, than that even which Buffalo Bill exerted in his day. I have seen Tom in this country and abroad literally surrounded by hundreds of idolatrous kids who looked up to him as a symbol of manly virtues.

Cost Not Excessive

"The cost of a good Western picture is about what the studios care to spend. One can be made, I believe, for $50,000 or $60,000 with reasonable economy in time and paraphernalia. But if they go into epics like 'The Covered Wagon' or 'The Iron Horse,' where immense herds of cattle are used, or long trains of covered wagons; where long and extensive journeys and location stays must be had and a very large cast, the cost may run to four or five times this figure.

"Anyway, they are coming back. Competent players are at a premium. The story departments are eagerly seeking good yarns; directors, who formerly would have scorned the use of their megaphones over a horse opera troupe, are now glad to get the chance. They are coming back and more power to 'em."

Mr. Hill knows about "horse operas" because he made them "in the distinguished company of Mr. Tom Mix of Tennessee, Oklahoma, Arizona and California. There was a day in the not-too-distant past when I went through the motions of supervising the esteemed and highly talented Mr. Mix in some of the choicest horse operas ever filmed in or around Hollywood.

Did Own Supervising

"A supervisor with Mr. Tom Mix," he added, "was just so much excess baggage. Thomas used to do his own supervising—does it now, for all I know. Of all the horse opera stars I have ever known, he was the most thoroughly efficient.

"A superb horseman whose ascent to the saddle was a joy to watch—for all the world like a bird rising from the ground—alive and alert in every physical expression; no bad actor, either. He was, besides, a first-class organizer, and always able to do the job of anybody in his troupe a little better than that person himself.

"Tom, spurring his famous horse, Tony, through the plate glass window of the Last Chance Saloon in a tough cattletown, with shattered glass showering about his head and shoulders, was a sight to see. To see him corral a flock of assorted rustlers, deftly roping them one by one, stringing them together like fish on a line and driving them off to the sheriff was also a sight to see."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The annals of literature, in the opinion of Odd McIntyre, contain no record of a writer so successfully changing his pace as did Willard Huntington Wright. The new pace has since meant much to the motion picture, as we shall presently see.

Outside his editorship of Smart Set when its appeal was solely to the intelligentsia, he was little known. Nor was his existence publicized greatly by his works on art, music and literature. Came a severe nervous collapse, setting him to bed for two years. Then, his physician, to joust him out of his lethargy, got him reading detective and mystery, starting him off with Gaboriau. To kill time and in the hope of replenishing a flat purse, Wright finally began to write mystery. A bit ashamed of the stuff, he used the nom de plume S. S. Van Dine. Today he is known throughout the world almost entirely by that name and is reputed to be the world's highest paid writer of mystery fiction, with a home in New York, a hacienda in California, a hobby of breeding Scotties and almost every one of his stories already made into motion pictures.

Robert Taylor and Janet Gaynor have concluded their run in "Small Town Girl" at Loew's Midland in Kansas City, so John McManus, manager, can stand dignifiedly in the lobby again without fear of nausea.

Mr. McManus reports that the women's raves over Mr. Taylor the other week really got him down.

"They would come in the front door," he narrated to Landon Laird, photoplay editor of the Kansas City Star, "and if the door to Aisle Two was open, they could see the picture on the screen from a point well out in the lobby. If Taylor was acting, the girls, particularly those around the high school or college age, would gasp, flutter, put their hands to their throat, and go through performances such as I never saw before in my life. I couldn't take it."

Mr. McManus says he hasn't seen similar feminine manifestation since the first crush for Clark Gable started several years ago. The women are very matter of fact about Gable now, John adds.

Mr. Gable is a Loew-Metro star. Mr. McManus is a Loew-Metro manager. Mr. Gable will immediately strike Mr. McManus from his list of favorite Loew-Metro managers. Mr. Taylor, however, will not act so hastily, preferring to ponder the while he determines whether Mr. McManus really meant that he (Taylor) gave him (McManus) a pain in the neck.

F. W. Hinchliff, British composer, contends that modern music is responsible for a marked increase in deafness.

It's a cinch deafness is responsible for a lot of modern music in modern musical motion pictures.

Johnny O'Donnell, political writer in Washington, observes that this Administration, from F. D. R. down the line to minor executives and stooges, has been the most photographed Government in the history of the Republic. The prints of President Roosevelt, members of his Cabinet and New Deal executives filed away in the libraries of picture syndicates, newspaper offices and newsreel storage vaults run into the thousands. And that, Mr. O'Donnell informs us, has given the master minds of the G. O. P. publicity department a really bright idea:

They figure that in these thousands of speed shots, candid camera pictures and newsreel films taken of the New Dealers there must be dozens of prints in which the subjects appear in embarrassing postures or wearing foolish expressions. And the story in Washington is that the Republicans have gathered an elaborate collection of such New Deal pictures for publication in rotogravure in their campaign newspaper, "On Our Way."

Meanwhile, the President remains a deep student of the newsreel; has them shown at the White House once a week, usually Thursday evening. He sees all sound pictures in which he appears and studies them for the public effect. F. D. R., better than any of his associates, can stand the ordeal of the glaring newsreel lights.

The motion picture need not fear any immediate appearance of television on the American market. Television is said to be nearly ready, but we understand that David Sarnoff and his RCA manufacturers, anxious to make as favorable an impression as possible on the public, are holding back until the Presidential campaign speechmaking is over. One look at some of the candidates and television will be a dead issue forever.

Missouri prison officials and jailbirds are sore as pups over Metro's "Voice of Bugle Ann."

Hollywood cameramen, assistant directors, flunkeys, technicians and dog-robbers arrived at Jefferson City, Missouri, six months ago to make "prison sequences" for the film story of an old man and his foxhounds. No local or Missouri State photographer is ever permitted inside the prison walls, but, after listening to the urgent and flowery pleas of Hollywood's most glib talkers, the prison board concluded that it would do no harm to permit a large coterie of Hollywoodites to spend several days inside, filming whatever struck their fancies.

Prison officials and others shined up their brass buttons the other day and made themselves spic and span for the showing of "Bugle Ann" at Jefferson City. When the picture was screened, however, they witnessed but a second's flash of a dark corridor in B cell-house, and that was all.

The Jefferson City Chamber of Commerce, too, had gone overboard in indorsing the production because they believed it would show Cole County courthouse. In the completed picture the courthouse appears as the Carroll County courthouse.

NEW FIGHT OVER 'MORAL' ASPECTS OF "ECSTASY"

Baltimore Judge's Order Overrules Censor Board's Banning of Czech Production

Continuing its stormy career, which began in Europe several years ago, "Ecstasy" this week was the center of another court battle when Judge Joseph N. Ulman in Baltimore city court issued an order overruling the Maryland censor board which had banned the Czechoslovakian picture on the ground of immorality.

At the conclusion of the testimony, Judge Ulman, who sat in the case for two days, ruled the board should designate the objectionable sections and that the "tailored" version then could be shown.

The New York office of Eureka Productions, Inc., the American distributor for the film, charged that the state censors had decided to reject it "even before seeing it," basing its judgment on the widespread notoriety it had received, as a result of its banning by the United States customs officials and others.

Returning from Baltimore on Wednesday, Samuel Cummins, Eureka's general manager, said that following the court's decision the company refused to accept the eliminations ordered by the censors. He said Eureka would continue its fight against the censors, and the case would be tried once more.

In his decision, Judge Ulman pointed out that he did not concur necessarily with the ideas of censorship as laid down by the Maryland legislature, but that as long as these ideas existed the board was obligated to interpret them.

Orders Cuts Only

He ordered the censors not to ban the film as a whole, asserting that most of the scenes in the picture, which he saw at a special screening, are not objectionable. He indicated that in ordering elimination only of objectionable parts rather than the whole film, he was sticking to the board's own practice.

Miss Marie W. Presstman, defending the action of the Board of Motion Picture Censors, of which she is secretary, told the court that some films were "too frank in their presentation for children's minds." She cited Paramount's "I'm no Angel," with Mae West, as an example of the "very objectionable" variety. The board at first banned the Mae West film, but later approved it.

Miss Presstman said on the stand that she was the member of the board who had stood most firmly against the exhibition of "I'm No Angel," but that she had waived her objections when she saw that the weight of other censorship boards was against her.

In making its decisions, Miss Presstman said, the board did not lose sight of the artistic value of certain productions and thus scenes that otherwise might be objectionable were admitted if they contributed to the artistic content. She said that "Ecstasy," devoid of the scenes objectionable to the censors, would have no artistic value. She added that in certain scenes "I don't think anything is left to your imagination."

An appeal from the board's decision was taken by Herman G. Weinberg, Baltimore representative of Eureka Productions and formerly manager of the Little Theatre in that city.

Lee I. Hecht, counsel for Eureka, attempted to draw the issue between Miss Presstman and Samuel Cummins, general manager of the distributing company. He said that Miss Presstman controlled the board, and that in the instance of "Ecstasy" she had gone beyond her official duties in seeking to prevent its exhibition. Mr. Hecht asked why, if Miss Presstman was arbiter of Baltimore morals, she did not object to the presentation of "Tobacco Road," dramatic production, which has been banned elsewhere.

In closing his argument, Mr. Hecht said, "This lady (Miss Presstman) has made up her mind, and thus the mind of the board, to prevent the showing of a film here by Samuel Cummins."

Awaits New York License

Meanwhile, "Ecstasy" still awaits a license from the New York state censors, where application has been pending for weeks, and it was indicated that the board probably will not give its approval. The picture however, is showing in Boston and Washington, and has been booked by the Little Theatre, Newark, N. J.

Another round in "Ecstasy's" court history was set for argument Friday in the New York supreme court, involving the right to the picture's title. Eureka is the plaintiff, appealing from a decision of Julge William T. Collins denying a temporary injunction to restrain Metropolis Pictures, Inc., from appropriating the title for a release of its own known as "Ecstasy of Young Love."

Seeks Permanent Injunction

Henry Pearlman, Eureka's attorney, in a brief filed with the supreme court, requests a permanent injunction on the following points:

1. A second print of "Ecstasy" was admitted entry into this country and "has never been declared obsene or immoral by any court."

2. The use of the title "Ecstasy" as part of the title of the defendant's film, "Ecstasy of Young Love," constitutes unfair competition, inasmuch as "Metropolis has injected itself into the situation and has attempted to gain for itself the benefit and prestige that has come to the plaintiff's picture."

3. Eureka was entitled to the temporary injunction to protect the title of its film even though the picture had not been exhibited in this country.

The defendants repeatedly asserted in their affidavit that "Ecstasy" is obscene and immoral and was seized by the United States collector of customs, Eureka's brief points out, declaring further:

"If the film of the defendants-respondents represents a portrayal of innocence and simplicity, and if the plaintiff's film, as repeatedly claimed by defendants-respondents, is the embodiment of obscenity and immorality, then it is hard to understand why the defendants-respondents deliberately changed the title of their film and adopted the plaintiff's title, as part of their title, and permitted its film of 'purity' and 'innocence' to be besmirched by the plaintiff's alleged odious title."

BETTER FILM MUSIC SOUGHT BY CLUBS

One of the objectives for this year of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be "the introduction of better music and more of it into screen shorts and news reels," Mrs. E. H. Cahill, chairman of the national motion picture committee of the organization, announced in New York.

Mrs. Cahill asserted that producers will be urged to pay special attention to this phase of production activities. "The right musical films," she said, "with their appeal to the eye as well as to the ear, constitute one of the most valuable forms of musical education, for adults as well as for young people."

Charges Aim Was to Mislead

Referring to the claim that the film released by Metropolis won a prize at the Second International Motion Picture Exposition at Venice, the brief contends:

"If the film of defendants-respondents has won the Universal Gold Medal under the name of 'Reka,' or 'Young Love,' and was proclaimed by that name as the finest film of European folk life, then it is hard to understand why the defendants-respondents did not continue to use that title, instead of changing it, by including as part of its title the name of 'Ecstasy' that has been condemned as obscene and immoral, as repeatedly claimed by defendants-respondents.

"It is evident that the motive and purpose of defendants-respondents in changing the title of its film, so as to embrace the plaintiff's title, was to mislead the public into believing that its film, under the title of 'Ecstasy of Young Love,' is the same as plaintiff's film under the simple title of 'Ecstasy,' and thereby profit by the false impression and confusion that would be created in the mind of the public."

Eureka Loses $5,300 Suit

Meanwhile, Judge John C. Knox in federal district court in New York on Monday denied a motion by Eureka Productions for judgment on pleadings in its suit against Raymond J. Mulligan, former United States marshal, to recover $5,300, the value it put on the first print of "Ecstasy" brought into this country, which was destroyed last July 27th.

Eureka contended that Mr. Mulligan knew that an appeal had been taken from a jury verdict in the federal court branding the picture obscene and immoral. Mr Mulligan denied this.

He has been surrounded with an especially competent cast, in which Joan Blondell and Eric Blore stand out. Joan sings and dances, besides furnishing the main romantic interest in a very appealing French manner. Blore, in a style that only Blore can handle, furnishes a wad of laughs. Paramount Film Subsidiary Elects; Cohen Deal Set

Corporate activities of Paramount Pictures this week brought a ratification of a contract with Emanuel Cohen's Major Pictures to produce eight features, and was followed by the reelection of officers of Paramount Pictures, Inc., producing subsidiary of the parent Paramount Corporation.

At the same time, Joseph P. Kennedy, arriving in Hollywood in his new position as Paramount advisor, commencing with a study of the studio, announced the personnel of his personal staff.

In the courts, Paramount was involved in an authorization vested by Federal Judge Alfred Coxe in Charles D. Hilles, as trustee, to conduct a hearing of dealings by stock brokers in Paramount issues.

Emanuel Cohen's contract to produce eight pictures annually for Paramount for three years was approved by the board of directors of Paramount Productions, Inc., at a meeting held late last week in Jersey City.

Mr. Cohen will produce four "A" and four "B" pictures annually at General Service Studios in Hollywood under the pact. Mae West, Bing Crosby and Gary Cooper, under contract to Mr. Cohen for pictures outside their Paramount contracts, will be used in the "A" group of pictures.

The Board also reelected all officers, but the expected election of Adolph Zukor to the presidency did not take place. Mr. Zukor, it is thought, will be placed in office upon his return from Hollywood where he is now studying production problems. Officers of the company are Mr. Zukor, chairman; John E. Otterson, president; Henry Herzbrun, and Neil Agnew, vice-presidents; Austin Keough, vice-president and secretary; George L. Bagnall, treasurer; Eugene Zukor and Edwin A. Brown, assistant treasurers; Walter Cokell, Norman Collyer, Frank Meyer and Jacob H. Karp, assistant secretaries, and Fred Mohrhardt, general auditor.

Joseph R. Sheehan, administrative coordinator of the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, and William C. Hickey, member of the commission's utilities division, have resigned their government posts to become associated with Mr. Kennedy, former SEC chairman, in his new capacity of special adviser to Paramount.

Subpoenas for books and records of several stock brokerage houses which dealt in Paramount Publix securities prior to the company's bankruptcy have been issued under an order signed by Judge Coxe authorizing the holding of hearings before Special Master John Joyce.

No date has been set for the hearings, which are designed to inquire into the Paramount Publix stock transactions of former officers and directors of the company who are defendants in a suit for recovery brought on Paramount's behalf by the company's trustees in bankruptcy some time ago. The subpoenas were issued for the books and records of Harry Content and Company; E. F. Hutton and Company; Stern, Kempner and Company; Sterner, Rouse and Company; Ralph A. Kohn and three unnamed employes of Kuhn, Loeb and Company, former Paramount bankers.

Judge Coxe also signed an order reducing the claim of Allied Owners Corporation against Paramount from $23,644,255 to $5,000,000 and at the same time disallowed entirely a parallel claim by the Manufacturers Trust Company for approximately $5,000,000.

Extract from the World Authority, "MOTION PICTURE HERALD," 8th February, 1936:

'NEXT TIME WE LOVE'

THIS picture was previewed in a little projection room. It was shown to a group of newspaper men and women. In such a place and before such an audience there was no possibility for study of mob psychology, no chance for contagious or spontaneous outburst of emotional expression, as each reporter rigidly sought to conceal his or her reaction. Despite this artificial barrier, no one could mistake the force and power with which "Next Time We Love" rode right into the hearts of every man and woman in that room.

Writing from Leichardt, Sydney, Australia, this week, G. W. Gadd enclosed a tearsheet from the Sydney Sun containing the advertisement reproduced in part above, in which the management of the Liberty theatre there quoted a Herald Showman's Review under the heading "Extract from the 'World Authority,' Motion Picture Herald."

Pointing out that he sent the clipping as "an example of where Motion Picture Herald reviews are used for selling a 'big picture' to the public, Mr. Gadd said:

"What a credit they are to you and Motion Picture Herald. Therefore it goes without saying, 'Where would the exhibitor manager be without Motion Picture Herald?' "

MGM OPENS CONVENTION SEASON; ELASTIC PROGRAM OF FROM 44 TO 52

33 Titles Announced at Chicago Meeting of 24 Home Office Executives and 209 of Field Force

The motion picture's 1936-37 season is on! Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, on Monday, at Chicago, officially launched the new year when William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, sounded the gavel at Chicago's Palmer House to start the annual sales convention, first to be held by the major companies.

Some 24 home office executives and 209 of the sales force from the field heard the announcement that the company's new program will consist of from 44 to 52 features and 194 short subjects, to be produced by 21 stars and feature players, 60 contract players, six producers, 21 directors and 103 writers.

The elasticity of the feature schedule, giving the corporation a leeway of eight productions, is unusual for any of the majors. Thirty-three titles were announced. Actually the fiscal year starts September 1st, but selling has been under way for weeks, and for the most part will be completed long before the end of the summer, at least insofar as important group contract deals are concerned.

Two-score properties from which the balance of the program will be selected were also outlined to the delegates.

The convention started on Monday morning when Mr. Rodgers called for a silent tribute to the late Felix F. Feist, formerly sales manager, who died last month.

M. N. Wolf, of Boston, speaking for the field forces, commended Mr. Rodgers in his new position as Mr. Feist's successor.

The program and sales policies for 1936-37 were explained by Mr. Rodgers, who followed with a discussion of the remainder of this season's releases.

Colonel E. A. Schiller, representing the theatre division of Loew's, and Howard Dietz, advertising and publicity director, addressed the delegates, and were followed by explanations of the activities of other departments from their respective chiefs.

Al Lichtman cited numerous instances where the producers had been so active and so interested in getting their pictures out in the manner they wished that they had even injured their health. It was this type of devotion to duty that made the production end so strong, he added.

Hal Roach also made a short talk to the men on Monday. He told htme he was planning to make better pictures than ever before as well as funnier ones. James A. FitzPatrick, producer of travel shorts and features also spoke to the men.

Joe Vogel of the theatre department spoke to the group and told them about the exhibitor problems and revealed a number of facts concerning the big receipts of M-G-M pictures.

LITERACY CALLS FOR ACTION, SAYS FROHMAN

Widespread literacy is the chief reason for the change from the playwriting of Shakespeare and his day to modern dramatic authorship, according to Daniel Frohman, dean of Broadway theatrical producers.

"Shakespeare wrote long soliloquies and speeches in his plays for a good reason," Mr. Frohman said. "There were about 9,000,000 people in Great Britain then and many of them could not read. They had to see the play and to hear the beauty of the poet's line spoken.

"Now we can all read, and in the plays we see we want action, movement, and not the story."

'Betty Boop' Suit Takes New Turn

Lamar Hardy, United States attorney in New York, is conducting an investigation to determine whether Ralph A. Freundlich, head of the doll manufacturing company bearing his name, had obstructed justice and filed a false accounting in an infringement suit brought against him because of his sale of "Betty Boop" dolls.

Another unusual turn in the suit was the awarding of $15,000 in fees to Phillips and Nizer, attorneys for the plaintiff, which was almost three times the judgment of $5,540 given Fleischer Studios, Inc., Fleischer Art Service, Inc., and Cameo Doll Company.

The suit, begun in 1932, was based on the charge that Mr. Freundlich and Ralph A. Freundlich, Inc., had manufactured dolls simulating the character featured in Max Fleischer's animated cartoon. Judge John M. Woolsey in the United States district court in New York decided in favor of the plaintiffs. His decision was upheld in 1935 by the circuit court of appeals and the United States supreme court, which sustained the injunction to restrain Freundlich from further manufacture of the dolls, for which the Cameo company was the licensee.

Upon the supreme court's decision, Judge Woolsey appointed Theodore S. Kenyon as special master to take testimony and assess damages. In addition to specific damages, the special master assessed the Freundlich company all costs of litigation. It was explained in the report that Mr. Freundlich and others had testified that the company had sold no more than 676 infringing dolls, though the plaintiff contended that 15,000 had been sold.

In ordering the investigation, Judge Woolsey also instructed Mr. Hardy to determine whether there was a basis for a contempt citation against Freundlich or for perjury indictments against him or any other witnesses. That phase of the decision was indicated as important in pointing out how far a court will go in the instance of a fraudulent accounting.

Judge Woolsey, in approving the attorney's fees, declared the most important consideration in a copyright case was not merely the damages, but the preservation of the copyright. He declared that the attorneys had salvaged the copyrighted character, "Betty Boop," which had been attacked by the defendants, and in view of the unique nature of the case and the work of Phillips and Nizer, he considered the designated fee as justified, despite the fact that it was apparently out of proportion to the damages.

It was pointed out that the decision is unique in the allowance of the large amount of attorney fees in proportion to the damages, and in its protection of a cartoon copyright against infringement by a three-dimension figure.

Berkowitz on Coast

Sam Berkowitz, head of Far West Exchanges, which has just been taken over by Grand National, has returned to Los Angeles from New York, where the deal was closed. Mr. Berkowitz said that Far West will continue all releasing contracts for the present season, and that an announcement of product for 1936-37 will be made soon.

MGM & MPPDA POINTING "ROMEO" TO SPECIAL FIELD OF 36,211,395

Merchandising Campaign on Shakespeare Love Story Directed at 16 National Social, Community, Educational Sets

The most comprehensive merchandising campaign undertaken to date by a motion picture corporation, aided by the organized industry as constituted in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to sell a single feature production to a specific market is now under way for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's version of William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

Bearing a very definite relationship to the industry's progress in raising motion picture standards, and intended to call the public's attention to such productions, this latest movement is being directed to 36,211,395 Americans belonging to 16 national social, community and educational groups. They alone represent potential admission grosses of some $9,000,000, on the basis of an average 25-cent admission for the combined memberships.

For purposes of furthering the commercial success of a picture of the type of "Romeo and Juliet," the organized motion picture industry, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, in New York, has established far-reaching facilities for contacting and drawing to the box office the vast audience of millions which only occasionally, if ever, attend a motion picture theatre. They have established that from 50 to 75 per cent of the motion picture's potential customers are not film "fans," socalled—25 per cent of that group witnessing a picture only once a month, another 25 per cent attending but once a year, while the remainder "shop" for their screen entertainment, attending only sporadically when the special appeal arises. It is to this vast audience that the "Romeo and Juliet" campaign will be directed, through the medium of the 16 national groups.

Fortified with the experiences of earlier efforts on behalf of such classics as "Little Women," "David Copperfield," and, more recently, Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," the industry now is setting out to capture even more extended tieups with all the groups for their national support.

The MPPDA has been developing various forms of cooperation with organized groups over a period of 10 years until it has now arrived at a point where, it is pointed out, this type of support has a highly important bearing on the financial success of a photoplay at the box office, and, as reflected by admissions, in the rentals accruing to the distributor.

Pledge Aggressive Support

While admittedly there may be some overlapping in membership of the 16 large groups, it is believed that one-third of the nation's population has affiliated itself with one or another of the national organizations with which the Hays office has developed the sort of harmony which makes feasible the acceptance of the opinions of representatives of these groups on pictures for the membership as a whole. Already many of the groups definitely have committed themselves to an active and aggressive support of "Romeo and Juliet"—although as yet not only has there been no release date established, but a date for the premiere has not been set.

ASSOCIATIONS AND TOTAL MEMBERS

The 36,211,395 total membership of 16 civic and religious associations who are the goal of MGM's merchandising campaign for "Romeo and Juliet" lines up as follows by organizations:

National Council of Federated Church Women	17,000,000
Catholic Legion of Decency	10,000,000
National Council of Women	3,000,000
General Federation of Women's Clubs	2,000,000
Federation of Music Clubs	500,000
Boy Scouts of America	1,004,000
Y.M.C.A.	1,030,395
Y.W.C.A.	407,000
American Legion Auxiliary	331,000
National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs	60,000
National Council of Jewish Women	40,000
American Association of University Women	40,000
Girl Scouts of America	372,000
Boys' Clubs of America	252,000
Girls' Service League of America	28,000
Daughters of the American Revolution	147,000
	36,211,395

The present system for establishing relations between the motion picture and the groups is, firstly, through the national organizations to their local counterparts, and, secondly, direct to the local community, through the leaders of local associations. Both processes are already well under way for "Romeo."

MGM's Barrett Kiesling has met with groups of 100 local leaders in New Haven, Providence, Boston, Worcester (Mass.), Springfield (Mass.), Albany, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Toledo, Chicago and New York. To these groups the story of the production of "Romeo and Juliet" was told. They were made acquainted with the studio personnel responsible, with the research done. On the walls of the rooms where these 100 citizens were entertained at luncheon, an exhibit of stills, both research and action stills, was hung. The guests offered many suggestions as to how the public might be aroused.

Organizing Committees

Mr. Kiesling's planned itinerary covers Columbus (Ohio), Cincinnati, Dayton, Indianapolis, Louisville, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans, Memphis, Nashville, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Duluth. In each of these cities there will have been established by the end of June an organized committee of the cities' 100 "best citizens committed to sponsor and take the leadership in organizing patronage for "Romeo and Juliet." Ultimately it is intended to give this same treatment to every city of 25,000 or more in the United States.

Local Committees of Citizens Being Set Up in Cities of 25,000 or More; Study Guides, 50 Research Exhibits Prepared

For the direct approach to the membership of the national groups a number of public relations accessories for "Romeo and Juliet" are being prepared. The study guide written by the general editor for the motion picture committee of the Department of Secondary Education of the National Education Association is already available. From the experience had with similar study guides on "David Copperfield" and "A Tale of Two Cities" it is expected that "Romeo and Juliet" will be studied in every English class in every high school the coming year. Half a million copies of this study guide will be made available for use as text material in schools and to be taken home to be read by all the family. All of this has a definite relation to the box office potentialities.

Special treatment will be given to the picture by the house organ of the MPPDA and in the preview reports of pictures distributed by the Hays office in behalf of the 16 national groups cooperating.

These publications are directed in over 6,000 instances to the chairmen of motion picture groups or councils, in 30,000 communities.

Music Guide Considered

The campaign's sponsors are considering publication of an adult discussion guide on the music being evolved as a background for the play. The Federation of Music Clubs with its 500,000 members has committed itself to sponsorship of such a guide, which could become the basis of discussion in club meetings, and would provide the occasion for having a Shakespeare or "Romeo and Juliet Club Day."

Too, they are to have the cooperation of all the libraries through the American Library Association. Bookmarks are in preparation.

Similarly the Shakespeare literary groups, under the leadership of the Shakespeare Association of America, whose president is the famous bibliophile, Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, will make special occasions of the showing of "Romeo and Juliet" in every city.

One of these public relations accessories is a series of 50 research exhibits in preparation for showing in schools and universities, natural history and art museums, and in libraries. These exhibits will consist of prints of research material evolved from old paintings and literature, or collected in Verona, of the designs and miniatures developed in preparation for the production, and of the action stills from the photoplay showing the influence both of the designs and source material. In each major city, one institution, the library, museum or a school, will be responsible for routing these exhibits to the places where they will be of greatest benefit.

For the last three months the cinema industry in France has been severely affected by a continuous decrease of receipts, which now are about 50 per cent of what they were in the same period last year for half of the motion picture theatres of the French territory. Houses less affected have seen a decline of at least 20 to 30 per cent.

Three Chief Factors

With all the industry trying to discover the real reasons for this drop, generally the decrease of the receipts can be explained by three factors:

FIRST—Two years of general depression of all kind of business in France. Unemployment is bigger than ever. In the main cities, as well as in the small towns and in the country, business is slow. Only some of the larger metallurgical factories are not affected, these concerns having received very important orders from the War Department which, with the present menaces of war, had to increase all French armaments.

SECOND—Menaces of war. The violation by Hitler, on March 7th, of the Locarno agreement as well as the last clauses of the Versailles treaty, has developed everywhere in France a very deep anxiety. Theatre attendance immediately fell off.

Political Disorder a Factor

THIRD—Political disorder in the French Government. In the April 26th and May 3d elections the People's Front of Leftist parties won the greatest triumph since Leon Gambetta's famous campaigns of 1881. The Communists now have more than 70 seats in the Chamber of Deputies. While the elections did evidence that the people want nothing of a Fascist rule, many fear difficulties following the victory of the "Front Populaire," which groups all the left parties such as the Communists supported by the Soviets and Moscow's money, the Socialists known as the Third International, and the Free-Masonry, which is in France one of the biggest and strongest political powers. It is also true that the fear of a revolution, such as has taken place in Spain since the "Popular Front" took the power in its hands, has been a main reason for an immediate decline of cinema business.

All Demand Change

In any case, a deep reformation of the French Constitution is considered necessary before prosperity comes back. Everyone demands a change; what that change shall be is the rub.

In the following table it will be noted that Paris theatres' receipts in 1935 fell off six million francs. The figures have just been published by the weekly trade publication issued by the French Syndicate of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Years	Theatres	Total Gross (in million francs)	Average Gross (in francs)
1926	163	146	895,000
1927	165	177	1,073,000
1928	174	204	1,173,000
1929	174	230	1,323,000
1930	186	308	1,804,000
1931	198	360	1,839,000
1932	195	359	1,719,000
1933	228	338	1,483,000
1934	249	320	1,285,000
1935	284	313	1,105,000

These figures for the last 10 years show how receipts regularly increased from 1926 until 1931, which was the top. Between 1929 and 1930 receipts increased by 78 millions francs, or 34 per cent. This big increase was brought by the novelty of sound and talking films.

Since 1932, when the world depression affected France, receipts regularly have gone down.

Only music halls and variety theatres have increased their receipts.

On the total amusements' gross receipts of Paris between 1934 and 1935 there was a total fall of 16 millions francs or 3.05 per cent, so that films theatres fared better than the average.

However, while the motion picture theatre receipts have fallen less than, for instance, those of the legitimate theatres, taxes paid by the cinema theatres are higher than all other amusements.

Paris motion picture theatres paid 72 per cent of the total taxes collected on the whole of Paris amusements in 1935, but made only 62 per cent of the total gross receipts.

Motion picture theatres, which are paying nearly three-fourths of the taxes collected on all amusements, are waiting for a new reduction of the taxes. Last year a small reduction was made on the state taxes.

But the pauper tax, which is 10 per cent on the net receipts, has not been yet reduced. All the French exhibitors had decided to close their theatres on last March 24th if this tax was not reduced or abolished. A bill has been passed by Parliament which reduces by two per cent the pauper tax provided the money representing the two per cent would be taken instead from radio advertising paid to private broadcasting stations (the French official broadcasting stations do not accept radio advertisements). The reduction has not been made as yet, but the closing of the motion picture theatres has been avoided.

These are the figures of the taxes paid in Paris for 1935:

Amusements	1935 Gross (in thousand francs)	1935 Taxes (in thousand francs)	Percentage
Film Theatres	313,763	61,614	19.63
Dances, Sports Exhibition	22,972	4,419	19.23
Music Halls and Variety	43,022	6,301	14.64
Cabarets, Circus	14,338	1,538	10.73
Legitimate Theatres.	74,660	7,964	10.66
Official Legitimate Theatres .... ("subventionnés)	24,227	2,202	9.09

("Subventionnés" theatres are those like OPERA, ODEON, OPERA COMIQUE, COMEDIE FRANCAISE which receive money from the Government).

In 1935 the whole gross receipts of the French and North Africa theatres were about 850 million francs ($56,000,000). State taxes, municipal taxes and pauper taxes took from them 250 million francs ($16,000,000) of these millions francs, about 29 per cent.

In the fight against these killing taxes, the exhibitor associations have had to wait for the new House of Deputies to start any constructive work.

A new idea to abolish the 10 per cent pauper tax would be to take the same amount of money from the proceeds of the French National Lottery, which in 1934 collected 1,107 million francs and did not pay a cent for the pauper tax.

These 1,107 million francs have been divided as follows: 658 million francs for the winning tickets; 26 million for expenses.

FILMS SECURE AGAINST REPRESSIVE MOVES IN FRANCE BY SIGNED TREATY

France Agrees to Maintain Present Situation and Guarantees Not to Increase Duties on Products to America

Reduction in Import Tax from 6 Per Cent to 2 Per Cent Will Apply Also to Motion Pictures Under Pact

A guarantee against further repressive moves against the American motion picture industry in France represents the utmost concession which the American Government could wrest from that country in the negotiation of a reciprocal trade agreement, it was disclosed on Wednesday by the state department in making public details of the Franco-American treaty signed May 6. It will go into effect June 15.

The first major picture market to be the subject of a treaty, France's agreement to maintain the situation in status quo, was accepted as a great concession by the American distributors generally, although the pact was conceded to contain certain irritating features. The pressure of the French forces for restrictive measures against American films was terrific, and "we can consider ourselves very fortunate to get what we did," said Major Frederick L. Herron, manager of the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

"The abandonment of the proposals some months ago to control and restrict more severely the trade in foreign motion picture films and the exhibition of foreign films in France has been confirmed by the undertaking in the agreement that the present treatment will be continued and that no new measures will be taken to place American films in a position less favorable than that now enjoyed in comparison with French films or other foreign films," the state department explained.

"This guarantee will be a stabilizing influence in the future.

No Import Duty Increase

"Furthermore," it was said, "assurance has been obtained that the present import duty, together with the valuations upon which the ad valorem duty is assessed, will not be increased, and the reduction in the import tax from 6 per cent to 2 per cent will also apply to motion picture films.

"French imports in 1935 of all motion picture films (exposed and unexposed) amounted to 23,600,000 francs ($1,570,000)."

The terms of the agreement give the assurance that the present quota requirements will not be made more drastic when they expire in June.

Furthermore, the Maurice Petsche film control plan has been circumvented. This, substantially, would have restricted the importation of American films and established a National Economic Commission which would have collected all film rentals due American distributors and the American film and equipment companies might have been called upon to subsidize the French film industry.

Several threatening measures, including one to increase film duty sharply, have been pending in France, any of which would have had the effect of driving American companies from the French market.

Major Herron said the pact would go far toward solving the problem for American distributors in France, as up until the signing of the treaty there had remained the threat of higher tariffs and quotas, stiffer taxes and other restrictions.

FILMS FARE BETTER THAN AUTOS AND OIL

American films fared better in the Franco-American treaty than automobiles and oil and some other industries which are larger than the motion picture industry, according to Major Frederick L. Herron, manager of the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Major Herron conferred with the state department in Washington almost weekly over a period of a year in an effort to obtain favored treatment for films.

Praising our state department and its recent treaty envoys to France, Major Herron said that in view of the impending control measures in that country, the motion picture industry was at the forefront of the industries to be protected in the treaty.

Major Herron said that the French producers made a determined effort to have films put on the tariff list, and indicated that films were given the favorable treatment they did receive through the efforts of our state department, which has backed the motion picture industry to the limit.

Solution in Italy Awaited

The industry now is awaiting a solution through a similar channel to its problems in Italy and other countries with which we are negotiating reciprocal agreements.

Major Herron believed that if countries abroad continued to intensify their restrictions, American companies would be compelled to withdraw, not out of any boycott motive but because it would be commercially impossible to remain. And once the American distributors close their offices, it would not be long before the foreign governments would be clamoring for their return, which could not, in any event, be brought about quickly, especially in view of the losses incurred, he said.

The MPPDA foreign manager explained that America is peculiarly situated to lead in film production, just as other countries excel in other products. He believed it unwise for foreign countries, seeking to foster their own industry, to challenge American supremacy as America will continue to find a world market because it makes the best pictures.

Thirteenth Trade Agreement

The Franco-American pact, which is expected to improve materially the volume of commerce between the two countries, was signed at the state department by Secretary Cordell Hull and Andre de Laboulaye, the French ambassador. This was the most important agreement yet undertaken, and climaxed months of negotiation. Recently the finishing touches were given to the treaty in Paris by Paul T. Culbertson and Harry C. Hawkins, described as "confidential" emissaries of the state department.

"This is the thirteenth trade agreement to be signed under the authority conferred by Congress in the trade agreements act of June 12, 1934, and is the fifth such agreement with a European country," the state department said in a statement.

"The agreement with France is the first compresensive arrangement for regulating commercial relations with that country in many years. It will provide improved opportunities for the expansion of trade in products of special interest to each country, and will enable the commercial interests concerned to develop these opportunities without fear of the sudden and unforeseen changes to which they are exposed in the absence of such an agreement.

"In addition to duty concessions and quota increases by France and duty concessions by the United States on carefully selected lists of products, the agreement provides in general for substantial most-favored-nation treatment by each country of the commerce of the other.

"The agreement will come into force on June 15, 1936. It will continue in force until July 1, 1937, and indefinitely thereafter, subject to termination by either country on six months' notice."

The last commercial treaty between the United States and France was concluded in 1857.

Motion pictures are not listed as a leading commodity in American exports to France.

Negotiations for trade agreements are in progress with Costa Rica, El Salvador, Finland, Spain and Italy. Agreements now are in force with the following 12 nations: Cuba, Belgium, Brazil, Haiti, Sweden, Canada, The Netherlands, Colombia, Switzerland, Honduras, Nicaragua and Guatemala.

In respect to Great Britain, exploratory studies are being made to determine the possibility of success should actual negotiations begin. Negotiations with Spain and Italy were going along very well until revolutionary upheavals in the former country and the latter's adventure in Ethiopia interfered.

The trade agreements program was launched by means of amendment to the tariff act of 1930. It was deemed by Congress the best antidote for the drastic shrinkage of America's foreign trade during the depression years.

French Theatres' Receipts Decline

Thus the net profits have been 421 million francs, of which 60 millions have been taken for the relief fund on "Agricultural Calamities," as flood, tornado and the like, only 359 million francs for the fund for war veterans for which the lottery was launched originally.

U. S. Pictures Lead

American films lead in the first-run theatres of Paris. Of the 35 theatres in the city currently playing foreign product in original versions, 22 of which are first-runs, American pictures are shown exclusively in 13.

Pathe's Marignan is the only theatre on the Champs Elysees showing French pictures, and only five other houses on the boulevards are showing French films.

In the provinces, however, French films are ahead, as well as in the neighborhood districts of Paris. American films are shown in dubbed versions, and generally used as support for double bill programs. The bigger American films are shown as the main feature on the dual bills.

15 Newsreel Theatres

The opening of a new newsreel theatre on the Champs Elysees has increased to 15 the number of such houses in the city. In general the theatres are connected with the daily newspapers. Four of them, part of the Reginald Ford Newsreel Theatres circuit, are connected with Le Journal. Another Ford house is working through L'Intransigeant. Three are connected with Paris Soir. Several of the houses are independently owned and operated.

Television experiments have been conducted in several theatres the last few weeks, but without conspicuous success. For the most part the pictures were transmitted from a room in the theatre, and shown on very small screens.

Patrons have been disappointed with the results, as they expected large and clear pictures. The experiments seem to be attracting very few patrons.

Griffith Circuit Expands

Recent expansion moves of the Griffith Brothers' circuit include acquisition of the Princess and Palace theatres at Olney, Texas, and a partnership in the Alamento at Alamagordo, N. M., with Gardwick Brothers.

Seidelman in New York

Sam Seidelman, United Artists manager in Mexico, has arrived in New York to confer with home office executives on future product. Harold Sugarman, company manager in Panama, is also in Manhattan.

Ohio Censor Eliminations

The Ohio censors reviewed a total of 605 reels in April, and ordered eliminations in 31, it has been revealed at Columbus. The March record was 563 reels reviewed, and 35 eliminations ordered.

INCREASE OF QUOTA IS REPORTED DEMAND OF PRODUCERS IN BRITAIN

Figure of 33⅓ or 35 Per Cent and Clause Setting Minimum Cost at $50,000 Called Objectives; Compromise Possible

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

With the Departmental Committee on the Films Act getting down to work—it heard evidence from the Board of Trade last Tuesday and was to hear from British producers this week—rumors as to the policies to be adopted by various sections of the trade grow in number and detail.

Immediately after a meeting of the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries to decide the representations to be made to the Committee, it went around Wardour Street that a request would be put forward for an increase of the quota to 33⅓ or 35 per cent, and the imposition of a minimum cost, for quota films, of £2 a foot (about $10).

While there has been no official statement from the Film Group, these forecasts support general expectations to the extent that the Film Group was known to favor the theory of a £10,000 minimum cost clause and that, desiring the continuation of the quota, it had to frame its application to the Committee with a view to the fact that it would be opposed by a counter application from the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association favoring a drastic reduction, or even abolition, of the quota.

No reliable details are available of the exact form of the Film Group's recommendations or whether they were all adopted unanimously or otherwise, but it might be assumed that this body of producers should reason that, as against the extreme demands of exhibitors, an extreme statement of their own case was desirable. Between these two demands it is at least a possibility that the Committee may fall back upon the happy medium of the existing 20 per cent quota.

The most surprising news is that addition to the Act is suggested of a new clause making it obligatory, in the case of a film costing less than £2 a foot, for a statement to appear, in advertising and on the title lead of the film, to the effect that the subject has been made at a lower cost to comply with the provisions of the Act. Even though a stipulation of this character is believed to have been unanimously endorsed by the FBI, it is difficult to take seriously the suggestion that a "quickie" stigma should be attached to a film, irrespective of its entertainment value.

There is definite evidence that the policy of stiffening the quota both in respect to its percentage and to the qualifications demanded of films for registration is by no means unanimously favored by British producers themselves. A long time ago, Gaumont-British executive declarations went on record supporting the view that the quota had served its purpose. Since the FBI meeting a fortnight ago Arthur Dent of Wardour Films (distributing affiliate of ABP) has come out with a definite expression of opinion that the proposals then made are not in the best interests of the industry as a whole. Even more significant is his endorsement of the rival suggestion, likely to be put before the Committee by major American companies, that producers shall be free to spread their British production budget over a few big pictures instead of a large number of cheaper ones. The Cinema quotes him as saying: "It would not matter how many pictures were made . . . so long as the same amount of money were spent in this country."

GYROPLANES SOLVE NEWSREEL COVERAGE

The most singular episode yet recorded in a war between newsreel interests and promoters of sports contests now several years old was the action taken by the newsreels to obtain shots of the Football Cup Final last Saturday.

Wembley Stadium and the Football Association invited bids for the right to film this biggest event of the football year. The newsreels in combination offered £500 against the £900 wanted for the concession. The football folk thereupon decided to make their own "official" film, and to exclude all other cameras. On the afternoon of the match, with every entrance watched for "pirates," the Stadium was invaded by a flight of gyroplanes which, carefully avoiding trespass over the actual boundaries of the ground, circulated it throughout the game and enabled cameramen with long range lenses to obtain a very adequate picture. This ingenious expedient, which appears to have rendered the newsreels immune from a charge of trespass, was executed under the supervision of Sir Malcolm Campbell. The films also were circulated by air to theatres, so that it seems the newsreels, in combination with the CEA, have scored a success in their campaign against the exclusive "news feature."

This is a highly important declaration of policy. It may well be that the biggest decision to be made by the Departmental Committee will be the choice between a footage quota or a cash quota. It had seemed that this choice might also have appeared to be one between-solution favored by British and American interests respectively. Mr. Dent's declaration puts it on quite a different footing, and if other important British interests line up with him it may be that the Committee ultimately will be faced with a footage-quota demand from the smaller British producers, service studio owners and "quickie" manufacturers and with a cash-quota suggestion from a group of British and American producers of films big enough for World distribution. This would be a new line-up of trade forces, and a highly significant one.

Abolition of the exhibition quota, demanded by a large percentage of theatre owners themselves, is also supported by many advocates of the cash-quota system.

The argument is that good British films need no quota and that the object of the Act is to encourage the production of such films and not to provide screen time for indifferent pictures. Undoubtedly, some of the major British producers are receptive to this idea, but Mr. Dent holds the view that, without some protection for British films, playing time would be monopolized by distributors with big American star and story values. He advocates, in place of a quota system, a provision whereby Entertainment Tax would be remitted in the case of every program in which British footage predominated.

Kent and Schenck, in London, Reported Discussing Possible Production Arrangement with Lord Portal Interests

Booking on Box Office Value

This suggestion may be criticized on the ground that it shifts the burden of subsidizing British production from the shoulders of exhibitors and distributors to the Treasury, but it certainly has the advantage that it leaves the booking of British pictures to be determined entirely by reference to their box office value. It would definitely be an anti-"quickie" move and as such probably would be acceptable to American interests, anxious above all things to be free of the footage incubus, as well as to serious British producers.

Kent-Schenck-British

Sidney R. Kent, president, and Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, are reported discussing a possible production arrangement with the interests headed by Lord Portal.

Lord Portal was the chief figure in the syndicate which concluded the deal for English participation in the Universal purchase by Standard Capital, and included J. Arthur Rank, Paul Lindenberg and L. W. Farrow. In that arrangement Lord Portal was associated with C. M. Woolf of General Film Distributors, who had a part in the financing of the Universal deal.

Max Schach of Capitol Films here and other Woolf producers may make six British pictures wanted by Twentieth Century-Fox, it is said. Twentieth Century-Fox recently formed New World Productions here for the purpose of producing four British films, to cost $500,000 each, for world distribution within the next year. Robert T. Kane, director general of Twentieth Century-Fox production in England, is in full charge of New World production.

The possibility also has been aired here that Mr. Woolf is seeking to buy Gaumont-British, with the financial backing of Lord Portal and Mr. Rank. The production deal between Twentieth Century-Fox and Woolf is seen as having a possible bearing on that situation, in view of the fact that Twentieth Century-Fox holds a 49 per cent interest in Gaumont-British.

Recently Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck denied here that Twentieth Century-Fox was seeking to buy complete control of Gaumont-British.

NEW YORK THOUSANDS JOIN NEW STUDY GROUP

Organized as Center of Information on Pictures and of "Voluntary Cooperation"

Ranking officials of organizations embracing thousands of New Yorkers interested in motion pictures are sponsoring the newly formed Metropolitan Motion Picture Council, announced this week with a 21-member board of directors representative of many community, educational and better films groups.

Membership in the Council is open to anyone showing an interest in motion pictures, but is barred to persons employed in any branch of the industry. The basic purposes of the group are given as these:

1. To serve as a center of information on motion pictures for the metropolitan area, and in pursuance of this function (a) to collect and organize motion picture information; (b) to distribute motion picture information through publication, conference, public meetings and other legitimate methods of public information; (c) to give information to individuals or agencies seeking enlightenment on specific motion picture problems.

2. To provide the machinery for conference and voluntary cooperation among the agencies interested in motion picture activities in the metropolitan area.

"It is not the purpose of this group to become a reform organization or to enter politics, but to serve a really useful function, and I believe it can perform a real service to motion pictures," said Dr. Frederic M. Thrasher, professor of the School of Education, New York University, an official of the Council.

The first annual conference of the Council was scheduled for Thursday night at New York University, on the general topic, "The Use of Motion Pictures in Parent Education." The speakers were to include Dr. Arnold Gesell, director of the Clinic of Child Development of Yale University, and Dr. H. A. Gray, research associate of Erpi Picture Consultants.

The Board of Directors

Under the plan of organization, the following, with the organizations they represent, have been named to the board of directors:

Dr. Frank Astor, liaison officer, New York City Board of Education.

Professor Walter S. Barnes, motion picture committee, National Council of Teachers of English.

Mrs. August Belmont, formerly chairman of the late Dr. William Short's Motion Picture Research Council.

George Freedley, director of the theatre collection, New York Public Library.

Dr. Jacob A. Goldberg, secretary, Social Hygiene Committee, New York Tuberculosis and Health Association.

Lee F. Hanmer, director, recreation department, Russell Sage Foundation.

Mrs. Irving S. Heymann, motion picture chairman, Horace Mann Bulletin.

Officers and Committees

The officers are: Chairman, Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr.; secretary, Miss Mabel Williams; treasurer, Mrs. Grace Fisher Ramsey; technical director, Dr. Frederic M. Thrasher.

The executive or steering committee consists of the officers and George Freedley, Lee F. Hanmer, Mrs. Alonzo Klaw, Mrs. James F. Looram, Miss Margaret P. Rae and George Zehrung. The chairman of the Council is also chairman of the executive committee.

The plan of organization also provides for an advisory group which shall include a number of persons with special motion picture interests whose advice and assistance may be sought.

The membership dues are $2 a year, which entitle members to receive the Council's monthly information bulletin and to attend the annual conference and such other general meetings of the Council as may be held from time to time.

The monthly information bulletin, which it is proposed to publish, will serve as a clearing house of information on activities.

"The Metropolitan Motion Picture Council is to be considered in no sense a federation of organizations and groups working in the motion picture field," said a statement of purpose. "It is an organization of individuals drawn from groups (outside the industry) carrying on community, cultural or educational motion picture activities or having a direct interest in such activities. The members of the Council do not in any sense speak for or represent the organizations from which they are drawn.

"This statement is intended to emphasize the voluntary nature of any efforts which the Council may make in the interest of coordination of motion picture activities and the fact that the chief service of the Council is conceived of as a clearing house of information. Nothing in this statement, however, is to be construed as to prevent any group or organization from which the members are drawn from designating one of its members as its official spokesman or representative in the Council."

Rockefeller-RKO Claim Settlement Hits a Stalemate

Complexities surrounding the reorganization of RKO and various of its theatre interests this week brought a complete breakdown in negotiations for settling Rockefeller Center's claim of $9,100,000 against RKO, and a disclosure of $5,577,856 in claims standing against Orpheum Circuit, with cash assets of only $2,343. Orpheum stockholders are complaining.

RKO this week began its court opposition to the allowance of the Rockefeller Center claim at a hearing before Federal Judge William Bondy in New York. The allowance of the claim at that time was also opposed by Radio Corporation of America, Time, Inc., and individual RKO stockholders. Following oral argument by both sides, the court gave them each two weeks for the exchange of briefs and five days thereafter in which to file answering briefs. His decision is not expected for a month at the earliest, and, regardless of its nature the case is certain to be taken to the United States circuit court of appeals by the loser thereafter.

The claim is based on a 20-year lease made by RKO with Rockefeller Center in 1931, which provides for an annual rental of $950,000. Under articles of the lease RKO was also held liable for the unamortized construction costs of the Music Hall and Center Theatre. The claim was filed for $12,185,000 and, after hearings last year, was reduced to approximately $9,150,000. As the claim now stands Rockefeller Center is the largest unsecured creditor of RKO and as such would be a power in the reorganization of the company. The status of the huge claim has been the principal obstacle to the development of a plan of reorganization for RKO and it is apparent that until the claim is disposed of little or no progress on a plan can be made.

General claims against Orpheum Circuit, Inc., totaled $5,577,856 as of September 28, 1935, according to a report filed with the federal court in New York by Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn. The report said that the company has indicated cash assets of $2,343.

A group of Orpheum stockholders had protested against an alleged "milking" of the corporation through transactions by which Stadium Theatres Corporation and Keith-Albee-Orpheum were said to have acquired some of the company's most valuable assets. The referee's report did not cite any of the transactions complained of as irregular.

CONGRESS QUIET ON FILM LEGISLATION

Doubt Action This Session on Copyright and Block Booking; Minors Bill Signed

Congressional repercussions on motion picture affairs this session are unlikely to resound no louder than the mere puff of a committee recommendation for passage of the proposal to control the entrance of aliens into the country, for little hope, if any is held for either recommendation or passage of any other measure—principally the Duffy copyright and the McNeely-Pettengill anti-block booking legislation. This industry, however, along with virtually all others, still is watching the taxation situation in Congress.

Legislative activities affecting the motion picture were almost non-existent during the week, New York State's new law regulating child attendance being the only measure of note that was enacted. Several municipalities, however, were busy on tax ordinances, Sunday closing laws, building codes and such.

In Washington, the House Immigration Committee approved Chairman Dickstein's bill to limit entry of alien actors, singers and orchestra conductors. The measure would permit entry, except for persons of distinguished merit and professional ability, only when foreign countries provide reciprocal arrangements for entry of American artists.

Doubt Federal Legislation

On the other hand, members of the Senate and House committees concerned with film legislation this week conceded that little or no chance is in prospect for enactment of either copyright or block booking legislation if the session is to be adjourned in time for the Republican National Convention in Cleveland.

No important measures other than those providing for taxes and relief will be taken up, under the plans of Congressional leaders, and a number of major bills are expected to be left on the calendar for action next year in order to avoid bringing up controversial measures that might delay adjournment.

There is a chance that if film legislation is reported to the House it may be acted upon, since that body will have nothing of major importance before it while the Senate is struggling with taxes and relief, but it is not believed that time will permit of its consideration in the Senate.

Minors Bill Signed

Growing conviction on the part of members of the Senate Finance Committee that the undistributed profits tax adopted by the House would prove unworkable this week led to the belief in informed circles as hearings on the bill concluded that the committee will adopt an increase, possibly of five per cent, in the present corporation tax removal of the exemption of dividends from normal tax and a tax on undistributed profits in excess of a certain proportion.

With the hearings ended, the committee took the bill behind closed doors to work out its amendments, which will require probably a week.

By a stroke of his pen, Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York on Monday gave exhibitors and law enforcement officials a solution to a long-standing problem when he signed the Joseph-Swartz bill amending the antiquated law prohibiting the admission of unescorted children under 16 years old to theatres. The age limit now is lowered to eight years.

The remaining step to effectuate the provisions for New York City and other municipalities is the passage of local ordinances providing for the licensing of theatres under the restrictions imposed by the statute, which are:

1. A special section of seats on the main floor must be set aside exclusively for children 8 to 16 years old, with adults barred.

2. A seat must be provided for every child admitted.

3. Children may not be admitted during the time when their school classes are in session.

4. One or more matrons must be assigned to supervise the children, the matrons to be licensed at an annual fee of $2. The matrons are to be employed by the theatre.

The law specifies that the local regulations may provide "other and additional conditions or limitations."

The measure was sponsored by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York as a remedy for the conditions brought about by the old law which was found unworkable and an encouragement to the circumvention of the law on the part of unescorted children. It had the support of the various interests concerned, including theatres, police officials and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

A police drive against motion picture houses that admitted children under 16 unaccompanied by a parent or "authorized" guardian was undertaken four months ago with the avowed purpose of obtaining a change in the old law. Because of public disapproval, case after case was dismissed on account of insufficiency of evidence.

The raids on theatres, in which almost 300 managers and other employees were summoned, were conducted on order of Byrnes MacDonald, director of the Juvenile Aid Bureau of the New York police department. Mr. MacDonald said at the time that the arrests were made on the basis of the belief that the only way to bring about alteration of an unpopular law was by the strict enforcement of that law.

In Effingham, Ill., an ordinance pending before the City Council calls for a tax of $250 on theatres seating less than 500, and $500 per year on houses seating from 1,200 to 2,000.

Senate Bill No. 178 to allow Sunday motion pictures in the town of Westerly, passed the Senate and the House of Representatives in Providence, R. I., this week and now only awaits action by Governor Theodore F. Green.

More than 2,000 members of organized labor in Pensacola, Fla., have protested the action of the City Council in passing an amusement tax which affects the Saenger Theatre Corporation so that the circuit proposes to reduce the activities of its houses. The Council has been requested to repeal the new ordinance.

The proposed new building code with its drastic regulations for theatres was passed by the City Council of Wilmington, Del., this week and is now before Mayor Walter W. Bacon, who is expected to approve it. The proposed code will work unusual hardships on present and future rebuilding and replacements. Theatre men protested vigorously several features of the code pertaining to seating, aisles, rigid steel curtains and the like.

NATIONAL ADVERTISERS PREFER TRADE PRESS

Trade and industrial papers were used by 76.15 per cent of 261 national advertisers last year, according to "A Survey of 299 National Advertising Budgets: 1934-1935," just issued to members of the Association of National Advertisers by the Advertising Research Foundation.

Although 280 companies supplied "usable data" on 299 products, reported Paul B. West, A. N. A. president, and were thought to "represent a fair cross section of the larger national advertisers of the United States," not all participated in every phase of the survey.

Among other media used by the 260 companies were, in order, direct mail, 72.31 per cent; magazines, 65; newspapers, 53.185; sales and service literature, 49.61; conventions and exhibits, 46.54; outdoor, 31.15; "publicity," 31.15; radio, 30.38.

More Legal Tilts On Chance Games

The inconsistencies in the status today of the chance game stimulant as used by theatres was exemplified this week with the statement by Claude Ezell, executive of the "Bank Night" copyright owners, that the game now is used in 5,200 theatres, an increase of 1,000 in a year, while, on the other hand, authorities continued their activities to stamp out the practice in their communities.

All theatres in Nassau County, N. Y., have been given notice by district attorney Martin W. Littleton to discontinue chance games and the distribution of giveaways by May 25th. The move followed similar action taken recently by district attorney Foley in the Bronx and is believed by theatre men to have been motivated by a decision handed down some weeks ago by the appellate division of the supreme court holding Farmer Miller in violation of the lottery laws of the state of New York.

Exhibitors have been notified to clear up outstanding obligations in connection with the games and giveaways by May 25. In the event the practices are continued arrests will be made, the district attorney declared. Skouras theatres, which operates seven houses in Nassau County playing Bank Night and Screeno, does not intend to oust the games, it was stated at the circuit's headquarters and it will contest alleged illegality in court.

Efforts by district attorney Geoghan to oust chance games from Brooklyn theatres met with a setback when Magistrate Malbin in the Flatbush Avenue court threw out the complaint against the Terminal theatre, operated by Abraham H. Eisenstadt, using Bank Night. Regardless, district attorney Geoghan has had subpoenas served on two theatre managers in his drive to oust the games from his borough.

New York night clubs, headed by the Stork Club, were ordered to discontinue the practice of giving away cash awards by Commissioner Bruckman of the State Alcoholic Control Board. He threatened to suspend liquor licenses wherever prize drawings are held.

A suit for $3,000 has been filed in the circuit court of Tampa against Gulf Theatres, Inc., operator of the Tampa, by W. A. Rice, whose name was called at the Bank Night drawing May 1 and who missed the pot of $1,550 by one minute, according to an announcer's statement over a loudspeaker to a crowd waiting outside.

Theatre managers threatened by city authorities of Council Bluffs, Ia., with prosecution for violation of overcrowding ordinances on Bank Nights, have kept promises "to be good," it was reported at the mayor's office.

URUGUAY, FILM-CONSCIOUS, TURNS TO LAUNCHING TEN NEW THEATRES

New Company, Delmaur, Plans Four Houses in Opening Competition with Glücksmann's 19 in Montevideo and 12 Outside

by PAUL BODO
in Montevideo

This year has brought great activity and a never expected development in the show business in Montevideo. There are only two legitimate stage theatres open. Last year the Teatro Artigas was transformed into a film house. This year two more theatres and a concert auditorium will follow this example. Eight new theatres are projected, with a total seating capacity of about 7,000. Three of these ten will be first-run houses.

Delmaur, Ltd., founded a year ago and operating thus far only two houses, is on the top with four new film theatres, forming the biggest local theatre organization next to that of Don Bernardo Glücksmann, owner of 19 film theatres in Montevideo and 12 in other cities of Uruguay.

The Ambassador will be the new first-run theatre of Delmaur, with 1,400 seats. As second-run theatres there are now under construction, the Mogador, with 600 seats, the Capitol, with 1,000, and the Astor, with 1,100 seats.

MGM Air-Conditioned Theatre

The finest and most modern house will be that of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of Uruguay, Inc., in the center of the city, on the corner of Cuareim and San José streets. As the first air-conditioned theatre in the country, it will be ready to do a good business also during the summer season. The deluxe theatre of Metro, also a first-run house, is planned for a capacity of 1,000 and is expected to open by the end of June.

The state-owned Teatro Urquiza also is to be transformed into a film theatre. The Sodre-Servicio Oficial de Radiodifusión Eléctrica—official broadcasting station, bought the theatre years ago for transmission of the concerts of the National Symphony Orchestra, planning at the same time the organization of an opera company, but this project never was realized. The National Symphony Orchestra so far is working only twice a month, two Saturday afternoons. The other days this large theatre has been closed.

Independents Active

Two to three years ago the Teatro Urquiza was rented for a few weeks to independent exhibitors, running French pictures. This year the local representative of Gaumont-British signed a contract with Sodre and rented the house for the 1936-37 season. Eight months a year the theatre will show films. As the local representative of Gaumont-British is also the distributor of German and French pictures, the Teatro Urquiza, which will seat slightly over 700, will be the first-run theatre of this producer.

Another stage theatre, the Teatro Albeniz, which only incidentally had foreign shows, has also been changed and is expected to be opened within a few weeks by an independent exhibitor as the Cine Montserrat. Its capacity is about 1,000.

The former concert auditorium of the Sociedad Musical Lyra also has been rented by an independent exhibitor. There are places for 1,100 spectators. After certain modifications required by the local authorities, the theatre, as a second-run, will have some 900 seats.

Other independent theatres to be opened this year are the Cine Larrañaga, with a capacity of 630, and Cine Savoy with 600.

There are also new theatres in sight for the next year. Mr. Glücksmann, local distributor for RKO, Columbia, United Artists, French and Argentine producers, has the intention to open three large, modern houses.

Exhibitors and distributors are expecting prosperous business this year and hope that with such improved theatres the attendance will increase largely and allow all of them to operate with good financial results.

Welgot Appears with New Silent Feature Trailers

Welgot Trailer Service, Inc., of New York, is now marketing to exhibitors a new silent form of trailer, which is sold outright, on all feature pictures. They will be considerably shorter in length than the present trailer size, according to the producers. Trailers are usually rented, on the same basis as motion pictures.

"Custer" to Wintroub

P. Wintroub of Majestic Pictures, Omaha and Kansas City, has closed with Robert Mintz, president of Stage and Screen Productions, Inc., for distribution of the 15-episode serial, "Custer's Last Stand," in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and western Missouri.

Boston Friars To Golf

The Boston Friars Club is making tentative plans for golf matches at the Pinebrook Valley and South Shore Clubs. Boat excursions are also under discussion. The organization, to which some 130 film men belong, is an independent fraternal body.

Writer Rides "Zep"

Among the passengers aboard the airship "Hindenberg" on its maiden transoceanic voyage was Leslie Charteris, author of "Saint in New York," to be produced by RKO-Radio.

Sachson to Master Arts

Milton Sachson, formerly with Warners, is now metropolitan salesman for Master Arts. Harry Charnass has been named salesman in Chicago.

Warners' Foreign Session Concluded

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

The annual European convention of Warner-First National was concluded recently in Paris with Harry M. Warner, president, and Sam Morris, vice-president, present. Robert Schless, managing director in Europe and the Far East for the company, was in charge of the gathering. Representatives from 42 company exchanges on the continent and in England attended.

The meetings were held in the offices of the company and were concluded with a dinner at one of the leading establishments. Mr. Warner was the principal speaker at this affair and said, in part:

"I am very glad to be, for the first time, with the representatives of all our European branches. I must say that, with the clever impulse of Robert Schless, some of these offices have places themselves in strong positions with relation to others in the European market. Of the 60 pictures scheduled for production by us next year, we shall endeavor to produce one exceptionally outstanding one a month.. Although this is a very ambitious program, I am sure we shall succeed in it. We must believe in our increasing success."

Several screenings were held during the course of the meetings with "Anthony Adverse," "Green Pastures," "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and "The Story of Louis Pasteur" among the more important pictures shown.

Tri-State Drive Is Started

Thirty-one Tri-States managers have started a 13-week championship drive with a series of prizes for houses in the A and B groups and with special prizes for district managers. Headquarters of the campaign are in Des Moines.

Recognition for "the finest dramatic performance of the year" has been awarded Paul Muni for his work in "The Story of Louis Pasteur" by Stage Magazine in its current issue.

William Rosenthal has been promoted to the post of manager of the United Artists Indianapolis office. He was formerly manager of the company's exchange at Pittsburgh.

White Reelected AMPA President

The election of officers and reports by committees were the features of the annual meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Astor in Manhattan last week. Gordon S. White, president, and Herbert S. Berg, treasurer, were reelected, while Charles Leonard was chosen vice-president, Ralph Lund secretary and William R. Ferguson trustee. The board, in addition to the above mentioned, includes Monroe Greenthal, Milton Silver, S. Barret McCormick, George Gerhard and Tom Waller.

Mr. White outlined some of the plans for the coming term and Gar O'Neill, retiring secretary, reported 22 meetings had been held in the past year with an average attendance of 50 members. Mr. Berg revealed that the Naked Truth Dinner resulted in a loss of $1,104; that the organization's bank balance is $527, and an outstanding debt of $2,281. Negotiations for reductions in the obligations, if consummated, will leave a final deficit of $401, it was stated. Of the 182 members, 116 are paid up and 66 have not been heard from.

Marvin Kirsch, head of the service committee, reported that in the past year jobs were obtained for 64 men and 76 women. At present there are five unemployed male members.

Messrs. Leonard, Lund, Greenthal, McCormick, Silver and Capt. Harold Auten gave their views on future ideas for the organization. Tess Michaels of United Artists was named to take charge of a meeting to be run exclusively for the feminine members.

Awards for the best advertising copy to the trade and public, the most practical press sheet and the best poster will be made public at the May 28 meeting, Mr. White announced.

Jesse L. Lasky was to be guest of honor at the regular Thursday luncheon this week. He is in New York for the opening of "One Rainy Afternoon" on Broadway.

Thomas Will Handle FitzPatrick Pictures

Negotiations were concluded in New York over last weekend whereby Harry H. Thomas, recently resigned as president of First Division, will handle in the domestic market the 12 features James A. FitzPatrick will make in England next season.

Although the first release has not been definitely set, it will most likely be "David Livingstone," on which Mr. FitzPatrick has been working on and off for the past year. Exteriors have already been completed on the film life of the African explorer.

Protest Free Films

Downtown Philadelphia exhibitors have begun to protest Gimbel Brothers' department store, free films to be shown four times daily. The program consists of about an hour of screen entertainment culled from old-time films, including a William S. Hart western, a Chaplin and a collection of early newsreels. Theatremen are complaining that the free shows are cutting into their matinee grosses as they depend on the shoppers for much of their business.

ODDS AGAINST CAPTURE SPUR CRIMINALS

The odds against a criminal getting caught and sent to jail on the indictment growing out of an original charge are better than 50 to 1 in these United States.

"life sentence" does not mean "life"—the average time spent in jail on "life sentences" is ten years.

Murder results in average sentences of four years.

Startling figures, these, but authentic because they come from the Uniform Crime Reports of the United States Department of Justice.

CODDLING CRIMINALS.

Courtney Ryley Cooper, internationally famous as a writer on crime, found the figures listed above in the Department of Justic reports.

"And," he says, "one out of every 30 persons believed to be in jail, by the general public, is out, either on parole, by pardon, or through a suspended sentence. A Judge may stand up in court, shake his finger at a supposedly quaking prisoner and sentence him to a given term of years in an institution. But that doesn't mean that the prisoner will be in jail the number of years the sentence indicated."

JURIST ASSAILS PAROLE SYSTEM

The World-Telegram today asked a distinguished jurist to give his opinion of the parole system.

By PRESIDING JUSTICE FRANCIS MARTIN,
Appellate Division, First Department.

Many of the most atrocious and savage crimes in recent years have been committed by paroled convicts. For many years I have publicly [illegible] that there is something radically wrong with our parole system and I have on numerous occasions urged that our present method of paroling prisoners has proved a failure.

The best way to obtain an efficient parole system is to place the paroling of prisoners in the courts, where ; belongs. The Parole Board should e composed of judges of courts of ecord.

Campaign Launched for Production of Cultural Native Pictures to Improve Home Product

by CHIKUSHI TANI
in Tokyo

The Japanese Association of the Motion Picture has launched a vigorous campaign to promote the production of cultural pictures, with a view to improving the quality of the Japanese product. Each of the three leading companies of Nippon will produce one such feature for the 1936-37 season. Shochiku, Nikkatsu and P. C. L. will participate in this new arrangement. A canvass of exhibitors has revealed that their will be no objections to the program among theatre operators. The proposal of the association to develop a 10-day run system, one of the most striking of the organization's efforts at correction of current policies, met with such strenuous opposition from exhibitors that it has been virtually abandoned.

Nikkatsu has made a radical shift in its production policy, in an effort to meet the competition of Shochiku, and attract particularly the feminine contingent of Japanese patronage. Future pictures of the company will be featured by modern, romantic stories, in which the company's product has been noticeably deficient. Comedies and musicals are also being planned by Nikkatsu.

Japanese audiences have recently begun to take a new interest in newsreels. Until recently theatres made no effort to show the reels made up of current events, but now exhibitors cannot obtain enough of them. Shochiku established a newsreel division at its new studio last year. Shinko also was working on the development of a reel unit. The film companies, however, have been unable to compete with the newsreel activity of the newspapers, among which the five leaders are in Osaka. Their vigorous competition to sign circuits for their reels is partly responsible for the new interest in the material. Film producers, who have not been geared to the production of newsreels, have virtually stepped out of the field entirely.

Tokyo theatres enjoyed the best business they have had in months during March, favored by improved weather after an unusually long period of cold and rain. The business, however, has been going to American films rather than the domestic product. Among the outstanding American pictures which have grossed heavily during the month were "Fang and Claw," "Broadway Melody of 1936" and "The Milky Way."

Union Pacific Plans 39-Hour Streamliner

Union Pacific will cut 19 hours from its fastest running time between Chicago and Los Angeles and in reverse beginning this week when the City of Los Angeles, an all-streamlined train, starts service east and west. For the present, however, the new train will leave every sixth day from Los Angeles and Chicago.

Between the two cities, the new schedule will be 39 hours and 45 minutes as compared with 58 hours and 45 minutes now maintained by the Los Angeles Limited. Out of New York, U. P. points out, it will be possible to leave over the New York Central or Pennsylvania as late as 11:25 P. M. to arrive in Chicago 4:55 the following afternoon and connect with the streamliner two hours later for the coast.

Rogers Memorial Drive Next Week

The completion of the work of organizing the motion picture industry for the celebration of Will Rogers Memorial Week, May 22-28, in every theatre in the country to raise funds for the support and maintenance of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y., has been announced by Major Leslie E. Thompson, chairman of the campaign committee.

Full cooperation of everyone connected with the industry has been promised, with most of the independent theatres of the country already having signified their joining with the houses operated by Loew, Paramount, Fox, Warner and RKO circuits in obtaining funds either by collections among the patrons or on a membership basis.

Many meetings held over last weekend were reported this week by Major Thompson. In Portland, Ore., Governor Martin personally attended the organization meeting presided over by G. C. Craddock, distributors zone chairman and J. J. Parker, head of the exhibitors' committee. In Nashville, Tenn., Governor Hill McAllister pledged the same support to H. F. Kincey of Charlotte and John Ezell, zone chairman for that state. Governor George C. Peery of Virginia also addressed a group of exhibitors and pledged his support to the campaign.

Vice-president John N. Garner, honorary chairman of the Will Rogers Memorial Commission, this week expressed his approval of Will Rogers Memorial Week.

Mr. Garner, in writing to Jesse H. Jones, treasurer of the memorial commission, said:

"Dear Jesse:

"As honorary chairman of the Will Rogers Memorial Commission, and a friend of Will Rogers, I am greatly pleased that the motion picture industry has set aside the week of May 22-28 to support the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y., and the Will Rogers Memorial Fund.

"Sincerely yours,
"John N. Garner."

Local committees to handle the funds and to make arrangements to observe the memorial week in theatres are being organized throughout the country. In Cleveland, Frank Drew, local chairman for the drive, has appointed three committees to handle that territory. Nat Holt, RKO division manager; Harry E. Long, Loew division manager; Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager; Earl Johnson, chairman of the first Rogers' drive, and Ernest Schwartz will take care of the major circuits. Another committee composed of all Cleveland branch managers has zoned the territory with each manager taking charge of one or more zones. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association makes up the third group.

In New Orleans, Houston Duval, Columbia branch manager, has been named director for his territory. He has appointed the following committeemen to assist him: William Shiell, Affiliated Producers; L. V. Seicshnaydre, Republic; Clarence Eiseman, First Division; E. V. Landsiche, Twentieth Century-Fox; Ben Dudenheifer, Atlantic Films; Abraham Harrison, Harcol; C. J. Briant, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; H. F. Wilkes, Paramount; Guy C. Brown, RKO; G. R. Frank, United Artists.

British Films Gain In the Philippines

English product is proving a serious competitor to American films in the Philippine Islands, declared C. L. Brookheim, Universal manager there, on his arrival in New York late last week for home office conferences with N. L. Manheim, foreign sales head. Mr. Brookheim expects to remain until after the Universal sales convention, scheduled for June 1-3 at the Astor Hotel. He will spend two weeks in Hollywood before coming east.

English pictures have a first run outlet in Manila, Mr. Brookheim said, and are the only serious threat to American domination in the market. They are cutting in increasingly. Spanish product has suffered in his territory, he said. Audiences in the islands want action in their film fare, and will not patronize films that lack it. English dialogue is no obstacle to the success of a film if the action is there, Mr. Brookheim declared. Musical pictures are also extremely popular with native audiences.

First run theatre business is on the upgrade, Mr. Brookheim said, and is better than last season, but subsequent run houses are maintaining only the level of the past year, which could not be considered more than fair. There is practically no new theatre construction under way on the islands, he said. The State, in Manila, opened last December, being the only new house there within the past year.

Edward Laurillard Dies in New York

Stricken in New York while en route from Europe to Hollywood, Edward Laurillard, veteran British theatrical producer, died May 6th at the Harbor Sanitarium, New York, after an illness of several weeks. At one time in his career, which was divided between England and the United States, he operated 25 motion picture theatres.

A LETTER AND A REPLY

WRITER DEFENDS HIS ATTACK ON CENSORING

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am astonished that you so completely escaped the point of my article "Back to Smut," in denunciation of which you published "Smut Lust" in the Herald of April 11th. It is interesting to speculate upon the heroic frenzy with which you would have hurled yourself at Dean Swift for his amiable suggestion that roasted Irish children might provide an agreeable delicacy for English gourmets.

In quoting me you failed to mention the last paragraph of my piece which contained the nugget of the argument. I append it to clear up the issue:

"Of course this isn't really what bothers me. Like any ordinary idiot, I know that moral censorship is, and always has been, simply the opening wedge for political censorship. And political censorship is as bad for the boss's business as for the writer's conscience. I don't lose much sleep when the Hays boys pencil a blue line from my script. But when they scratch intelligent lines—and God only knows how infrequently they come to me, and with what awful labor pangs!—then, brothers, I get mad."

There, Mr. Ramsaye, is the nubbin of the matter. It seems not too presumptuous to believe that in a democracy the vast movie public is its own best censor and that the box-office is its logical polling place. For self-appointed meddlers and meretricious clergymen arbitrarily to assume the job is a studied and officious insult. Once started, nothing but complete power will appease them, and since smut is the first object of their attack it must, willy-nilly, become the first line of our defense. Personally I don't give a damn for smut for its own sake. But I do seriously resent and deplore the fact that it is the focal point through which the camel of professional reform thrusts its snout into the creative tent. And I hate the camel so deeply that smut, by comparison, seems clean. In it I can occasionally smell the robustiousness of life; but from the priests of moral reform I catch only the stench of putrescence and death—that intellectual death which is the beginning of tyranny and the handmaiden of censorship in any form.

You know, Mr. Ramsaye, and I know that nobody wanted censorship, least of all the producers who realize that they guide a medium of vast social importance which deserves, but has lost, that freedom of expression which is the basis of independent thought. You know as well as I the silly lengths to which moral censorship already has gone; that it has overshot its professed purpose to such an extent that no contemporary controversial subject—and controversy, i.e., conflict, is the essence of drama—can be honestly presented on the screen; that it provides actual protection to innumerable scoundrels, private and public, who would perish with exposure; that from 50 to 70 per cent of all literary classics are untranslatable to the screen in anything resembling their original form; that the Bible itself could not be photographed without endless fumigation at the hands of the slobbering sensualists who provide the motive force for the censorship drive.

Do not be deceived that we are being attacked by altruists who, because of their altruism, are, in some mysterious fashion, too sacred for counter-attack. On the contrary, we are harassed by professional reformers, men who are well-paid to annoy their betters, men who make a living from their work, even as you and I. It is a business with them, and we are fools if we regard it in any other light. They were not shocked into action by the World War and ten million dead young men rotting in their graves. Rather they whooped and prayed for it. They weren't appalled by the Teapot Dome and its consequent nauseous stench of civic decay. Instead they returned to power the political party which was forced to accept responsibility for the mess. Confronted with the awful challenge of world-wide depression, starvation, dictatorship and race-murder, they grasped desperately for a straw—and in a world of heartbreak the straw they chose was smut. Their nostrils were adjusted to it, and their righteousness fed upon it. It was the only thing they all understood. It always has been, and will continue to be, their sole raison d'etre.

That is why I like smut. By comparison it is clean and decent and sweet and honest.
—Dalton Trumbo, Hollywood, Cal.

RAMSAYE CITES INDUSTRY'S OWN PRODUCTION CODE

The editor's reply to Mr. Trumbo follows:

Your letter of April 22 restates exactly what we took editorial exception to in our issue of April 11 concerning your piece entitled "Back to Smut."

You say in essence that "back to smut" is a path to the freedom of the screen.

You assert that the forces which have expressed at various times dissatisfaction with the moral content and implication of some and various and many pictures are all dishonest expressions of a plot addressed at political control of the art. In that you are of course giving voice to that occasional attitude found in Hollywood which resents the mores of American society, and would deny to it right of expression. I have had the impression that the Hollywood producing mechanism was at this time being served in respect of such issues and all related problems by a Production Code Administration, under a Production Code voluntarily accepted, approved, adopted and empowered. Am I now to believe that, on your representations, Hollywood is in secret revolt and opposition? Am I to understand that the Production Code is to you and your fellows an irksome restraint, something that you hope will be a transient expedient of camouflage to be cast aside and meanwhile to be circumvented when possible? What you set down sounds very much like that.

Were I to agree with you that "the public is its own best censor," I might go on to observe that in a very definite sense the public has had to set up a lot of safeguards against transgressions by absent minded citizens who have to be policed because of their lack of conscience and social responsibility. Broadly there is a theory in this country that when people won't behave they have to have supervision to make them behave. It chances that the motion picture industry is currently operating on a plan of self-control, self-regulation—which also tends to mean self-respect and common decency.

Now if you want to tear up the current arrangement and go "back to smut," I trust you will understand exactly what you are saying.

You have a perfect right to confess, if you feel impelled.

Meanwhile please be assured that you are not at all misunderstood. The pattern you trace is familiar.

TERRY RAMSAYE
Editor.

"Showboat" Gala Opening

Universal staged a special premiere of "Showboat" at the Pantages Theatre in Hollywood Tuesday night. The house was scaled at $1.65 top, and a special parade down Hollywood Boulevard preceded the event. All members of the cast were present in the costumes they wore in the film. The picture started a regular day and date run at the Pantages and Hill Street Wednesday.

Theatre Celebrates 20th Birthday

The progress that has been made in screen entertainment during the past 20 years was depicted in a "film jamboree" to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the Regent, Montreal, a unit of United Amusements, Ltd. A number of old films were shown and two musicians who played during the silent days, Alan McIver and Edgar Herring, supplied the sound effects.

Will H. Hays is now in Chicago, where he will remain for several days before continuing his journey back to New York from Hollywood. Meanwhile, Tom Pettey has arrived in New York from Hollywood where he was substituting for Lupton Wilkinson of the Producers Association while the latter was ill.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Casper, Wyoming

Dear Herald:

The readers have probably heard of "Hell and Mariar" and "Hell on the Wabash" and "Hell Bent for Election," but we are wondering if they have ever seen, or heard of "Hell's Half Acre." Hell's Half Acre is what some people would call a hole in the ground. Instead of being a half acre in extent, it is more like forty acres and geologists would give some geological reason for it, which would probably be correct, but our theory is that it was at one time a crater of a volcano that blew up and left a hole in the ground big enough to cause one to think that there was the place they got the dirt to build Pike's Peak. Our guess is that Mother Nature got her back up and in one of her tantrums blew up this hole in the ground to let the Indians and buffalo know that she was still on the job.

When you travel the highway from Casper to the Yellowstone Park you will see Hell's Half Acre right beside the highway about fifty miles west of Casper, and it will be well worth your time to stop and look this place over.

Not very far from Hell's Half Acre can be seen two buttes rising out of the plains that are known all over the country as "Squaw Teat Buttes." Gee whiz, that old Squaw must have been a whopper. Better make a trip out there some time and see these freaks of Nature.

We were told that Casper at one time had a population of 35,000, but that was back in the days when they were becoming excited over oil, and they had a right to be excited, too, for they have developed considerable oil in that locality, but today Casper has something like 20,000 people, but it seemed to be a pretty lively place. We called to see Mr. Schulty, who operates three theatres in Casper and several others at other towns. He was not at home, but we did get to meet his brother, who looks after the theatres when the manager is away. Casper has several oil refineries, but the most of them were idle when we were there. The filling stations seemed to be doing all right one time when we were there, for they charged 25 cents a gallon for their gas within a half mile of the refineries, when we could buy the same gas at home 600 miles from there for 18 cents. We asked why they charged so much and were told that we paid the freight on the gas from Casper to Omaha, Neb., and back to Casper. How's that? It's another case of "Jones, he pays the freight," and they must have taken us for Jones. Well, our name isn't Jones; it ought to be, but it isn't; they were mistaken in our name.

At Sargent, Neb., we called to see John Cosner, who operates Sargent's popular playhouse, but couldn't find John. We called at his theatre and then went to his house, but John must have been down on the Loup river fishing, for he wasn't at home. That's the way it goes. When we try to meet these boys they are away from home.

We drove over to Broken Bow to see our old friend H. F. Kennedy of the Lyric theatre, but H. F. must have heard we were coming, for he had taken Mrs. Kennedy and left for an unknown destination. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

Guy Williams, who conducts a colyum in the Omaha World-Herald started off his colyum with this "For Sale, Cheap, One League of Nations. Never been used." If any of you boys need a League you better get in touch with Guy.

Then we went to Cheyenne, Wyo., to see Chet Miller, who looks after the Fox theatres at that place, but Chet had gone to Sterling, Col. Chet can see now just what he missed. We'll betcha he never gets over that. We met him in Sterling, Col., one time and we have never forgotten him. Good luck to both of you boys.

Did any of you ever drive from Cheyenne to Wheatland, Wyo.? If you ever do, you want to watch closely or you will drive right through Chugwater and not know it. Chugwater has no street cars nor stop lights, but it is on the Chugwater creek, which has water in it when it rains. We stopped there to quench our thrist, but had to go outside to drink it.

Over at Wheatland we met Mr. ? (well, we have just forgotten his name) who operates the Wheatland theatre for the Gibraltar chain of theatres, and which is managed by Mr. Schulty at Casper. Wheatland is a very nice town of about 1,500 Wyoming people and it is surrounded by some country and a lot of hills. If you ever go there you better stop and see this boy, and you will see a good show at his theatre, too. We wish we had set his name down, but we failed to do it; anyhow, he says he likes the HERALD and don't see how he could very well operate a theatre without it.

Lusk, Wyoming, is right where it was the last time we were there, but there is a new manager of the theatre there now and his name is Sam Feinstein, from Oshkosh, Wisconsin, but he is a regular fellow in spite of that. We also met Jack Langon, the Universal manager from Denver, and James Hommel, a Universal salesman, also from Denver. The boys asked us to go and have dinner with them but our appetite had gone haywire. The boys were there to sell Feinstein some Universal service, and they sold him, just as the Universal boys generally do.

Glenrock is where we get coal from, and Glenrock is where Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Jung operate the Empress theatre, and they do a good job of it.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador-Conn

TIMBER WAR: Kermit Maynard, Lucille Lund—A fair saga of the Northwoods. Would be passable as a second feature. Recording only fair. Did fair business as a double feature. Played at Ideal Theatre. Played April 22-23.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Columbia

AFTER THE DANCE: Nancy Carroll, George Murphy—Here's another good picture from Columbia. Has a good story, good acting, and some wonderful dancing by Murphy and Carroll. This is one picture that you need not be ashamed of. It will please all classes. Played April 22-23.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT: Peter Lorre, Edward Arnold—Very heavy melodrama and morbid entertainment. Satisfied our action fans, however, and was a good change of diet from the regular film fare. Played April 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord, Louis Hayward—Not the kind of a picture for a small town and the box office vouches for this. A good story but not the kind our people like. Played April 18-19.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—Nothing to it. Poorest Friday in months. What does Peter B. Kyne's name amount to if the story material is lacking? Columbia must have been hard pressed when they bought this one. Played April 24.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard, Joan Perry—A fine action picture. Maynard has the best horse ever featured in pictures. Business average. Played April 10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IN SPITE OF DANGER: Marian Marsh, Wallace Ford—A dandy program picture with the story based on a keen rivalry between two trucking firms. Although this is a program picture and might stand up alone, we would recommend it for a double bill.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LADY OF SECRETS: Ruth Chatterton, Otto Kruger—Dull, tiresome or what have you. No drama, no comedy. Literally, the picture played to several adults and a few more children; a new low for all time. If you must take this one, shelve it. Played April 7-8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—This one flopped most miserably at the box office. Comments unfavorable. Personally, I got a kick out of it. Played April 14-15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—If you will canvass my audience, they will tell you that 90 per cent thought it bad. Not one good word for it from anyone. The title is right, it goes 'round and 'round. May I never run another like it. This makes two in a row that had plenty of walk-outs and I don't feel so good having two come right on top of each other. Richman is a washout; he may be good on the radio, but he don't or did not get over on the screen.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson. Harry Richman—Just fair. Too long and too much repetition. The name is against it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 24-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PUBLIC MENACE, THE: Jean Arthur, George Murphy—Played this picture on Family Nights and we must say it has plenty of entertainment. George Murphy does a very good bit of acting in this one. It's not a big picture but will satisfy your fans. Played April 15-16.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—Better than reports would indicate. Undernormal business, but the performance pleased. Walter Connolly is a favorite here. Played April 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WESTERN FRONTIER: Ken Maynard, Lucile Browne—This was above average picture which we played on a weekend. With a family appeal which brought many favorable comments from the ladies as well as from the men.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

First National

PAYOFF, THE: James Dunn, Claire Dodd—This did well on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Swell entertainment; very nice Saturday business. I noticed recently that some Western film critic, in the course of telling Terry Ramsaye some of the facts of life, took a side slap at this opus, calling it jingoistic, or something equally distressing. Also saw a similar criticism in a recent religious publication dealing with modern movie trends. Imagine confounding this fine, upstanding and entertaining exposition of intelligent preparedness with crass war-mindedness! A dissection of the cockeyed mentality capable of such muddled near-reasoning would make a very entertaining anatomical study.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason City, Mich. Small town patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—Another Paul Muni triumph that is a fair drawing picture. Exceedingly interesting story of a great man's life. Played April 22-23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GB Pictures

CLAIRVOYANT, THE: Claude Rains, Fay Wray—This picture holds your interest all the way through. First picture Rains has been in where he pleased the entire audience. He has more of a down-to-earth role in this picture and he seemed more natural.—Frank Mountjoy, Circle Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

IRON DUKE, THE: George Arliss, Gladys Cooper—This was a marvelous picture, but at the box office it was a washout. Our first loss this year and it was a big loss. We only took in at the door enough to pay for the shorts and transportation and advertising, let alone the feature rental. I cannot see why people do not go for such a fine picture, as it was well done. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 1-2.—Alhert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Adult and student patronage.

LOVER DIVINE: Hans Jaray, Marta Eggerth, Helen Chandler—Without doubt an excellent and intellectual production. This simple and effective picture tells why Schubert never finished his "B Minor Symphony," otherwise known as his Unfinished Symphony. Our audience reaction towards the picture was half and half. Those who had heard of Schubert and were familiar with his music enjoyed the picture tremendously. The other half were against the production entirely. They couldn't take it, because the picture wasn't a "stand 'em up and knock 'em down" type of production. This picture is well balanced with music and story. Our patrons, however, would rather see a picture that contains a "fiddle band." Speaking of people of the modern ages liking things of the modern age, well, they like "fiddle bands," and that type of music is very primitive, but people are very funny. If you play this picture, you had better contact the schools and conservatories of music to attend your theatres during its run, because the picture is strictly for lovers of classical music. This production will certainly bore the unintellectual type of patron" who doesn't know the purpose of classical music or an opera. We did good business with this picture and I was quite surprised, because the title is enough to drive the patrons away (the title is appropriate enough, but not to the average movie-goer). One thing that can be said about GB productions is that they have good sets that are realistic and much better than many of our Hollywood production sets. My advice to small town exhibitors: do not show this picture because you will not get enough people in the theatre to pay film rental. For cities and larger towns, in cooperation with musical institutions, this is a very good picture. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 22-23.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—I wish to compliment Gaumont British on their outstanding supermasterpieces of 1936. "Mister Hobo" with that beloved star, George Arliss, speaks for itself as one of the finest pictures of the year. "Transatlantic Tunnel" with Richard Dix and Madge Evans is one of the most unusual pictures and keeps the public tense from beginning to end, and above all, "First a Girl," with that charming little lady, Jessie Matthews, is a credit to the motion picture world. These outstanding feature pictures are a natural box-office to all live wire showmen. If more pictures of this kind were produced, it is my opinion the motion picture industry of the world would reach a much higher level.—C. G. Gilkeson, Dickinson Theatre, Marceline, Mo. General patronage.

MORALS OF MARCUS: Lupe Velez, Ian Hunter—Played this one on a double bill and it turned out to be my number one feature. Very good program picture with clever situations which pleased my audience.—Frank T. Mountjoy, Circle Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—Best returns on this picture than any I have played for some time. Donat very popular with the ladies and fast light action of the story made this a hit.—Frank T. Mountjoy, Circle Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—If your patrons like Laurel and Hardy they will like this picture. It is a little draggy in spots, but there are plenty of laughs. Business good. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 21-22.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—Exceptional. Will do business and please 100 per cent. Played April 5-6.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—Jack Benny has proven a draw to us. Played to below average business. Metro has made better program pictures than this.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers, Kitty Carlisle, Allan Jones—Good Sunday business. Better than some of their previous pictures.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—A very clever spy story with a poor marquee title, which is rather misleading. Although we did only average best, we received many favorable comments.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Swell story, swell cast, swell directing. All in all, a darn swell picture. Running time, 96 minutes. Played April 24-25.—Ken Higgins, Capital Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeannette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—A wonderful production that was ruined for us at the box office by the exceedingly poorly conceived Metro trailer. Nearly two hours of grand entertainment from which to select trailer scenes—yet the trailer contained nearly less than two seconds of dramatic material. The whole thing blabbed on about glorious singing and the wonders of "Naughty Marietta." Jeanette MacDonald is shown singing operatic arias. Any producer should realize that such parts would be better kept a secret. While most folks enjoy their singing, why keep the fact "Rose Marie" tells a swell everyday story as the secret?—L. A. Irwin, Palace Thetare, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan. Edna May Oliver—I wish Charles Dickens could see this. It is as nearly perfect a reproduction of his story as could be made. It is a trifle too heavy for a Saturday bill, but it did fair business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Cecilia Parker—Not what we should get from such a company as Metro. They ought to do better than this. Only a fair comedy and pretty English. Played April 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia, Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—Business back to average and picture well liked. A nice program picture with action and suspense. Good for weekend showing. Played April 16.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Robert Young—Our audience was quite disappointed with this picture. The patrons, like myself, were expecting too much. This is not the best picture Claudette has made for Paramount, but it is passable entertainment. I am eagerly awaiting Claudette Colbert's next production for Columbia, because when this company gets a hold of her you know that a good picture is in store for you. We played this picture late and yet obtained good results. Passable entertainment. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 22-23.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper—A better picture than either star has had lately. If Cooper is better than in this one in his latest for Columbia he must be superb. Dietrich does seem better in this Borzage directed film than when under Josef's guidance. She's more alive. They make a good team. Only fair box office value for us. Played May 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke, Tom Keene—Another classy western from Paramount that is okay where westerns are liked. Played May 1-2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HER MASTER'S VOICE: Edward Everett Horton, Peggy Conklin—An okay comedy drama. Pleased about 90 per cent of a small audience. Deserves better support from the public. A bit talky—still contains some pretty subtle dialogue that should entertain. Played April 21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—Played this as a revival to above average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—They liked this one. Business normal. Played April 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST: Dickie Moore, Eleanore Whitney, Virginia Weidler, Elizabeth Patterson—A heart warming little story of a boy's quest for a home for his sister. Dickie Moore rises to the job nicely. Virginia Weidler should not be cast as a "meanie." She's too swell a trouper to fail to give it everything, though, and so makes herself generally disagreeable to fill the bill. Elizabeth Patterson does herself proud also in this Kate Douglas Wiggin story. Played April 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST: Eleanore Whitney, Dickie Moore—A pleasing little picture, somewhat different from the usual run of movie fare. On its own it is doubtful that this would have pulled or pleased too well, but shown as a preview it clicked nicely. Running time, 64 minutes. Played April 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Oregon. Small town and rural patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Was set in on very short notice—with no lobby or advance advertising until opening day. Opened better than average first day and died hard last three nights. Four days run first of week. Picture quite smart in dialogue. Interesting account of giant plane and airport shots. Would say it is an extraordinary picture.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Republic

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—This picture, as all the other Autry films, did excellent business at the box office. This picture received more laughs from the audience than Autry's previous productions for Republic. If your patrons enjoy Gene Autry, then you can do good business with this picture. We posted displays in the lobby two weeks in advance which had all the people taking notice. If we were selling reserved seats on this picture, we would have had every seat in the house sold within three or four hours. We did excellent business on a three day run. This Autry production is well balanced. Music and action runs about equal throughout the production. Good for your weekend dates. Excellent recording. Played at New Liberty Theatre. Played April 26-28.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TWO MISSOURIANS JOIN REPORTERS

Contributing comment on product this week for the first time are two showmen, both from Missouri. They are:

Frank T. Mountjoy, Circle Theatre, 36th and Prospect Streets, Kansas City.

C. G. Gilkeson, Dickinson Theatre, Marceline, Mo.

Read the reports of these exhibitors on "What the Picture Did for Me".

GIRL FROM MANDALAY, THE: Conrad Nagel, Ray Linaker, Donald Cook—Republic is to be congratulated on this simple, yet effective, production. This production is pleasing entertainment because of good casting, directing, and settings. Conrad Nagel, Kay Linaker and Donald Cook are excellent in their roles. Our patrons got into the swing of the picture and really enjoyed it. This is not an elaborate production, but simple story told in a simple manner. Did excellent business at the box office. A good picture for any day in the week. Good recording. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 26-28.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HITCH HIKE LADY: Alison Skipworth, Mae Clarke, James Ellison—The best comedy we have played for a long while. Why don't they make more pictures of this class? Sure to get a good response from any audience. Good, clean fun. Played May 1-2.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Town and country patronage.

HITCH HIKE LADY: Alison Skipworth, James Ellison, Mae Clarke—In these days of double billing it is becoming harder to report on pictures without mentioning what it has been doubled with. In this case it was John Wayne in "The Oregon Trail." This program did a nice above average business both Sunday and Monday. "Hitch Hike Lady" is a credit to Republic. "The Oregon Trail," also a Republic, is an above the average western. To give you some idea of the extent of double bills in this town. The big second run theatres are showing this week "The Life of Louis Pasteur" with "Colleen" and at the other theatres "The Country Doctor" with the Dionne Quintuplets doubled with "Colleen."—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—This boy Autry is there. Can ride like nobody's business. Sing, can he sing, and this little boy with him keeps right up with Gene or a little ahead of him. Business poor two days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—Snappy from start to finish. Every minute detail worked out and it makes very good entertainment. Should do good business but it did not here.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Here is a dandy picture for a small town. A good story and has got the stuff the small town people like. It's worth giving special advertising. Played April 11-12.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—A lot of piffle. No good is the best that I can say for it. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 24-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Harriet Hilliard, Randolph Scott—The Fleet was in and so was about everyone else. This one clicked heavily and is dandy entertainment. Harriet Hilliard is splendid and Randolph Scott better than usual. And, of course, the stars turn in another grand job of singing, dancing, and clowning. Played April 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone, Virginia Weidler—Nothing left of Gene Stratton Porter's story except the name, as the customers took pains to point out to me. Where did they find a "Black Canyon" in Indiana? Little Virginia Weidler stands out as usual. Fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

JALNA: Kay Johnson, Ian Hunter—Some thought it very good; some walked out on it. Slim midweek biz.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—Here is one that is so like real life that it is very, very good. While Ann Harding is at her best, all others in the cast are most satisfactory. The picture rates very high and should be classed as one of the best.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—A very good picture and extremely entertaining. Get them in and it will satisfy. Running time, 77 minutes. Played April 22-23.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MUSS 'EM UP: Preston Foster—This picture is one of the poorest RKO has ever produced. A total waste of good celluloid and actors. This was a super "quickie" and they can have it. Business bad, and no wonder. Buy this but don't run it. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 1-2.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler—We fell 'way down on this for no accountable reason. Those who came seemed satisfied. Played April 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WE'RE ONLY HUMAN: Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt—An average action play that pleased generally. Not much of a draw picture, though. Played April 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN SHANGHAI: Warner Oland, Irene Hervey—Chan pictures have slipped badly in this situation. This picture grossed less than the rental. Where Chan pictures go, it will please. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 27-28.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Expected good business for this one and was not disappointed. Poor recording; Hersholt's voice so weak that it was annoying, and the outdoor recording deafening loud. The Quints, of course, were the drawing power. No matter where this picture is shown, business will be above average due to the tremendous publicity these babies have had ever since their birth. Played April 18-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—Rogers still the great drawing card. Best house since October, 1933, with Mae West. Enthusiastic comment concerning the production, which seemed even better to our people than "Steamboat 'Round the Bend." Played April 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell, Leo Carrillo—Below the average George Raft picture. The best performance in the picture was presented by Rosalind Russell. George Raft is losing out as a drawing card at our theatre. We did a fair business with this picture and picture is only fair entertainment. Played at New Liberty Theatre, April 24-25.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MY MARRIAGE: Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor—If your patrons prefer trite gangster stuff then this is the picture to boost in your community. I certainly wish I had cancelled it and you will wish the same if you play it. Played April 23.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—Had a very poor print. This one is certainly not a hit at the box office. Any picture that savors of kings and kingdoms is surely out of order in my theatre. Shelve it. Business bad. Played April 11-13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT 'ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—We got very choppy prints of both the feature and comedy with this show. We did a very good business, however. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 29-30.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak—This picture bears many exploitation angles and gave us the best box office return we have played to date. It carried a lot of comedy, has star value which built us for the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—A good picture of its kind. Lots of action. A good audience picture. Running time, 89 minutes. Played April 26-28.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Billie

Burke, David Niven—There is one record that this picture broke and that was walkouts. In the first place, Billie Burke is no favorite here. She flutters, poses and overacts and has done so in every role that we have had her in. She seems never to have forgotten the days of long ago when the ten-twenty-thirty was the rage, otherwise she lacks screen technique, and our audiences differ with her and wonder how the producers get that way in heading a cast with her.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Universal

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—A good comedy drama with Horton at his best, lots of fun and a thrilling ending, but this, combined with "Stormy," gave us a below average business for a Sunday and Monday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

KING SOLOMON OF BROADWAY: Edmund Lowe, Dorothy Page—Doubled with Buck Jones in "Silver Spurs" gave us a better than average Friday and Saturday business so you can take your choice as to which is responsible. Both are good average entertaining program pictures.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Everyone enjoyed this one and the black eye build up in trailer and all paper advertising created good advance publicity. Did okay at box office but not above average. Played May 1-2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT?: Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings—This is tops in mystery dramas but it is the amount of drinking in this and some other pictures that no doubt is bringing about the agitation of let-there-be-less-drinking scenes in pictures. Aside from excessive drinking, mystery dramas don't come much better than this. Doubled this with "Personal Maid's Secret," which while it runs only 58 minutes is packed full of the kind of stuff that ordinary folks enjoy most. Business on this program a little better than average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Fairly entertaining action drama that pleased an average midweek crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—A pleasing bill for Saturday, but it didn't draw very well.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—A fair western. Fair Saturday biz.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Victory

BARS OF HATE: Regis Toomey, Sheila Terry—A pleasing melodrama that pleased our patrons. Regis Toomey and Sheila Terry are passable in their roles, but the whole show is Snub Pollard with his acrobatic stunts, which received many a laugh from the audience. This picture is packed full of action. Did fair business at the box office as a double feature. Good for Friday or Saturday dates. Fair recording. Played at Ideal Theatre. Played April 22-23.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Several good shots of the dam—nothing more. Played April 9.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie, Dick Powell—There are very few, if any, catchy tunes in this one; but even at that it is above average film fare. Business was ruined by the most terrible tragedy this town has ever known. Played April 21-22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—I didn't advertise this as a children's picture but some of the mothers brought their kids and then kicked about the gangster type of story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Sunday business just fair. It's a very entertaining comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

ULAN I DZIEWCZYNA: Our first Polish picture to be presented in our theatre. We were very pleasantly surprised that it was very well acted and produced. Though all of the talking was in Polish it was enjoyed even by English people. A war story that was made into a great epic and I must say the Polish producers handled this fine film with great understanding of the art which they are in. This film can be classed with many of the high foreign films which we have already played. It pleased more people than did "Madame Bovary," the French cinema which we have already played. This film was popular with children as there was a fine exhibition of horsemanship. I would suggest that it is not good for more than a two or three day run in a town of one hundred thousand. However, it is far better than some of this American stuff. It will do business for you. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 23-24.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Polish patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

DR. BLUEBIRD: Color Rhapsodies—An excellent Technicolor cartoon. The most beautiful and purest colors I have seen in a cartoon in quite a while. Excellent audience response. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE BEERS: Three Stooges—A funny piece of broadslapstick variety.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

BEWARE OF BLONDES: Young Romance—At last! A real good musical comedy from Educational and it must be a mistake, as it's in the wrong series. Good enough to be worth waiting the whole couple of years for. Pattern after this one, Educational!—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EASY PICKIN'S: Cabin Kids—Okay. The kids are great as usual.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FISHERMAN'S LUCK: Treasure Chest—Another link in Educational's improved single reelers, especially those in this series.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GRAND SLAM OPERA: Buster Keaton—Use this as a carbon, Buster, and we will be sending in good reports on your efforts regularly. This is great.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MY LADY'S GARDEN: Paul Terry-Toons—All of the children enjoyed it very much indeed. Suitable for the entire family. Running time, six minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

SEEING EYE, THE: Treasure Chest—A very worthwhile and useful bit of entertainment.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SEEING NELLIE HOME: Song and Comedy Hits—Nice choral singing of the old favorites.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THANKS, MR. CUPID: Musical Comedies Series—A splendid two-reel musical comedy. Educational's two reel musicals equal that of any major company's feature musicals. Why they don't use Nell Kelly in features is a big surprise to me; she has an excellent personality and is a good little actress. You won't go wrong with this two-reel musical from Educational. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THREE ON A LIMB: Star Personality Comedies—The poorest Keaton for years. Will get by. We advise passing it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE ON A LIMB: Buster Keaton—Not so hot, Buster! Step on it or you'll be out on a limb as we are when we hope for funny comedies.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WAY UP THAR: Young Romance Series—Just fair; nothing to write home about. Running time, 2 reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

19TH HOLE CLUB, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—Only a fair cartoon. Received very few laughs. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—This is the best novel two-reel subject we have played in a long time. The thrills suited our younger people and brought many out to see it again.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BASKETBALL TECHNIQUE: MGM Sports Parade—A very interesting reel showing the fine points in basketball, in both regular and slow motion. Running time, 1 reel.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—Of all cartoons this one is the poorest one I have ever sene. I wonder if this fellow who made it ever heard of "Who Killed Cock Robin?," "Funny Little Bunnies," etc., etc. I'm afraid not or else this "Bottles" cartoon would never have been made. Scrap it!—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON GIRLS: Ina Ray Hutton and Her Melodears—A fair band act. Not as good as Ina can give us, however.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN DREAMLAND: Color Classics—A cute and beautiful cartoon with a good song as background.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RKO Radio

NEWLY REWEDS: Radio Flash Comedies—A good two-reel comedy with all the slapstick included. Received good audience response. Played at New Liberty Theatre.—John Westland, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS, NO. 53—Very fine horse racing and foreign affairs. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

FOX NEWS: No. 55—This news seems to improve as time goes on. Fox has the right idea. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Adult and student patronage.

United Artists

FLYING MOUSE, THE: Silly Symphonies—Another clever Disney, which is always popular in our situation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Vitaphone

MISS GLORY: Merrie Melodies—A poor cartoon, in our opinion, containing a near offensive subject. Color okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CHICAGO COURT FIGHT LOOMS OVER DOUBLES

Policy Announced for B & K Neighborhoods Would Violate Contracts, Say Members

by BILL CROUCH

in Chicago

Although definite announcement as to when Balaban & Katz theatres will start to play dual bills has not been made, it is practically a certainty that double features will be shown in the B & K neighborhood houses very soon.

Barney Balaban revealed that the majority of B & K executives were decidedly in favor of adopting the dual plan and that it was now a matter of working out details before the double feature programs would start. There is considerable detail to arrange before the plan can be put into effect, Mr. Balaban said.

In the meantime the other local circuits and Allied are maintaining their definite opposition to the plan which they feel is harmful to Chicago. Allied in particular is against the idea and will take all steps to stop it should the plan be inaugurated by opposition theatres. The statement that B & K could get pictures for dual showings although all contracts in Chicago are supposed to read for single features only, was made by several major distributors. Allied figures that such an arrangement is a violation of the contracts and if B & K is granted permission by the exchanges to play double features they will bring the matter into court. Allied members claim that they have been refused permission, at various times this year, to play duals even for special engagements of one to two days.

Nine midwest offices of Universal were represented in Chicago over the weekend at a sales conference. The main reason for the meeting was to talk over plans for the releasing of "Showboat," which is set for showing soon. Branch managers from Omaha, Detroit, Des Moines, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Chicago were present at the conference.

Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied Theatres of Illinois, spent the week-end in Cleveland attending a special meeting of the National Board of Allied Theatres. The sessions were held to talk over plans for the coming convention which will be held June 3-4-5, in that city.

As a stimulus for Saturday afternoon matinees for children, a number of local theatre men have been adopting the cartoon matinee idea. This plan is working out very successfully in neighborhood theatres. The Essaness circuit has found it extremely popular with the youngsters, and in order to make it more appealing is giving away cartoon comic sheets to all those who attend the Saturday afternoon shows.

The comic sheets carry advertising at the top of the pages and make it possible for the theatre manager to place his weekly program in the space. If the children take the paper home and show it to their parents and then return it to the theatre the following Saturday they receive free candy. Bill Doerr of the Newspaper Service Bureau here is promoting the idea locally.

Irving Mack has appointed Irving J. Stein, former exhibitor, to the post of Wisconsin sales representative for Filmack Trailers. Stein will be in charge of the Milwaukee office. This is in line with the expansion plans.

Col. Lou Abramson is back at his desk at Allied. Ill for several days, Lou returned just in time to take charge of the plans Allied has for raising its share in the Will Rogers Memorial Fund Drive.

Leslie Howard, with his wife and son, stopped over between trains at the Blackstone. Howard said that during his six months' stay in England he planned to produce a picture called "Bonnie Prince Charlie" with himself in the title role. Howard announced that he might also direct the picture himself if he could not find a director that agreed with him entirely. In speaking of this the actor slyly remarked, "You know, I'm a hard fellow to get along with."

Constance Bennett, Joseph Moskowitz, Mr. and Mrs. William Goetz and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Goetz departed Saturday for the coast in a special car on the Santa Fe.

Peter Lorre, whose dramatic portrayals often have given this reporter a creepy sort of feeling, stopped over between trains the other day and invited us to breakfast. Across the breakfast table Lorre is less foreboding than on the screen.

Lorre is en route to Hollywood to see how plans are coming at Universal for his making "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." If this story is not ready for immediate production Lorre will try and get permission to return to New York and appear in a Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur production at the Paramount Eastern studios.

Lorre is returning from Europe where he made a picture for G-B called "The Secret Agent" under the direction of Alfred Hitchcock. According to Mrs. Lorre, the actor's role in this picture is so realistic in spots that even she was afraid of him, on the screen. Lorre took the Santa Fe Chief west. Others at the station to greet him were W. A. V. Mack and Abe Fisher of the local G-B office.

John Considine, Jr., was another visitor in Chicago last week. Stopping at the Blackstone with Mrs. Considine, the former Carmen Pantages, the producer said that he would start work under his new MGM contract following his vacation trip to Europe.

Considine said that his next production would be a Robert Taylor-Eleanor Powell starring picture called "Hats in the Air." Una Merkel, Sid Silvers, Buddy Ebsen and others who appeared in "The Broadway Melody of 1936" would be in supporting roles.

While in Europe Considine expects to sign up a number of novelty acts for film work in Hollywood.

Emma Abplanalp is looking for a Chow puppy. Since moving into a new and elaborate apartment the Film Board secretary feels that she can give a nice puppy a good home.

Bill Parker, exploitation expert, is now working for MGM on downstate engagements for "The Great Ziegfeld." Metro plans to show this picture in all cities in this territory which have more than 25,000 population.

The engagements will be for three to five days and will be on a two-a-day basis at $1.50 top.

Edgar Bergen, ventriloquist appearing at the Chez Paree, leaves shortly for Hollywood to make another series of shorts for Warners. Bergen has a new idea this time for his "dummy." He is going to use a "Little Audrey" doll and expects to launch this character in films for the first time.

Paul Draper, dance exponent, returns here the last of the month for an appearance at a local night club. Following this engagement he will go to the coast to appear in pictures. His latest film was "Colleen."

Al Blasko and his "Chicago Cubs," comprised of Benny Cohn, Bill O'Connell, Gene Hopson and Harry Mintz, together with Charlie Ryan, assistant zone manager, Harry Turrell and Max Slott, district managers, were guests of the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley Field last Thursday. Blasko, who manages the Symphony theatre in Austin, for Warner Brothers, had arranged with Charlie "Ducky" Drake, assistant to P. K. Wrigley, to take pictures of his team with Charlie Grimm, Cub manager, at batting practice before game time.

Under the leadership of James E. Coston, zone manager for Warner Brothers, the entire Milwaukee and Chicago zone have been divided up into "baseball teams" for a concerted summer drive for bigger and better receipts at the box offices for the months of May, June, July and August. Each team has chosen a name and Blasko and his group, which include the Parthenon theatre, Hammond, Ind.; Oakland Square, Frolic, Orpheum, Chicago and the Symphony theatre, chose the name "Chicago Cubs" because he and his boys expect to be dividing their prize money at the same time the National League Cubs are dividing theirs.

Universal Tests Lens

Universal Newsreel is making tests with a lens, said to be a new development in photographing background along with a closeup. Charles Ford, editor of the reel, says the tests will be completed when the proper sunlight can be obtained for outdoor photography.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 21.—(A) Should other things besides fire hazard be considered in storing film? (B) What length of film suffices for loops in a motion picture projector? (C) What is the voltage drop across a 6-ohm resistor carrying 0.5 of an ampere?

Answer to Question No. 16

Question No. 16 was: (A) Just what functions do rheostats perform in connection with the light source? (B) Why are carbons copper coated? (C) How may the projectionist obtain information concerning equipment he is not acquainted with? (D) What part of an inch is one millimeter?

(A) Rau and Evans reply, “The functions performed by rheostats in connection with the light source of projectors are: (1) To break down supply voltage to where the remaining pressure will force only the desired amperage through the resistance offered by the arc and the circuit involved. Since, save for variations in supply voltage, the supply pressure is presumed to be a constant factor, and the required amperage is known, any resistance other than that imposed by line, carbon, switches and the arc itself is supplied by rheostat resistance elements, often so made that coils or grids may be cut in and out to vary the amperage flow. (2) Rheostatic resistance supplies a stabilizing influence which steadies the arc by supplying a sort of electric cushion. Were the supply voltage not at least 20 volts higher than that required to force the required amperage through the arc, and the ‘cushion’ be provided by breaking down the excess voltage, the arc would tend to waver and be unsteady, except that in transformers and in some other equipments, used to supply current to arcs, this steadying influence is provided. The required excess is about 20 volts. (3) The rheostat provides means against a dead short circuit when the carbons are contacted in striking an arc. Once struck, with the carbons properly separated, the arc will function by reason of its own resistance. But at the instant of contact in striking the arc no such resistance is offered, hence it is highly probable that without the rheostat a fuse would blow.”

J. R. Prater puts it thus: “Rheostatic resistance in series with an arc stabilizes the arc and breaks down the supply voltage to the pressure required to force the desired amperage through the arc. In order to maintain a steady arc, it is necessary to break down (consume) 20 to 25 volts, in addition to the drop across the arc itself. Without this a steady arc cannot be maintained. The power thus used up cannot properly be classed as waste, however, for the reason that it is necessary to proper operation.

“If the arc drop is 55 volts and we allow 20 volts more for stabilization, we must have 75 volts to operate the lamp. The difference between the supply line voltage and 75 volts would then represent wasted voltage. To calculate the daily cost of this break-down, multiply the number of volts drop by the amperage used; then multiply this by the number of hours of operation. Divide this result by 1,000 and multiply by the rate per kilowatt hour.”

(B) B. DeVietti answers, “To decrease their electrical resistance, to permit clamping at any point of their length, and to prevent spindling.”

G. E. Doe says, “Carbons are coated with copper in order to supply a partial low resistance path for the current, which has the effect of (a) operating the carbon at lower temperature, hence with less tendency to spindling; (b) of permitting placing the current supplying connection farther back from the heat of the arc; and (c) of establishing a generally better operating set-up.”

(C) H. Edwards says, “My own experience is that if one study the Bluebook of Projection diligently and absorb the knowledge it contains, he need have little worry about equipments he is unacquainted with because he can handle any projection equipment with very little trouble. However, it is always wholly possible to obtain, without cost, rather complete descriptions of equipment merely by asking the manufacturer of an equipment for them.”

C. L. Loft replies, “One may obtain books, blueprints and drawings descriptive of nearly all makes of equipments merely by asking the manufacturers for them. Then, too, there is the service man, or if you are going into a strange projection room, you may go to work early and study the equipment itself.”

More than 300 answered essentially as follows: “Information concerning equipment is available from manufacturers without cost. The projectionist has only to write requesting it.”

(D) J. Murphy and hundreds of others said, in effect, “A millimeter equals 0.03937 of an inch.”

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

IT'S WHERE YOU FIND IT

. Yes, sir, folks, it has been said—and it can be said again—that showmanship is where you find it and not a matter of location. Some of the boys seem to be of the impression that the old boxoffice sockaroo can only be applied in the fancy spots loaded down with population, traffic jams and other metropolitan virtues(?). They opine there's no plowing of fertile showmanship fields in the lesser places.

Well, we dunno. Now here's a letter from Round Tabler Andrew Cseh, manager of the Corona Theatre, in Groton, N. Y. (pop. 2,004). Andy speaks of different things and as have to do with getting the folks lined up at the ticket window, writes as follows:

"I have found many inexpensive ways of advertising my attractions that might possibly help other small town exhibitors. I have used the telephone system; that is, I have 'phoned all the people in my town and told them about the picture I was playing, and I can assure you this helped one hundred per cent, as I had capacity attendance when I showed the picture.

"I also get around town and tell all the people I know of the picture that is playing. If it is not one suited for their taste, I tell them so, and I have found that they always come to me regularly for this information and always attend the theatre when they know it is a picture I personally recommend."

Drop a real showman out in a desert oasis and it's six, two and even that he'll have the Arab horse-traders paying for a co-op ad page and a flock of camels carrying theatre banners. The guy who has it recognizes no boundaries in putting over his show.

TRAVELING TOGETHER

Most all the studio folks the Awards winners met up with recently in Hollywood seemed to be of the opinion there should be more visiting of out-of-town theatremen, that it would benefit the industry greatly if groups of representative managers were brought to the coast from time to time to become acquainted with production methods and to exchange boxoffice opinions with the makers of pictures.

Well and good, sez we. There's a lot to that, and in turn it also would help heaps if all the studios encouraged the practice of sending forth representatives to visit showmen on their home grounds, to contact newspapers and prominent local names on behalf of the theatres and the product.

It is our understanding that certain of the producers do this quite regularly and, according to the managers visited, much good results. The actual advantages gained by such trips are evidenced in bettered grosses, and this definite proof should be enough to sell the idea to all studios.

Smart men in Hollywood are of the opinion that the old and high wall separating studio from theatre is in the process of coming down. By welcoming the man from the field, by sending out emissaries to observe the why and whereof of exhibition, producers are helping to pave the road that production and exhibition must travel together.

CAN STAND MORE OF IT

From time to time on behalf of capable but unattached Round Tablers, this department beats the drum a bit in letters to various circuit heads. Recently, the following was received in answer from one of the executives' queried:

" . . . It is the policy of our organization to make all promotions from within the ranks. Personally, I do want to thank you for calling this to my attention, but feel sure that you will agree with me that an organization as large as ours must build up goodwill among its manpower in order to exist."

The circuit referred to is one of the smoothest-operating, with an eminently satisfied and highly talented personnel. The above quote from the Big Boss is no doubt one of the reasons for this gratifying state of affairs and leads to the conclusion that the theatre end of the business can stand a whole heluva lot more of it.

CAMBRIDGE FALLS IN LINE

The newly elected mayor of staid Cambridge, Mass., home of fair Harvard, has appointed to the city's Recreation and Park Department Board, Manager Maurice Corkery, of the Central Square Theatre, in that seat of learning. Positions on the Board are honorary, appointees include university professors and representatives of leading civic clubs. The fifteen City Councillors approved the selection of the theatreman.

It is to be noted that in reporting his appointment to these civic honors, Corkery writes: "The Board is anxious to inject a little showmanship color into the plans now being made to celebrate Harvard's 300th anniversary."

19 Loew Houses Tiein On $1,000 Bank Night

One of the biggest efforts of its kind that has been attempted in the Brooklyn area was Loew's Spring Festival Bank Night staged last week, with nineteen theatres throughout the Brooklyn area lined up on the same Bank Night for the same $1,000 prize.

The stunt worked this way—Two weeks prior to the Festival Bank Night, all Loew theatres gave away numbered coupons with place for signature. More than 1,500,000 of these were distributed and dropped into boxes in the various theatre lobbies. On the night of the drawing all coupons were sent to Loew's Metropolitan, where from the stage Jay C. Flippin, acting as emsee, the coupons were drawn from large revolving drum by blindfolded girls picked from audience.

Through cooperation of telephone company a hookup was made so that the number flashed from the Metropolitan stage was received simultaneously on the stages of the other eighteen theatres. It was announced that the winner had to respond in three minutes. The details of the stunt were handled by Eddie Dowden, publicist for the Loew Brooklyn houses.

Hooking to championship dance carnival sponsored by the Detroit Times, Earl Hudson, for date on "Golden Arrow" at the Michigan Theatre, had Bette Davis offer additional prize cup to winning couple. Paper responded with shot of the star and other credits.

Binstock Wedding Clicks in Brooklyn

With the S.R.O. sign out three days ahead and the well-known Judge Sabbatino officiating at the ceremony, Paul Binstock, skipper of the Randforce-Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, New York, recently whammed over a public stage wedding with the aid of his neighborhood business men's association that underwrote all costs.

Stunt was built up six weeks ahead, each of the merchants contributing some useful gift to the bride and groom, the stores carrying window cards reading: "This store is a sponsor of the public wedding of Mr. & Mrs. Grand Street at the Republic Theatre," with date and other credits.

As the magnitude of the campaign rated top attention, Binstock endeavored to have Mayor LaGuardia tie the knot, but the New York City chief was called to California, and in his stead Paul secured the above mentioned jurist to doing the "pronouncing."

Interest mounted through advance trailers, programs, etc., all querying as to who would be the fortunate couple. Binstock kept their identity hidden and had the folks buzzing with smart copy that built up the event. His trailers invited couples contemplating matrimony but halted by lack of finances to apply and kept on inviting these applications until he was ready to announce the boy-'n-girl had been secured. Trailers also spoke of the many gifts to be given through the local association, names of the individual donors and their contributions carried in programs and in lobby, top gift being three rooms of furniture.

Tickets were sold in advance up to capacity, the house going "clean" three days ahead, and Paul reports enough demand to have staged the party again to another full house. Cooperating merchants were also well pleased with the publicity, which leaves a wide opening for similar tieups between Binstock and the stores.

HENDRICKS, HARDWICK VOTED APRIL PLAQUES

Memphis Warnerite Is Winner of Third Silver; Bronze Won by Griffith Circuit Manager

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Hail Bill Hendricks, skipper of the Warner Theatre, Memphis—the first Round Tabler to land three Silver Plaques in the Quigley Awards. With a clear majority of the judges' votes, Hendricks takes down the Silver for April with a rousing campaign on "Colleen."

And while "hails" are in order, cheers are also let forth for Russ Hardwick, of the Lyceum Theatre, Clovis, New Mexico, who wins the April Bronze on "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Hardwick is the first theatreman of his state to be voted plaque honors and also the first representative of the Griffith Circuit to be so rewarded. He did a real bang-up job and no foolin'.

The Memphis Warner manager has now won plaques in each year of the Competitions and has been represented otherwise among the Mentions in various months. Hardwick has also taken down a number of Mentions and climaxes his efforts with his current honors, but not without a keen struggle.

For right on his heels finishes R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, of Warners' Fairmont, Fairmont, West Va., who lands a splendid First also on "Lonesome Pine." In the same classification are Dave Jones, who clicks with "Mr. Deeds," at the Senate, Springfield, Ill.; D. W. Warner, Bison, Shawnee, Okla., on "Exclusive Story," and Ev Steinbuch and Milt Harris, of Loew's State, Cleveland, on "Petticoat Fever."

The majority of these showmen have clicked previously and in addition to his First, Warner also credits the Quigley Awards for enabling him to obtain for the first time, cooperation from his local paper.

Seventeen Honorable Mentions

That the entries for April were of the very highest standard was proven by the difficulty in determining the Honorable Mentions and therefore it was necessary to award these honors to 17 campaigns and to the 21 theatremen concerned. Additionally, many of the entrants made it clear that credit also was to go to members of their staffs and it is so ordered, with a bow to the theatremen for their generosity.

Newcomers as usual divided the Honorable Mentions with showmen who have earned these Certificates previously and it may be noted too that among them was a campaign on a short, "Hit and Run Driver," entered by Manager E. C. Bechtoldt, of the Sanford, Irvington, N. J.

Among the 17 Honorables, six went to entrants new to the Competitions. Canadian houses were again represented, as were subsequent neighborhood theatres who competed successfully with the de luxe and other first runs. Independent theatremen are also to be found in the list of winners.

Together with others submitted to the Quigley Awards and Managers' Round Table, representative campaigns from among those entered in April will be displayed at the second annual "Show of Showmanship" to be held for four days, starting Tuesday, May 19, at Quigley Publications headquarters, 1270 Sixth Ave., and to which all theatremen are invited.

Minneapolis and St. Paul Called Good Picture Towns

Patronage in Twin Cities Found Favorable to Steady Theatre Buildup

by EARLE R. BUELL
Minneapolis Correspondent

Unique in setup are the so-called Twin Cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul. Though the business sections and theatre loops are located but ten miles apart, they are said to be as widely separated in psychological characteristics as Chicago and New York.

How this situation and others obtaining in that area affect theatre business is told in this Twin Cities article which continues the Showman's Travelogue series on the nation's key cities now current in Managers' Round Table.

Next stop: Tampa, Florida.
—A-MIKE VOGEL

Where navigation used to begin on the Mississippi river, when there was navigation enough to amount to anything, the two towns of Minneapolis and St. Paul combine to make one of the largest centers of population in the middle West and what has always been called one of the worst theatre spots in the wide world.

In St. Paul the old vaudeville comics always said Minneapolis was the place where the Swedes all sat on their hands for fear they might applaud and in Minneapolis, the same slapstick artist was wont to remark that in St. Paul the Germans went to sleep over their beer and never knew there was a show in town.

This sort of comment on the Twin Cities has always had its element of exaggeration, but there was a modicum of truth in it, nevertheless. The Scandinavians—and there are scads of them in both towns—have never been a hooraw people and their attachment for anything like two dollars and a half was always such that the usual stripped and phonied road show had a tough time getting out more than a handful of folk.

Million Potential Patrons

But time and the rise of the second generation of the Scandinavians have brought about changes and the chief difficulty in both cities now arises from the fact that they are badly overseated. In Minneapolis alone, where the proud boast of half a million people was some time ago made good, there are something like 100,000 theatre seats and it is probable that there are more than 50,000 in the Saintly twin which has mustered some 300,000 populace.

It is probable that, in the Twin City territory, there are very nearly a million persons who could be persuaded to attend such a house as the gigantic Minnesota in the heart of Minneapolis if the ballyhoo and the attraction were sufficiently high powered, but the imagination of man balks when it tries to figure out any way to get them jarred loose.

In the first place, these two towns, though physically contiguous are nearly as widely separated as Chicago and New York in their psychological characteristics. What appeals to one doesn't appeal to the other except in a very general sense.

The business districts and theatre loops are located just about 10 miles apart. It is probably not more than 30 miles from the farthest point of one town to the farthest point in the other. Practically all of the 200,000 or so families in this immediate vicinity own or have the use of automobiles. Most of them can go anywhere and do anything, but it is an actual fact that only the Minnesota State Fair which is held each year fairly near the borderline of the two towns ever has a consistent draw from both Minnesota and St. Paul at the same time.

A few of the hotels and night spots have occasionally become rendezvous for persons from the other Twin, but this has seldom happened in the case of a theatre and so, to all intents and purposes, these are just two country towns away down the list in population instead of being the eighth or ninth largest city in the country.

Almost since the beginning of the theatre business, shows of all sorts have been moved bodily from one town to the other as though they were located a sleeper jump apart and that sometimes happens even today though for some years now there has been a tendency to duplicate programs in the leading Minnesota Amusements (Publix) and Orpheum houses.

Aside from the Minnesota theatre which seats nearly 4,000 persons in the Minneapolis theatre district, the housing set up of the show business in the two towns is virtually the same as far as the loop is concerned.

The State in Minneapolis matches the Paramount in St. Paul. The Orpheum in Minneapolis matches the Orpheum in St. Paul. The Riviera in St. Paul is about in the same class with the Century in Minneapolis. The Lyric and the Tower can be considered mates. And the programs of these are usually handled accordingly.

THREE-SHEET FRONT. Effective was this "Country Doctor" front done by artist Arden Rootes, Olympic, Utica, N. Y. Background done in white, ribbons in red and lettering in blue.

In both towns there are legitimate theatres that operate every now and then. In both there are some grind houses that charge from 10 to 15 cents in the loop and in both there are very prosperous neighborhood theatres that are drawing from wider and wider territories.

This latter development, however, is more pronounced in Minneapolis than it is in St. Paul. Minneapolis is a scenic city and it has an extensive series of boulevards running around the lakes and along the historic Minnehaha creek. Here and there in the vicinity of these boulevards have sprung up some very excellent and very sizable theatres which do a consistent and sometimes an extraordinary business at about a 25-cent top.

The tendency of Minneapolis people to patronize these houses and the better neighborhood houses in outlying business districts such as Broadway, Lake street and Central and Plymouth avenues has been a thorn in the side of some of the downtown showmen for longer than they would care to be reminded just now.

Drive for Downtown Business

One of the reasons for the recent reopening of the big Minnesota was a desire on the part of the theatre biggies of downtown Minneapolis to attract the former loop clientele back to the loop.

Both Minneapolis and St. Paul have clung consistently to the 40 per cent top for their principal theatres throughout most of the depression. In the old book days 50 cents and an occasional 75 were encountered, but even then it took something of a smash show to fill the houses at these prices. Al Steffes has been holding a 75-cent top a part of the time in the Minneapolis World Theatre, but he has never quite made it in St. Paul.

Two-bits is a natural price for Twin City patrons to pay and that price rules much of the day in all houses.

Long shows have never been specially popular in the two towns. The Orpheums tried three-hour shows for a while and once in a while a small house will run in what amounts to a double-feature, but this evil has never really had a foothold here and doesn't usually pay out.

The chief business of both the Twin Cities has to do with farm products. St. Paul is the larger railroad center and Minneapolis is the chief elevator and milling center. Around South St. Paul which amounts to part of the Saintly community, the livestock and packing business centers.

As for the rest of the business it is confined to light manufactures, some farm machinery making and the like and a great deal of jobbing and general distributing throughout the Northwest.

IN MINNEAPOLIS AND ST. PAUL

The figures on automobile distribution out of Minneapolis would surprise most theatre people and possibly the figures on distribution of motion pictures do every now and then for films go out of here all over the Northwest.

Minneapolis has long been regarded as a city without any slum district and the same can, to a general extent, be said of St. Paul. Out of any home in either of the Twin Cities is likely to come on any evening a whole family well enough dressed and for the most part well enough heeled to go to any theatre in the two cities without being conspicuous.

These are not what would be called dressy towns, but a tuxedo is not necessarily a monkey suit to the more fortunate of the high school boys and the high school girl who doesn't own at least one modest formal would be extremely hard to find. At the University of Minnesota with its considerable colony of fraternity and sorority houses, full evening dress is by no means an epochal event.

While Minneapolis has gone down in history as a Scandinavian town and while it is probably true that there are more Swedes here than there are in Stockholm, this is not by any means exclusively a Swedish or Norwegian city. North side and Northeast sections have generous colonies of Polish and Bohemian, Italian and other nationalities. There is a section predominantly Jewish and another in which the complexion is much like Harlem.

Many Nationalities Represented

There are probably more Irish and Italians in St. Paul than there are in Minneapolis and the Germans run the Swedes and Norwegians a closer second, but the immigrant element of both places is now fairly small, the majority of the population even in the more foreign sections probably being second or third generation.

There is a very small proportion of the very wealthy in both towns. Nearly everybody is doing some sort of work and it is probably not far from correct to say that white collar workers form nearly half the public and that the other workers are likely to bob up in white collars at the slightest provocation.

Rather unusual was the fact that, when CWA, PWA and WPA projects began taking over the employment of those in financial difficulties due to the depression there was a heavy call for work clothes suitable to outdoor activities largely because those whose jobs had slid out from under them were from the white collar classes.

Salary figures have been so jumbled for the past few years that it is virtually impossible to get a line on what the averages are, but plenty of people on relief at $10, $15 and $20 a week are still going to the picture shows and the number of families in which more than one person is accustomed to bring in a paycheck is probably as high as anywhere in the world, for the Scandinavians are notably thrifty and industrious people, and, as a result of the fact that Swedish carpenter contractors built most of the homes and small business places here and have now got a good many of them back on their hands due to foreclosures and lapses of contracts for deed, if this is not a Scandinavian town it is nevertheless owned by the Scandinavians.

The transportation situation is a peculiar one. There is probably no better street car service anywhere and the fare when as many as six tokens are purchased is seven and a half cents a ride with a universal transfer system. There are some special bus lines furnishing a sort of de luxe transportation and there are other lines that are merely feeders for the car lines.

Auto Ownership High

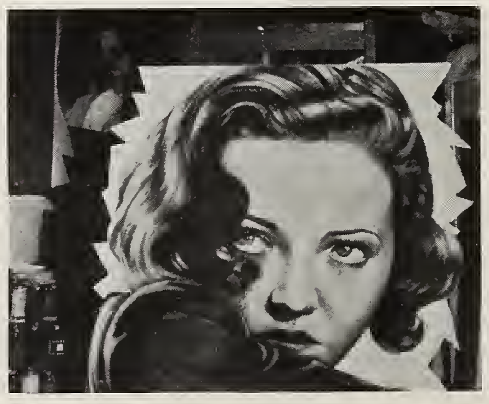
But the street car system is not by any means as prosperous as might be expected for the sole reason that the percentage of automobiles owned in the Twin Cities is very remarkable. In case of necessity, it is safe to say that every man, woman and child in Minneapolis and St. Paul could climb into the existing automobiles and light trucks and move out of the state tomorrow with practically no one sitting in any one else's lap.

But the catch in this is that practically all the cars are owner driven. Chauffeurs are very few and far between. Two-car families are by no means uncommon and when Twin City people decide to go to the theatre in any considerable number or anywhere else, both traffic and parking problems bob up very rapidly.

St. Paul streets are narrow, but the percentage of cars there is probably smaller. Minneapolis streets are wide, but there are more cars and the problems of traffic congestion are probably about the same in both places. Parking lots, however, are available and there are few restrictions on night parking along the curbs and a considerable theatre crowd can be accommodated at night.

Nevertheless, it is this parking problem that has driven a good many of the customers into the outskirts and to the neighborhood and boulevard houses.

Show of Showmanship Coming



AIRBRUSH HEAD. C. J. Rhodes, artist, Palace, Peoria, Ill., created this head of Sylvia Sidney for "Mary Burns, Fugitive". Head is constructed for further use on other Sidney pictures.

There is considerable chaining up of theatres in Minneapolis and the same is true to some extent in St. Paul. Not only the downtown loops are controlled by big chains, chiefly the Minnesota Amusement Company, but they also own some of the larger and better neighborhood houses and small chains operate both in the loop and in the neighborhoods and boulevard fields.

House managers seem to have all the latitude that is necessary and while they are not unusually active in lunch clubs and outside activities, they are found in a good many of the groups with which the two towns abound.

Practically all the downtown theatres are clean and well kept, even to the second, third and fourth run houses. Only a few of the grind houses and those in the poorer parts of town can be called unclean or ill-ventilated. The Minnesota theatre would not be out of place either as a physical equipment or upkeep and handling anywhere in New York.

No High Pressure Ballyhoo

As for advertising and general publicity, it can probably be said that this is the chief weakness of the theatre business in the Twin Cities. A good splash for the opening and then a pinching down to an inch or two for the remaining days of the week is the customary procedure. Loop houses are practically always represented in small space in the three Minneapolis dailies and in the two in St. Paul. Now and then there is a modest effort at ballyhoo and once in a while a successful newspaper tieup on a contest or something of the sort.

Theatrical news space is allotted according to the amount of advertising carried, as a usual thing, and is in reality paid for as the amusement rate which is much higher than the ordinary display rate is paid with the understanding that a certain amount of news matter will be run.

This matter is confined largely to announcements of coming programs and to theatre reviews. Very little house copy appears anywhere in the newspapers and the work of the theatre publicity man is virtually cut and dried.

All the newspapers in the Twin Cities carry a generous amount of syndicated column material on the subject of motion pictures and the doings of picture people in Hollywood and thereabout.

Merle Potter on the Journal, Harry Remington (John Alden) of the Tribune and John Sherman of the Star are ace picture raters in Minneapolis and in St. Paul. James Gray has had the call for some time on the Pioneer Press-Dispatch.

A recent feature has been the development of a theatre page under the editorship of Bob Scott in what is called the Shopping News in Minneapolis and here a very generous policy of publicity for theatres and films is combined with a very hard-boiled critical attitude. Advertising in this paper,

Benefit Food Show Staged by McCuan

A special canned goods matinee for kids was held by L. W. McCuan, Uptown Theatre, Dresden, Tenn., every child under 16 was admitted free, entire proceeds going to the city's charity fund. Heralds plugging the event were distributed and matinee plugged in programs, etc.

Another stunt pulled by this showman was a "Take a Chance Show" playing for one day. McCuan ran teaser ads in papers week ahead, no announcements were made as to titles of pictures or what to expect. Ads and distributed heralds were addressed "to gamblers" and invited the curious to take a chance and see the swell show that was offered for their entertainment at the Uptown for one day.

Photographs were available at all metropolitan telegraph offices and the Postal Amusement Guide with reported weekly circulation of 75,000 copies also carried notice of free offer.

The Strand set up a special wall display frame with the original statuette awarded Miss Davis, the first time the public has been able to view it.

Foreign Theatre Managers Aided By Executives of Branch Offices Exhibit Interesting Showmanship

by MICHAEL HOFFAY

Foreign Publicity Manager, RKO Export Corp.

RKO Radio Pictures' representatives in all parts of the world, grasping the American idea of colorful showmanship, are getting behind the company's big pictures this year with exceptionally high-powered exploitation and winning unusual success.

Scandinavia, under the general managership of Carl-Gerhard Wallman, has been the scene of many smart campaigns on RKO Radio product this season. One of the most notable reported was that for the Stockholm run of "Top Hat" at the China Theatre, arranged by Wilhelm Sorenson and Eugene Scharin under Wallman's supervision.

A small item of the striking lobby display at the China was a series of small stiff-shirt cut-outs (see photo) arranged to form the title of the picture. Above these were two of the giant cutouts of the stars which have been used all over the world with conspicuous success.

Crasto Exploits in Calcutta

Another stirring "Top Hat" publicity and exploitation drive was staged in Calcutta, India, by J. Remi Crasto, publicity and exploitation manager in India, who won many honorable mentions in the Quigley Awards. During the first run of the Astaire-Rogers smash at the Elphinstone Theatre, Calcutta, Crasto arranged a thrilling electrical display across the main street, the Chowringee. Overcoming municipal objections to the stunt, Crasto ran the picture's title in electrical letters seven feet high across the thoroughfare.

Constructive activity always goes on in Warsaw, Poland. Mr. Kornwasser, manager of the Atlantic Cinema, and A. Herman, publicity head of RKO's Polish branch, startled the Polish capital with their work on "The Last Days of Pompeii." A brilliantly decorated and lighted street car went throughout the city during the engagement—a stunt new to that part of the world, and one which aroused much interest.

Giant Cutouts Interest Havana

Havana had a great time with "Top Hat." Edelbertal Carrera, manager of the Auditorium Theatre, staged a whirlwind selling drive, using giant standees of the stars on the theatre steps, over which hung a huge top hat cutout, with a strip featuring the name of the film's dance hit, "The Piccolino." Pedro Saenz, general manager of Cia. Cubana de Peliculas, RKO's Cuban distributor, and Bert Reisman, home office representative, helped smash over the picture to big returns.

Oslo, Norway, also saw "Top Hat" sold by snappy American methods. For the film's first run at the Saga Theatre a large top hat cutout with Astaire and Rogers doing a dance step was erected on the marquee (see photo). The display was made outstanding in Oslo's film history by the fact that it was motor-driven and brightly lighted.

An actual scene from "The Last Days of Pompeii" was the feature of an outstanding lobby display during the spectacle film's first run at the Lyceum Theatre in Sydney, Australia (see photo). The entire wall space of the lobby was covered with board simulating stone, and all the house employees were dressed in Pompeiian style. The stunt was designed by Ben Bernard, exploitation manager of RKO's Australian office under the supervision of General Manager Ralph Doyle.

Barcelona, Spain, saw Roman chariots driven through the streets, day and night, before and after the opening of "The Last Days of Pompeii" at the Astoria Theatre. This was part of the campaign devised by Robert Trillo and J. Gallego Prats, general manager and exploitation manager of Radio Films, S.A.E. A 150-foot painted display on a fence in a Barcelona park was also arranged by Trillo.

"Show of Showmanship Coming."

Contest Winners Speak From Stage for Edwards

An added twist was given the essay contest stunt by J. D. Edwards, Edwards Theatre, Myerstown, Pa., for "Tale of Two Cities" when Don offered two cash prizes to students submitting best essay on that picture. Stories ran in the high school papers and winners were invited on the stage, introduced to audience and asked to say a few words over the p. a. system, after which they were presented with the cash.

Don reports the stunt as working so favorably with the students and patrons getting a kick out of the mike stunt that he plans to repeat this at a later date.

THEY SCREEN EVERY "SHORT"

Interstate Theatres Develops Special Department to Evaluate Short Subjects for 100 Houses

by FRED McFADDEN

Majestic Theatre, Dallas, Texas

April marks the second anniversary of an idea put into action two years ago by R. J. O'Donnell, general manager of Interstate Theatres, Inc. The idea not only completely revolutionized the actual booking of short subjects but had a telling effect on feature bookings in the Southwest, where more than 100 theatres come under the supervision of the Interstate chief. In introducing this new idea, a plan has been worked out whereby short subjects are no longer the step-children of the business, but are put to a highly intelligent use with definite effect at the box office.

Mr. O'Donnell had long deplored the seeming necessity to book short subjects more or less blindly. To be sure, most alert managers build their programs as best they can without being able to screen each one before its play date. But Mr. O'Donnell wanted a special department where each short subject could be screened, checked, catalogued and placed where it would have the most value to a program for balance and variety.

Selects Besa Short

He selected Besa Short, a young woman who had been engaged in advertising and other various posts of actual theatre operation for more than ten years. He explained his idea, gave her a private screening room, an operator and a secretary and the new department of program building and short subject booking was created. Mrs. Short now has three booker-secretaries and builds each program for all Interstate Circuit's theatres. More than 350 changes of programs, first, second and third run, are made weekly throughout the circuit and each of these is personally built by Mrs. Short with the assistance of Mrs. Jon Dickinson, Ronald Perkins and Ray Jones, the members of her staff.

As each new short reel arives in Dallas at the various film exchanges, they are sent to Mrs. Short's screening room, where she previews them. Each day after four or five hours of screening, which includes looking at at least two features, a brief review of each day's screening is written by the program builder. This review, detailing type, cast and running time of the subject, goes into a bulletin at the end of each week that is sent to all managers, who keep them on file and use the information for advance advertising when the booking register shows one of them booked. Managers also send a weekly short subject report which gives detailed reaction of each short subject played. This direct information from audiences all over has proved very valuable.

Shorts Complement Features

Immediately features are set in by the feature bookers, five sets of books are exchanged with the short booking department for program building. Long heavy and dramatic features are naturally surrounded with color, music and a gay cartoon, while travel and the more serious short subjects accompany the comedy feature pictures. Sophisticated shorts are placed with features of the more sophisticated nature and an attempt is always made to keep the short that has definite child appeal out of the program where the feature does not have a general family classification.

The running time of shows has been affected by this method of booking programs in that the very long features takes nothing except a cartoon in many cases and seldom more than a single reel and a cartoon. Short features are likewise built up.

"Short subjects have improved more importantly and more rapidly in the last two years than any other branch of film product," Mrs. Short points out. "There is a definite appreciation from public and press alike for them. We know that when they are carefully booked and sold, they mean swell entertainment and money at the box office. Not a little psychology is used in Mr. O'Donnell's plan because we all know that a front show can put a patron in a good or bad humor . . . if he has to sit through a lot of dull shorts, he isn't in the mood for the feature, but if the shorts are entertaining, he will doubtless leave the theatre satisfied even if the feature is disappointing."

Anniversary Recognized

Color cartoons, band acts, novelty reels, color travel subjects and the two-reel musicals are the most popular short reels with the two-reel slapstick very much in decline with the exception of several established name comedies. The day of splicing together some cutting-room floor film with a few dirty gags is gone. There is an appreciation and a demand for the short that has story, talent, production and direction and this is precisely what the major companies are releasing more of each day.

The second birthday celebration has received recognition and congratulations throughout the industry with special recognition from the leading short subjects producers, bookers and chief distribution heads.

Twin Cities Called Good Show Towns

which is published weekly, takes the same rate as any other display and its circulation of 123,500 in Minneapolis alone makes it an effective medium.

As for opposition, it may be generally said that motion pictures have a monopoly on the entertainment business in Minneapolis. Legitimate theatre business is negligible. The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra with its established clientele of music lovers is heard usually in two concerts a week through the season and is not counted as a heavy pull against picture business.

An occasional circus, the Minnesota state fair, and one or two other whooptedoos may cut in from time to time, but not enough to worry about. The Minneapolis municipal auditorium and the St. Paul municipal auditorium both do some business occasionally with automobile shows, flower shows, conventions and expositions, but even this causes theatre business few headaches.

Local Beaches Opposition

Where the real opposition comes in is at the local bathing beaches and in the various week-end resorts that surround the Twin Cities. Minneapolis bathing beaches probably do more business than those of any other city of its size in the world. St. Paul, which is not particularly noted as a city of lakes, has several beaches that draw tremendous crowds and one or two of the Minneapolis beaches can be reached by St. Paul people.

The great number of automobiles in both towns means that good weather is occasionally a business hazard to theatre men, for when the warm days of Spring arrive or the colorful foliage of Autumn calls, whole theatresful of people are as likely as not to roll out the main highways to Lake Minnetonka or the thousand and one other lakes and resorts in the vicinity that stretch into the land of Ten Thousand Lakes in northern Minnesota.

Theatre cooling has become a virtual necessity for the Twin Cities, for only by providing a comfortable house in the summer can the theatre man hope to hold his clientele with the lakes and bathing beaches calling as they do in hot weather.

In general, nowadays, both Minneapolis and St. Paul can be called good theatre towns as far as motion pictures are concerned. Road shows still take long chances and the legitimate stage has virtually passed out of the picture. Stage shows at picture houses will get the business if big attractions are offered, but most of the houses find difficulty in making them pay as a regular policy.

The character of patronage in the Twin Cities is such that a steady build-up of business is better than a general hooraw over any one show, but it is a fact that a big radio team or some other star attraction can be sold if handled right and there is plenty of seating space to take care of the business.

But probably the most illuminating happening in the theatre business in either city is the way the World theatres can do business week after week with the same film if they happen to get hold of one that has universal appeal and something in the nature of a unique musical or psychological draw.

MORE PASKOW DOUBLE-BILL ADS

On page 97, issue April 25, was published a full page of combination ads created by Bob Paskow, Warner Theatres, N. J., zone ad head. Displays on this page were also created by Bob, sizes indicated under each. Paskow has made these available for the small neighborhood houses and others similarly situated that cannot afford to change their mats too often. These ads are welcomed warmly by men in his division.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

manages the Ellanay Theatre in El Paso, Tex., and started in this business in 1926 as clerk in the Paramount advertising department in Georgia, one year there and then over to the warehouse in Atlanta. Later Ray went to New Orleans as manager of the accessory department and purchasing agent for Publix. At these jobs Holloway remained for some time until he asked to be transferred to a theatre so we next find him at the Palace in El Paso, where he remained until October last year.

manages the Audian Theatre in Pullman, Washington, and since joining up we haven't heard from him. You're another member that will have to be taken to task, Don, and remember we don't consider you a really full-fledged member until you've contributed.

managing the Ritz in Valdosta, Ga., started as doorman, usher, bill poster, etc., in 1912 at the Bonita Theatre in Columbus, Ga. In 1922 Hugh entered the boxing business as matchmaker at the Madison Square Garden, and after a flyer at that we find him returning to his first love, showbusiness, to manage houses for his brother Guy.

manages the Casino Theatre in Baltimore, Md., starting as house manager at the Rivoli there, and was then promoted to the Embassy. From that post Art was transferred to the Casino, all of these houses being owned by the Fields Brothers Enterprises.

manages Loew's Valencia in Jamaica and is another member too well known to all to require this introduction. Harry won a plaque last year that was presented up at West Point. This member has been around, having managed the Empire in London, the Fox, Washington; Albee in Providence, to say nothing of houses in Jersey, Brooklyn, Kalamazoo and Indiana.

is the assistant of the RKO Capitol, Winnipeg, Canada, and comes well recommended by his superior, Jack Purvis, who says Les is absolutely worthy of membership in the Club. Pugsley says he has been at the Capitol since 1929.

general manager of the Rialto Theatre in Ft. Wayne, Ind., has had charge of the Rialto and Broadway Theatres there and is a director in the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana. We hear from you too infrequently, George, and here's hoping this little notice will serve as a reminder to send stuff along to us.

in Warren, Ohio, manages the Harris-Warren and is another member that's no stranger to our pages. Les started with Rowland and Clark, putting on novelties such as "a barrel of fun" and then took charge of the Rowland and Colonial Theatres in Wilkinsburg, Pa. There for two years, Les went to Pittsburgh to assume managership of the Schenley and from there to the Vita Temple at Toledo. A few more moves to theatres in Pennsylvania and now for the past three years he's been at the Harris.

is managing the Fox Aztec in San Diego, Cal., having worked at the Dome in Ocean Park, the California in Venice, Cal., and the Westwood in Westwood, Cal. Wayne, too, has contributed accounts of his activities and since we have a few members from whom we hear in San Diego, this city should be well represented with Wayne helping out.

is in San Antonio, Texas, managing the Empire Theatre. John has only worked for the Interstate Circuit as manager of the Majestic and Aztec, there. John has taken care of houses for Interstate in Denison, Harlington and Abilene and has been active in our pages, so we'll just take this opportunity to welcome him formally.

NORMAN SCHWARTZ

is Floore's assistant at the Empire in San Antonio, Tex., having started in as usher, doorman at the RKO Majestic there, thence to the Empire, where he has remained, having been promoted to his present position. Between the two of you, Norman, the Empire ought to be mentioned fairly often in our section.

is up in Wallaceburg, Ontario, Canada, managing the Capitol Theatre, and when he joined he said they don't step out very often on pictures, but when they do, he promises he'll send stuff in. Well, we're waiting patiently, Harvey, and you're not going to allow your Canadian brother to beat you to it, are you? How about a little lively competition from up your way?

is down in Rodessa, La., managing the Strand Theatre. Herb was formerly with the Continental Motion Picture Company of Dallas before assuming his present job with the recently completed Strand in the heart of Louisiana oil fields. Mullins says business is great and prospects better, but suppose you write us and let us know what you are doing to get your share of it.

"Warners again step out in front with a gangster story that leaves all predecessors so far behind that they'll never be missed! Instead of dealing with the old stereotyped pre-repeal rackets, Martin Mooney, known for his expose on the present-day rackets, has brought each and everyone into play so vividly that the screen translation leaves nothing to the imagination! Edward G. Robinson tops all previous gangster film performances!"

VARIETY DAILY

Something new in suspense-laden, melodramatic, racketeer-gangster-cop entertainment! Different, vivid and punchy, it holds much to engage attention! The show is narrated with vigorous, convincing realism! Worthy of a spot on any program, the picture is gripping audience entertainment that places in the hands of exhibitors countless novel exploitation leads with which to sell it to far above average business!

Showmen's Trade Review sizes up 20th Century-Fox

This company has definitely set themselves as one of the best picture-makers in the business and if advance rumors become facts, they will top this grand season during the 1936-37 year. If you can make a deal with them now for next season, go to it, you won't be going wrong. Past performances during the current season plus plans for the coming season make them a "must" for 1936-37.

A LOT OF SHOWMEN HAVE ALREADY DOPED THIS OUT!

. . . and that's why . . .

to date, more circuit deals, more big towns, more contracts have been closed for 20th Century-Fox product than at this time last year . . . and that was an all-time company record. Step lively and get set!

TELEVISION FACT & FANCY

WHEN the sound picture came along the picture business was skeptical, but now that television is around the corner, has been around several corners for several years, we have "instead of disbelief . . excessive credulity," observes a report of the Scientific Committee of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

This committee, the report from which is presented in Motion Picture Herald's news pages of this issue, headed by the most scientific Mr. Carl Dreher, of RKO studios, and formerly with RCA Photophone in the days of sound's beginnings, is exceedingly unexcited about the prospects of a television picture that can by any stretch of fancy be considered competitive with the picture that film puts on the theatre screen.

Present indications seem to be that a few homes in a few metropolitan areas may, by 1937, see a picture about twice the size of a postcard. Meanwhile, Mr. Dreher and his able associates guarantee that the industry will never be taken by surprise by television as it was by sound

THIS the while reminds us of a spectacular television hoax that has been going the rounds of upper strata officialdom these several months. The story is that genuine, perfect, or nearly perfect, television, life size in natural colors, has been achieved and demonstrated, all in deepest secrecy, between a theatre specially equipped for broadcasting in London and another for reception in New York. And, so the story has gone, everything has been tied up by reason of intricate foreign powers, influences, propaganda plans, etc., etc.

The tale got its best currency, and probably its origin, through an erstwhile radio industry attache of some passing standing who made it a subject of serious report to his chief, relating in vast detail what he said he had seen at a demonstration. From there on the story got bigger and better circulation. But when the bureau of investigation of the corporation most concerned got through looking into the matter it was found that there was no theatre, no television, no color, no process, nothing in fact but the strange Munchausen fancies of a man who wanted to make himself mysterious and important. His next step was out—and into that other land of dreams, stereoscopic pictures without a viewing device—another fancy which has been meeting that same "excessive credulity."

It would appear that there is much more tele than vision.

"HAPPY HOUR" PLOT

THE National Congress of Parents and Teachers, worthy, aggressive and powerful, seems to be having quite a succession of problems with some of its advisors, employees and friends from time to time—including notably some of the experts who seek to tell the Congress all about the motion picture.

In the issue of May 9th, Motion Picture Herald presented an account of the entirely wholesome, even if enterprising, project of Columbia Pictures Corporation known as the "Happy Hour" program of approved short pictures suitable for children's shows.

Now the news wires from Milwaukee relate that Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman, national legislative chairman, still hot on the furtherance of a program of interference with the industry, declared:

"The motion picture people want your endorsement of the 'Happy Hour' programs for children. Don't be fooled. It's merely the latest device to make you forget the Neely-Pettengill block booking bill, to divert your attention from writing letters to congressmen urging its passage."

This is a practically perfect demonstration of that state of bias long described as "Damned if you do, and damned if you don't."

We are saddened by the realization that even if the motion picture industry were suddenly made perfect by her own specifications, Mrs. Bannerman probably would not like it.

Meanwhile we might as well expose the "Happy Hour" idea right now. It is really a scheme for merchandising some motion pictures, selected pictures for a selected market. That's just how wicked it is.

"WARM FODDER"

"IF a public can like Dickens or a Walter Scott through the years, it can appreciate and give good reception to pictures that are more than warm fodder for transient emotions," pompously comments the Hartford Courant.

If the public of the millions ever hears about either Dickens or Scott it will be because of the screen. Further, if either one of them ever wrote anything more important than "warm fodder for transient emotions," it is yet to be revealed. Their works have acquired, for such persons as the Hartford editorial writer, a certain amber tinge of classic status merely because those authors of nineteenth century best sellers have been dead quite a long time.

The movies-for-the-millions has to be a "warm fodder" business, and that does not mean smut either.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

'Ninth Major'

National managers of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors have undertaken an arrangement to build a new producing and distributing company addressed at service of the independent theatres.

The new organization is to rise from the structure of the present Chesterfield-Invincible interests, guaranteeing an immediate market of between 3,500 and 4,000 independent theatres for 18 features decided upon for the new season and 52 features eventually to be produced annually. Further details appear on page 13.

Allied Keynote

Independents the country over, regardless of their affiliations, are invited to attend the annual convention of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, in Cleveland June 3rd to 5th, where the keynote will be "film buying" in its relation to the promises of distributors for the new season and their actual deliveries this season. Allied's complete convention program is outlined on page 37.

Chance Games

Despite the continued antagonistic attitudes of some cities and states against the chance game form of stimulation for theatre box offices, the practice continues to spread. This week brings an entirely new scheme to increase theatre grosses. This new idea, along with developments in Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, Ohio and Texas, are discussed in this issue. The story is on page 63.

Socialist Control

Nationalization of the motion picture business in France is expected to be undertaken by the government when the new Socialist-controlled Chamber of Deputies goes into action in June. Paul Faure, general secretary of the Socialist Party, has told the press that a state institution of the cinema is contemplated. The trade press is urging film interests to present a united front against any such movement.

Another development affecting American distributors in France is the promulgation of a decree tightening the censorship rules. General confusion followed, with the French customs refusing to clear any pictures for export until proper visas had been issued by the Board of Control. American representatives protested that the intent of the law was to restrict exportation of French product whereas its language took in all pictures to be exported from France. A number of companies have made Paris the clearing house for product to several European countries.

These and other matters current in the French center are treated by Pierre Autre, Herald correspondent in Paris, on page 67.

For Better Films

With a program directed at the hundreds of thousands in the New York area who are potential patrons of good films, the Metropolitan Motion Picture Council, newly formed, will seek to stimulate the production of better films through their support at the box-office. Promotion of a discriminating film consciousness in the younger generation is a particular aim. The council's program of procedure is discussed on page 66.

Showmanship

Opening Tuesday and continuing through Friday, the second annual Show of Showmanship sponsored by Quigley Publications and produced by the Managers' Round Table department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD attracted hundreds of exhibitors, managers, circuit and film company executives to the headquarters of the publishing company in Rockefeller Center, New York. Exploitation campaigns submitted by showmen of this and other countries were displayed for the inspection of interested visitors. Lobby displays, animated, even articulate ballyhoo devices, including a live and friendly monkey, held attention while bagpipes split the air with shrill music and a half-sized Johnny Weissmuller shrieked its Tarzan call in hoarse dispute for mastery of the situation.

Attendance at midpoint in the production had surpassed that of the initial presentation, last year, with every sector and strata of the industry enthusiastically represented. A pictorial account of the opening day's activities begins on page 15.

Acceptable

Of the 10-point trade practice program which the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America seeks to have the major distributors accept, they have rejected flatly only the abolition of the score charge, it was reported as the committee, headed by Ed Kuykendall, was winding up its conferences at the companies' home offices.

Generally, the distributors were favorable to most of the proposed trade reforms, but with reservations, according to report. Though discussions in the last two weeks have revolved around generalities.

Next week the committee sets out to nail the distributors down to specific proposals, and a 10 per cent cancellation clause and conciliation boards are said to be virtually "set." For particulars, see page 18.

Accessories

Aiming at abatement of long prevalent practices attending exhibitor resale of advertising accessories, Paramount last week announced as effective June 1st a new policy under which posters and other exploitation materials will be available to theatre men at fixed prices against which credit allowances will be made on accessories returned within five days after completion of use. Opposition was voiced immediately by Simon Libros, president of the National Poster Service Association, following meeting of a special committee convened to consider steps to be taken. Other major film companies struck a watchful waiting attitude. Details are on page 14.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Copyright

While the House Patents Committee is engaged in digesting 700,000 words of testimony compiled during 27 days of public hearings on the subject of copyrights, preparatory to reporting on the Duffy bill and other measures proposed to alter in various ways existing legal machinery for protection of property rights and treatment of transgressions thereof, mere business men of the motion picture industry, exhibitors long accustomed to routine leasing and exhibition of product without serious thought or definite knowledge of intricate implications involved in their transactions, have turned interested eye and ear to conflicting claims uttered on both sides of the several questions presented discussed and, sometimes, argued heatedly.

So that complete comprehension of basic issues and practical applications of common-sense procedure may be available to all interested parties, Edward A. Sargoy has written for Motion Picture Herald a thorough presentation of the subject and its ramifications, "The Case of the Copyright Law and the Motion Picture." It is published on page 12 of this issue.

At Ease

Motion pictures need have no fear of any competitive possibilities in television, reports the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in Hollywood. Concluding a year's study of the subject the Council reports, "There is no danger that television will burst unexpectedly on an unprepared motion picture industry, either psychologically or technically."

At the same time the Federal Communications Commission, at Washington, expressed the opinion that a dearth of suitable program material and the excessive costs of producing feature programs threaten television even before its commercial introduction.

Both reports, and additional television developments from all over the world, are detailed commencing on page 56.

Profits

"Improving earnings of Twentieth Century-Fox will reflect, to extent of dividends, in profits of Chase National Bank for 1936," according to Dow, Jones' Wall Street Journal, which continues, "According to latest figures available, Chase owns 774,753 shares of Twentieth Century-Fox preferred and 387,376 common shares.

"A quarterly dividend of 37½ cents per share was declared on the preferred stock, payable March 31st last, bringing to Chase $290,532 or 3.9 cents a share on its own common stock. This dividend, naturally, was not included in the condition statement as of March 4th which showed indicated earnings for Chase of 30 cents a common share in the first nine weeks of this year."

Political Bids

The battle is on for the motion picture industry's support, even in advance of the national conventions of the two large political parties.

Eddie Dowling, quondam stage producer and now of the radio, and James E. Sauter of New York on Monday were appointed chairman and vice-chairman, respectively, of the stage and screen division of the Democratic national committee.

Mr. Dowling served in a similar capacity in 1932. Friendly with President Roosevelt, when the WPA federal theatre was established he was placed at the head of the division of musical comedy, vaudeville and circuses. This division recently was disbanded, to be replaced by another, and Mr. Dowling resigned.

The Republican national committee has not announced its division heads.

Indicted

New York's Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, continued in the limelight this week when Harry Sherman, a former president, was indicted for first degree grand larceny in connection with the disappearance of $150,961.75 of the union's funds. See page 32.

Reviving

Plans for a third national exhibitor organization, dormant for some time, are being revived by independent theatre operators in the New York area, according to Motion Picture Daily. Charles L. O'Reilly is credited with inception of the plan and expected to take active part in its development.

"Under the proposed setup," the story says, "units will be formed in each state with delegates to a national board to conform to Congressional districts. The affiliated units will be limited only to independents. A prominent exhibitor in the local New York area with political affiliations is understood being primed for the presidency."

Tariffs Stand

A guarantee against increase in the present rate of duty on American films is given by Finland in the reciprocal trade agreement with that country announced this week by the State Department in Washington.

In making public details of the agreement, the department explained that most American films are supplied to Finland through exchanges operated in Europe by American companies and that statistics consequently do not show the relative importance of our films in that market.

"However," the department said, "it is estimated that over 75 per cent of the films imported into Finland in 1935 were of American make. Binding of the duty of 24 cents per pound carried with it also safeguards against the imposition of quantitative import restrictions during the life of the agreement."

Drops "Quota" Films

Twentieth Century-Fox is going to drop production of "quota" pictures and instead intends to draw ten outstanding pictures from British producers to take care of the greater part of the company's quota requirements and with the hope that at least five of them will be of a caliber for distribution in America. Joseph M. Schenck made this announcement in London, where it was read at a reception at Claridge's to Sidney R. Kent and himself.

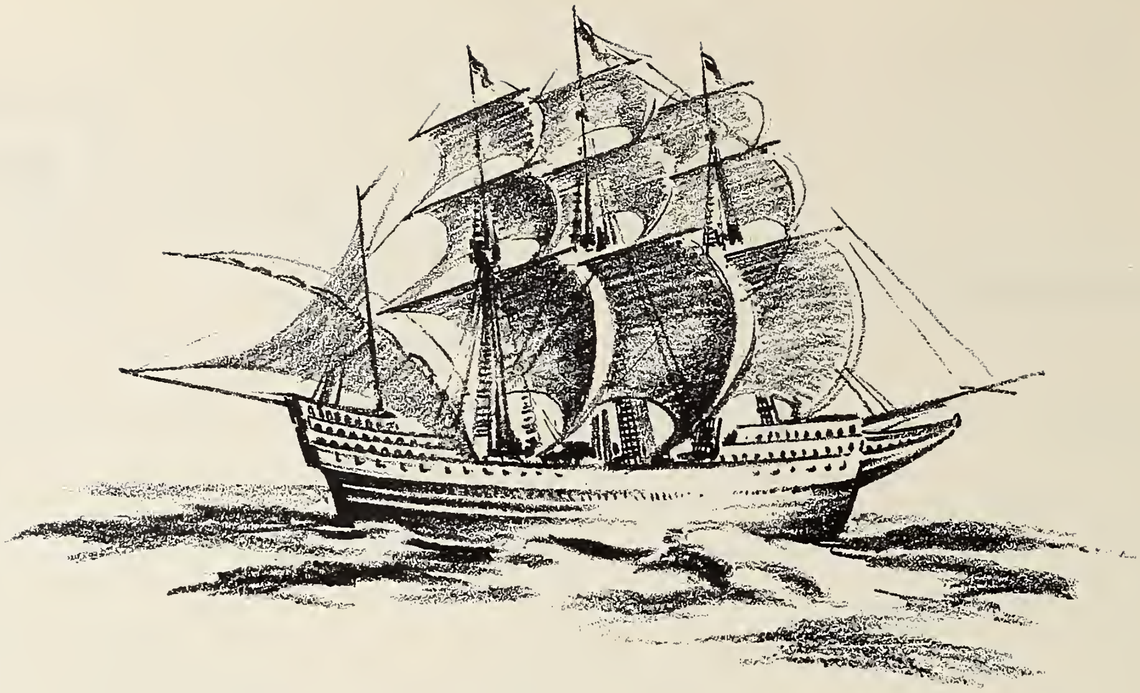
Mr. Schenck suggested that British producers who hope to reach the American public with their product should know their buyers, adding that "they make a big mistake in not going to America to study the public and its needs."

These and other developments in the British field are reported by Bruce Allan of the Herald's London office, on page 80.

On Sidetrack

Delay interpreted as equivalent to the sidetracking of block booking legislation for the present session of Congress was ascribed last week to wrangling among members of the Pettengill subcommittee resulting in failure to complete preparation of a bill to report to the whole committee on interstate and foreign commerce.

Meanwhile the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts, an Allied affiliate, met in special session at New Haven and authorized Abram F. Myers and Nathan Yamins to represent the unit in efforts to secure passage of the bill.



Standing on the headlands of anticipation the world's showmen are again for the twenty-first season of 1936-37 scanning the horizon of the new product pages of Motion Picture Herald for the argosies of announcement from the producers and distributors.

As the galleons of old sailed with their burthens of pearls and silks and spice, "ivory, apes and peacocks," so do each year the pages of Motion Picture Herald come bearing the inventories of that filmy dream stuff of which box office gold is made. This is the time of the buying, the time when the wares of tomorrow are to be held to the light in the market place, weighed, estimated.

Each year, as surely, seasonally as the coming of the May-wine, as the blossom-time, the fifteen thousand six hundred and seventy-two showmen readers of these pages turn here by their annual custom and habit to see what the show year ahead holds in prospect.*

EVERY great picture, and substantially every picture that ever played, has been first discovered in these pages by the showmen of the world. This is where they look for the product, this is where they find it. These are their pages. Their attention has made them so.

The Case of the Copyright Law and the Motion Picture

Films Have a $200,000,000 Annual Stake Involved in Congressional Changes

by EDWARD A. SARGOY

The motion picture is a copyrighted document representing a property that is worth $200,000,000 every year in its new production-negative valuation alone. Its status as a copyright stands close to undergoing drastic changes. Yet most of the producers, distributors and exhibitors who are directly or indirectly involved in copyright relations are practically unaware of all of the facts of the case of the copyright and the motion picture, legally and otherwise.

There rests today in Washington a Congressional proposal, fully formulated and standing ready to change the copyright structure in such a manner that the industry as a whole would be affected more than any other medium of expression and this because it has so much more at stake.

The House Patents Committee is now digesting over 700,000 words of testimony on 1,291 closely printed pages compiled during 27 days of public hearings in February, March and April of this year. This is in addition to some thousand-odd printed pages of public hearings in the spring of 1932 on the Sirovich copyright bills.

The general public, within and outside of the film business, including those actually engaged in dealing with copyrights, as well as most lawyers and most Congressmen, shy away from the copyright problem. The feeling seems to be prevalent that it involves some mysterious legerdemain fathomable only by the small cult of lawyers specializing in this field. The fact is quite the contrary. Copyright involves no legal mumbo-jumbo. All that is needed is a realistic common sense appreciation of how legal sanctions function in our present economic society to insure respect rather than anarchy toward private property.

The Minimum Damage Controversy

The storm center of the recent copyright hearings has been the proposed Duffy bill elimination of the minimum statutory damages of $250. This bill has already passed the Senate. Commercial users of copyright have apparently lined up for it against the copyright owners. But these damages are payable only by those caught trespassing upon the private domain of the copyright owner without his permission. Viewed in its true perspective, do the interests of copyright owner and copyright user materially conflict?

With the single possible exception of the business of marketing the commercial performing rights of music, an industry of relatively insignificant money volume in our national economy of copyright, there is and should be no conflict between owner and user concerning copyright legislation.

Why the lack of harmony? Because sponsors of the Duffy bill fallaciously assume that the unique problems of marketing musical performing rights are typical, rather than the exception, for other more important types of copyright ownership and use. An Interdepartmental Committee from the Departments of State, Commerce and the Copyright Office, drafted and sponsored the bill ostensibly to enable adherence to the International Copyright Union. Senator Duffy added a domestic tail to the international kite by radically eliminating minimum statutory damages for all copyright owners. His supporting arguments were based solely on the music situation.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE CASE OF COPYRIGHTS"

Edward A. Sargoy, who sets forth herewith the case of copyrights and the motion picture, was an honor student at Columbia Law School in New York, and editor of the Columbia Law Review in 1922, 1923 and 1924. He was engaged in private law practice until 1929, and since then he has been associated with Gabriel L. Hess in representing the national distributors and their Copyright Protection Bureau, headed by Jack H. Levin, in the special matter of copyright infringements arising out of "bicycling," or pirated exhibitions in the United States.

Mr. Sargoy personally prepared the briefs and argued the noted cases for the distributors between 1930 and 1933 in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vs. Bijou theatre in Massachusetts, and in Tiffany vs. Dewing in Maryland, which cases established the law that the exclusive right of exhibition is a property right belonging to the copyright obtained for a photoplay film, and that the distributors have the right to proceed under the Copyright Law for the minimum statutory damages of $250 against exhibitors who, in disregard of their booking licenses, holdover, switch, or bicycle films.

The author spent two months in Washington during the past winter attending practically all of the hearings on the proposed copyright legislation, assisting Mr. Hess and the distributors in the preparation and compilation of data submitted by distributors to the Patents Committee of the House.

For some seven years the subject of copyrights and the motion picture has been his special study.

Music Situation Not Typical

Is the musical problem typical? Decidedly not. It is distinctly unique Fundamentally, it is not at all a problem of the copyright law. Composers of music must market collectively. Commercial performing users of music require the immediate availability of a pooled reservoir of copyrighted musical properties into which they can dip at will many times daily for unspecified unlimited performing uses throughout the year. Furthermore, thousands of these commercial users of musical rights, including those commercially receiving and disseminating wired or radio broadcasts (hotels, cafes, etc.), or performing recorded music (theatres, radio stations, etc.) are secondary copyright users dependent upon musical performances for the better conduct of their business enterprises, but with no control whatsoever over the choice of program or knowledge of the copyright source.

This unique special situation does not at all exist for other copyrighted properties (such as motion pictures, plays, books). These are invariably marketed competitively like other forms of private property in the United States. Yet these music problems were given approximately seventeen of the twenty-seven days of public hearings by the House Patents Committee, and considered the bellwether of the general copyright situation. Indeed, after the first four weeks devoted exclusively to the sweet and sour overtones of the music situation, they were convinced that the Committee was thereby sufficiently prepared for a general tuning of the copyright law.
